A MEMBER. What amount of pension does she ask?

Mr. BABCOCK. Twelve dollars a month only.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman state how many times this lady has been married since the death of the soldier?

Mr. BABCOCK. Twice.

Mr. MILNES. And twice divorced.

The question being taken, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House; there being on a division—ayes 50, noes 23.

CELESTE A. BOUGHTON.

The next business was the bill (S. 1291) granting an increase of pension to Celeste A. Boughton, widow of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Horace Boughton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Celeste A. Boughton, widow of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Horace Boughton, late of the United States Army, retired, and to pay her a pension of $100 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five"; so as to make the pension $75 a month.

Mr. CROWTHER. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. POOLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1291) granting an increase of pension to Celeste A. Boughton, widow of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Horace Boughton, having considered the same carefully, believe the bill is meritorious and recommend its passage as substitute for H. R. 1262.

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions embraces all the salient points, and it is respectfully adopted as the views of this committee and appended hereto as a part of this report.

[Senate Report No. 120, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1291) granting a pension to Celeste A. Boughton, widow of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Horace Boughton, have examined the same, and report:

General Boughton was born at Rust, N. Y., March 23, 1833, and was educated at Genesee Wesleyan Seminary and Genesee College. He studied law in Rochester, at which place he entered the Army as first lieutenant of the Thirteenth New York Volunteers in April, 1861. Later he was made captain and was promoted to lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and forty-third New York Volunteers and brevet brigadier-general of the United States Volunteers for gallant and meritorious services during the war. Throughout the entire war he served with ability and distinction, participating in all the battles in which his command was engaged. From 1866 to 1870 he was United States assessor for internal revenue for the Fourth district of Texas, and was a delegate to the national Democratic convention at New York in 1868. In 1870 he was the Democratic nominee for United States Senator from Texas, but was defeated by M. C. Hamilton. After a long and painful illness of twenty years General Boughton died in the city of Washington in November, 1894, at which time he was pensioned at the rate of $100 per month.

In 1890, when an applicant for increase of pension by special act, General Boughton made the following statement to the Pension Committee:

"At the breaking out of the war in 1861 I was engaged in the study of law in Rochester, N. Y. I was young, strong, and in perfect health, with a decidedly promising future.

"On the 17th day of April, within forty-eight hours of the issuing of the first proclamation of the President calling for volunteers, I laid aside all personal matters and commenced raising a company of men to meet the call. I met with such success that I was mustered into the State service with my company, as first lieutenant, on Sunday, April 21. The company was directly ordered to rendezvous at Elmira for regimental organization, and constituted a part of the New York Volunteers, which, after organization was completed, was dispatched for Washington, D. C., and was the first volunteer regiment to reach there, and was among the first volunteer regiments to cross the Potomac River, at Georgetown.

"I commanded the company during the battles of Blackburns Ford, Bull Run, and the operations of 1861, and was promoted to captain in January, 1862; engaged in the Peninsula campaign of 1862, participating in all the numerous battles in which the command was engaged until after the battle of Antietam. In October, 1862, was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel and assigned to the One hundred and forty-third New York Volunteers. I was shortly after promoted to be colonel, and with that regiment served until after the close of the war, when I was mustered out with the rank of brigadier-general by brevet. I was in command of a brigade during a considerable portion of the time of the Chattanooga and Atlanta campaign, and during the war participated in upward of twenty-five battles, never missing one in which the forces with which I was connected were engaged.

"I was continuously in active service from the beginning to the end of the war, and, as the records of the Pension Office will show, acquired the foundation of a disability which has rendered me a permanent and comparatively helpless invalid. I am unable to dress myself or prepare any food, and it is unsafe for me to be without a constant attendant. I am unable to earn a dollar, and the pension I am now receiving is entirely inadequate to the support of myself and family.

"I therefore most respectfully and urgently ask that I may be allowed a pension of $100 per month. My disabilities have greatly increased since the granting of my present pension. I am now suffering from three incurable infirmities, viz, paralysis, epilepsy, and hernia, which render me as nearly a physical wreck as it is possible for a man to be.

"Since the stroke of paralysis, which disabled me, I have been discharged by the court in bankruptcy, and have not since been able to accumulate a dollar.

"HORACE BOUGHTON."

The claimant is now in receipt of a pension of $30 per month, which the present bill proposes to increase to $100. In support of her claim Mrs. Boughton submits the following:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., January 17, 1896.

"SIR: I have before your committee a pension bill asking for an increase of pension. I wish to enlist your attention and consideration to its merits as they are presented. I inclose the statement made by my husband, General Boughton, as to his condition at the time his pension of $100 per month was granted to him. You will see by the doctor's certificate, which I inclose, his helpless condition for sixteen years—he was an invalid for twenty years. All but two years of that time I was his constant nurse. His sufferings were so great he became insane, and was treated at St. Elizabeth's for about one year. I cared for him through those terrible attacks of epilepsy from 1877 to 1891, the time of his death. I cared for him as a mother does for her helpless child.

"The cause of this terrible condition which blighted my life, as well as his, was his service during the war. The pension records will show that the first cause of paralysis was for signal and valuable services rendered while going to the relief of Burnside at Knoxville. If I remember the details, General Burnside's command was being starved out and Lee's forces marching down on them. General Sherman, knowing Colonel Boughton's command, One hundred and forty-third Regiment of New York Volunteers, had good engineers among them, came to him to see if General Boughton could get his forces across by daylight. This was 5 o'clock in the evening, and by daylight the next morning the troops and artillery were across. The current at this point was very strong. The structure would be swept away. The difficulty of doing this only a soldier can know. General Boughton was in the water all night. He had accomplished the work, but at what a cost to his future life and those belonging to him!

"My husband was in good financial condition before the war and after the war, but his shattered health prevented him from looking after his business affairs or ever engaging in business afterwards. From time to time I disposed of my property, sold my diamonds and other personal property, trying every means to restore my husband's health. I have even sold my rings to buy medicine. We mortgaged our home for the necessities that seventeen years of helpless sickness entails. I am now in middle age, my nervous constitution broken, without means of support or anyone to care for me in sickness. The pension I now receive, $30 per month, just pays the interest and taxes on my home. It seems to me that I ought to receive the same consideration that the widows of officers of equal rank and service. If my husband had come out of the service minus an arm or leg or an eye, he would not have been incapacitated from engaging in his profession, the law, and given me the comfort and support that a wife has a right to expect from her husband, and which is the pride and pleasure of the husband to give.

"I do not ask for the pension for political services nor from sentiment, but upon the fact submitted and in recognition of the services of my husband to his country, in rendering which he was deprived of health and the means of support for himself and family, and for the long years of patient service that I bestowed upon him. I see no reason why his life and mine would not have been prosperous had it not been for disease contracted in the service. In contrast with such a prospect, as appears by the statement of his physician, he was rendered a physical wreck until death claimed him, leaving me almost as great a wreck and alone without means of support. His anxiety as to my future was quieted by the assurance of friends in both branches of Congress that his pension would be continued to me. I most earnestly hope that this assurance will be ratified by the action of the present committee.

"Very respectfully,

"CELESTE A. BOUGHTON.

"Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
"United States Senate."

As bearing on the question of Mrs. Boughton's devotion to her husband during his long and painful illness, and the valuable services she rendered him in the capacity of a nurse, attention is directed to the following letters from Judge MacArthur and ex-Congressman Hare, of Texas:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., January 20, 1896.

"SIR: It gives me great pleasure to say that I have been acquainted with Mrs. Gen. Horace Boughton since 1872, and have been familiar with the circumstances of her family, and especially with the protracted and painful illness of her husband. Such was the character of his sickness that for all the years it continued he required constant attendance and nursing, both by day and by night. There were short intervals when he was not so ill, but the symptoms of his disease were constant, and it often appeared as if they would prove fatal. Perhaps the most distressing periods were attacks of epilepsy, during which he became quite unmanageable and required peculiar treatment, which it would have been impossible to anyone to have rendered except Mrs. Boughton, who had been accustomed to them.

"I desire also to say that in 1872 Mrs. Boughton was in the bloom of youth and strength and the enjoyments of social life of Washington. Very soon after that time General Boughton's condition of health became very much impaired by paralysis, which rendered him entirely helpless for years, and, of course, made requisite constant watching and nursing and expenditure of their means, which has left Mrs. Boughton dependent upon her pension of $30 per month. I have never witnessed such self-sacrificing devotion of a wife to her husband for so many years, which taxed every moment with anxiety; and I have often been astounded with her endurance under the severe strain to which she was subjected.

"I respectfully refer with confidence to the honorable record of General Boughton during the war, and trust that the circumstances of the case will induce the committee to report favorably upon the application for increase of pension, and will recommend the amount asked for.

"Very respectfully,

"ARTHUR MACARTHUR.

"Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,

"WASHINGTON, D. C., January 20, 1896.

"SIR: At the request of the widow of Gen. Horace Boughton, I take the liberty of writing what I know about the condition of her husband during the last four years of his life, and the attendance she gave him in his sickness.

"I first became acquainted with General Boughton in 1866; knew him about five years in Texas. I was a member of Congress when his pension was raised to $100, and I believe his is the only case in which I gave active aid to increase any pension. For four years preceding his death I visited him as many as two or three times a week while I was in attendance in Congress. The records will fully disclose his physical and mental condition, but I presume will not state the ceaseless and unremitting care his wife, now his widow, always and under all circumstances gave him.

"I have often wondered how she could endure it. The general was subject to attacks of epilepsy, which I have witnessed, that were simply terrible, and at such times every moment and sound was noted and promptly met. Her attentions were something more than the care of a mother for her child, because a child will instinctively protect itself, when at times the general could not even do this. I have often wondered how she could have the physical and mental endurance to stand this ever-recurring, terrible trouble. Nothing but an extraordinary will power could have sustained her; but I will not dwell on this. I simply say, to my knowledge, during the last four years of the General's life he was cared for and all his wants attended to by his wife, whose devotion has never, in my observation, been excelled, and who, without this, would undoubtedly have attained a high standing in social life.

"I say to this committee that Mrs. Boughton is the peer of any lady in refined social life; that she has doubtless had ambition to excel; that she abandoned all those glittering allurements, so attractive to most women, and faithfully and fearlessly, and at all times, stood by and cared for him more than an invalid husband, and if there is a widow in this land who deserves the highest pension that can in the line of precedent be awarded, Mrs. Boughton is one, and has earned and merits it.

"Her husband was naturally one of the most elegant and accomplished men I ever met. He was of a social nature, and his home was visited by the most intelligent class of our people. That she was deprived of the association and companionship of such a husband by the requirements and demands of his country seems to call for more than ordinary recognition for her.

"Very respectfully,

"SILAS HARE,
"Ex-Member Congress, Texas.

"Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
"United States Senate."

As showing the amount of property owned by claimant, her affidavit is here inserted, and also an affidavit from M. A. Ballinger, a real-estate broker of this city:

"On this day personally came before me, the undersigned authority, Celeste A. Boughton, and, being first duly sworn according to law, upon her oath deposes and says:

"'That she is the widow of Gen. Horace Boughton; that between the years 1873 and 1875 her husband lost all his property; that she owned some real estate in her own right, which she sold; she also owned some valuable personal property, which she also sold, and the proceeds of these sales were used as the means of support for herself and her husband until her husband was awarded a pension and arrearages of pension amounting to $3,000. With this arrearages money her husband bought a small home on Second street, this city, where they lived ten years, their means of support being her husband's pension.

"'About 1890 they sold this home on Second street at a small advance on the cost and invested the proceeds in the property on Nineteenth street, in which she now resides, at the purchase price of $7,600, paying in cash on such purchase the sum of $3,600, and assuming the payment of a mortage of $4,000 on the property. This mortgage has not been paid. The interest on this mortgage and taxes amount to $308 per annum; my pension, $360 per annum, leaving a balance to me annually of $52. With this $52 and the uncertain income of renting a few rooms furnish my sole and only support, so that my net income for support will hardly exceed $100 per annum.

"JANUARY 20, 1896.

"I, M. A. Ballinger, a real-estate broker, on my oath say that I sold the property numbered 619 Nineteenth street NW., Washington City, on or about September, A. D. 1890, to Celeste A. Boughton, at and for the price of $7,600, subject to a mortgage of $4,000, which is still unpaid.

"I do not believe that property in this neighborhood is worth one dollar more than it was in September, 1890.

"M. A. BALLINGER.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this January 20, 1896.
"[SEAL.] ROBT. V. HUGHES, Notary Public."

The above facts conclusively show that General Boughton had an exceptionally honorable military record; that he suffered extremely in consequence of his military service for nearly a quarter of a century; that his wife nursed him tenderly during all that time, and even disposed of her personal property to procure for him the comforts and medical treatment that he so much needed. It is also shown that she is now in straitened financial circumstances.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, after being amended by striking out, in line 8, the words "one hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "seventy-five."

Mr. PICKLER (interrupting the reading of the report). Mr. Chairman, I think that enough of this report has been read. The residue consists simply of letters.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] asks that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. KEM. I object.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], in making a speech to his constituents, mixed with it a little campaign medicine by trying to make it appear that there had been no discriminating legislation in favor of officers and the widows of officers as against private soldiers and the widows of privates. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to the bill now under consideration and to compare it with the bill which we passed a moment ago. While the bill just passed gave to the widow of a private soldier a pension of $12 a month, this bill proposes to give to the widow of an officer $75 a month. If that is not discriminating legislation, I should like the gentleman from South Dakota to explain why it is not. And if this coincides with the statement he made a while ago on the floor of this House, I should like to hear him explain how it does.

Mr. PICKLER. I hope the gentleman will tell his constituents that by his frivolous objections this evening he has prevented a good many soldiers from getting pensions. I will say that I did not vote in committee for this pension of $75 a month.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Chairman, I was not through.

Mr. PICKLER. I have the floor, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM] to yield the floor.

Mr. KEM. I had not yielded the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman again.

Mr. HARDY. Well, I object, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. I rise to a point of order—that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM] has spoken to this bill once, and is not entitled to speak again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, it seems, was under a misapprehension, supposing that the gentleman from Nebraska had yielded the floor.

Mr. PICKLER. He did.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska states that he did not, and therefore the Chair recognizes him to continue his remarks.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Dakota, in reply to my request for him to explain the discrepancies existing here, started out with a campaign speech, and he proposes to palm that off on the people of this country as an answer to my request for him to explain the discrepancies that stand out so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, can not fail to recognize them. The gentleman from South Dakota may go into the RECORD here from time to time with his campaign speeches and with his oratory in favor of "the old soldier," and he may succeed in fooling his constituents, but he could not fool mine, nor the intelligent constituents of any gentleman on this floor, either of others' or himself even by any such claptrap sort of argument as that. It is an argument, Mr. Chairman, not worthy of a member on this floor.

This kind of legislation has been going on here all through the session of Congress, and every gentleman here, whether he acknowledges it or not, knows it to be true that the pension legislation of this session of Congress has been entirely discriminating in favor of the officers, and the pensions to officers and widows of officers, as against pensions to privates and their widows. The RECORD is full of such discriminations.

I challenge the statement of the gentleman also as to the fact that you have pensioned a greater number of privates and their widows in proportion than you have granted pensions to officers and the widows of officers. I venture to say that it is not true in any sense of the word. I venture to assert, and the RECORD will disclose the fact, that the statement is not worthy of consideration, and it does not bear any semblance of truth. We have not been pensioning in any like proportion the widows of privates and the privates themselves, as compared to the widows of officers and of officers who have received consideration at the hands of this committee.

I protest, therefore, against the gentleman from South Dakota going into the RECORD with such misleading statements, for the purpose, and the sole purpose, in my opinion, of deceiving the people of this country as to the attitude of the Republican party in reference to pension matters.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KEM. I make the point of order that the gentleman has already spoken on this question. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. I did not have a chance to do so.

Mr. KEM. Will the Chair rule on the point of order?

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I believe that I have the floor.

Mr. KEM. I make the point of order that the gentleman has already made a speech on this bill and can not be heard under the rule.

Mr. PICKLER. I could not have had the floor, for the gentleman himself said I did not have it, and claimed it——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska claimed that he had the floor, and the gentleman from South Dakota had no opportunity to be heard.

Mr. KEM. Well, he was heard anyhow. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Nebraska that when he says I am trying to deceive the people upon the subject of granting pensions he is not talking in ignorance, but he knows that the statement is a false one.

I want to say that he is the very man who prates about being the friend of the people, of the laboring man, on this floor, who claims to represent "the people"; and yet on yesterday he objected to the discussion of the labor bill, recommended and petitioned for by all of the labor organizations of this country. [Applause.] Yes, you are the man who objected to the consideration of a bill that the laboring people all over this country want, and by your sole objection that bill was refused the consideration to which it was justly entitled. You refused them a standing here that is given to anything that is for the benefit of monopoly and that will aid monopolistic tendencies in this country. You have never been found standing in opposition to monopoly; but yesterday, when the laboring element of this country appealed to this House for justice, you were on your feet, ready to object.

Now, again, to-night I want to say to the gentleman from Nebraska that I have ever, as I have to-night, opposed the granting of large pensions to the officers of the Army or to the widows of officers, excepting where there are extraordinary and unusual exceptions. I think the House will bear me witness to that fact. I have done as much as any man on this floor to prevent the granting of large pensions where it was possible that justice could be done in any other way.

But here is a case where a woman's husband, a most distinguished officer, as the report shows, was receiving a hundred dollars a month pension during his own lifetime, and although I opposed granting the amount of the pension fixed in the bill in the committee—I may be permitted to say that much—yet if there is any case that has merit in it, that goes beyond the general law, this seems to be one. She is shown to be in poverty, has no property, and while I voted against the bill in committee, as I have said, and I refer to this because the gentleman has attacked me personally, for this is a larger pension than is granted in many other bills heretofore passed by the House, but I am not attacking the judgment of the committee which reported in favor of $75; it is still less than this soldier received during his lifetime. And I assert again, the assertion of the gentleman from Nebraska to the contrary notwithstanding, that we have passed no more percentage of bills for general officers and the widows of general officers in this Congress than in any other Congress as compared with the pensions to privates, but at the same time let me say we have reported a much larger percentage of pensions for privates and the widows of privates than has ever before been presented from any committee to this House.

Now, you can pass on this bill as you like. I did not vote for the bill in committee, and would not vote for any bill in committee granting so large a pension unless it was a very exceptional case. I do not believe that you should give the widow of any general officer more than she would receive under the general law; but, as I have said, there have been exceptional cases, where the widow was destitute and in want, where the soldier had a most distinguished military record, and where the question was one of giving her an opportunity of living by an advance of ten or twenty dollars a month rather than going to the poorhouse. And I am not going, by the demagogy of the gentleman from Nebraska or any other man in this country who cries out against the Republican party, to be driven into a position which is unworthy of any man who occupies a seat on this floor. I will not be driven into doing an act of injustice to the widow of a general officer any more than I would to the widow of a private soldier. [Applause.]

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, it appears by the record that the highest rank this officer attained was that of colonel.

Mr. MILNES. Lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. PAYNE. No; colonel.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. He had the full rank of colonel as it appears by the report. In accordance with the action of the House in like cases, therefore, I move to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty"; so as to read "$50 a month."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, before that I wish to read a half dozen lines from the report. I do not wish to detain the committee and will not add another word:

The above facts conclusively show that General Boughton had an exceptionally honorable military record; that he suffered extremely in consequence of his military service for nearly a quarter of a century—that his wife nursed him tenderly during all that time, and even disposed of her personal property to procure for him the comforts and medical treatment that he so much needed. It is also shown that she is now in straitened financial circumstances.

The record shows that he laid out all night in the water during his military service, which was the cause of his trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. CROWTHER. I desire to call the attention of the distinguished gentleman from New York to the fact that thousands upon thousands of private soldiers of this nation who are even now unable to obtain pensions of eight or twelve dollars per month under the law also lay in the morasses of the South, in the swamps, in the water, and that this gentleman, General Boughton, a brevet brigadier-general who obtained only the actual rank of a lieutenant-colonel, was receiving $100 a month pension.

Mr. PAYNE. It appears in the report that he was a colonel.

Mr. CROWTHER. Very well. It is now proposed to pension his widow at $75 per month. The committee, after considering the question, voted $75 a month, and now we propose to reduce it to that amount of money which we consider and believe right and just in such cases. Fifty dollars a month is sufficient. It is but just to the other soldiers of this nation. This is one of those discriminating bills that enable the statesman from Nebraska to talk to his constituents and the patriot from Pennsylvania to talk to his, and it is time that this committee should come down to a line that will meet with the approbation not only of the old soldiers of this nation, but of the people of the nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, I submit that this report does not show that this soldier attained a higher actual rank than that of lieutenant-colonel. It is true that he was afterwards brevetted as a brigadier-general. Now, there were hundreds, and I do not know but what there were thousands, of men who were brevetted after the close of the war, until to-day we find that they are almost all colonels or brigadier-generals. I believe that I am the only private who is left.

Mr. HICKS. Oh, no; there are several of us here.

Mr. MILNES. It is claimed that this man rendered particularly meritorious services for the Union. I have not the slightest doubt that he did. It is claimed that he lay out in the water all one night. Why, my dear friend from New York, there were thousands of private soldiers, yea, hundreds of thousands of private soldiers, who did that.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; and every one of them who was totally disabled, as this man was for sixteen years—every one of them who requires the constant attention of a nurse, as this man did, receives $72 a month pension.

Mr. MILNES. No, they do not. We pensioned one to-night for only $30 a month who was totally blind.

Mr. PAYNE. They receive $72 a month under the law.

Mr. MILNES. You pensioned one to-night for only $30 who was totally blind, and who needed the constant attendance of another person. This is not the case of the soldier himself. This is his widow. Brave and gallant as he may have been, I say $50 a month is all we ought to pay to this widow, and the country will not support you in paying these extravagant pensions. Let us scatter them around a little more. Let us give them to the men who fought the battles. The lieutenant-colonels and the major-generals were not the men who suffered the hardships during the war. They received large pay. They carried no knapsacks; they carried no muskets. They did not stand out on the picket line. They rode horses and had servants to attend to them, and had soft snaps during the war. And I want to say further that in the great charge at Gettysburg it was the private soldier who fell nearest to the rifle pits of the enemy. In the charge upon Vicksburg it was the private soldier who fell in the trenches in nine cases out of ten.

Now, I am willing to make distinctions, and I do make distinctions, between the man of high rank and the private soldier, but I say that no such distinction as this should prevail. I say that $50 a month is enough. Let us give the rest to some other gallant, brave soldier who deserves it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MILNES] yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]?

Mr. MILNES. Yes, I do.

Mr. HOPKINS. A little while ago the pension claim of the widow of Colonel Adams, of Kentucky, was before this committee, and I made and supported a motion to give that widow $50 a month. Colonel Adams was a full colonel and commanded a brigade during a large portion of the war. The gentleman who now has the floor [Mr. MILNES] insisted that his widow should receive but $30 a month. I want to ask him and I want to ask the members of this committee how they can reconcile the two cases, where they propose to allow $75 per month to the widow of a lieutenant-colonel and only $30 a month to the widow of a full colonel who commanded a brigade?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Colonel Boughton was a full colonel.

Mr. MILNES. The record shows that this man was brevetted a brigadier-general. It does not show that he ever served in that capacity. I think $30 a month is enough in either case, but I am willing under the circumstances of this case to vote for $50.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to read two lines from the report?

Mr. MILNES. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I read from the second page of the report:

> In October, 1862, was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel and assigned to the One hundred and forty-third New York Volunteers. I was shortly after promoted to be colonel, and with that regiment served until after the close of the war, when I was mustered out with the rank of brigadier-general by brevet. I was in command of a brigade during a considerable portion of the time of the Chattanooga and Atlanta campaign, and during the war participated in upward of twenty-five battles, never missing one in which the forces with which I was connected was engaged.

Mr. MILNES. I simply say in reply to that that this officer does not say himself that he was mustered as a colonel. He was promoted and brevetted a brigadier-general.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Chairman, I have had in my possession the official records, showing that this man was mustered in as a colonel, and that he did serve as a commander of a brigade.

Mr. MILNES. The report does not show it.

Mr. POOLE. The report that is there is a part of the Senate report, and we made it our report.

Mr. TRACEY. I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty." [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, upon what theory does any member of this committee propose to vote $75 to this widow after having voted $30 to Colonel Adams's widow?

Mr. PAYNE. May I answer you?

Mr. BLUE. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. The committee was compelled to vote $30 to Colonel Adams's widow because of a threat made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MILNES] that unless the friends of the bill consented to that he would make a point of order against changing the bill so as to apply to the widow.

Mr. SULLOWAY. And in that case there is no evidence that he died of disease contracted in service at all.

Mr. PAYNE. I know.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, on what theory is this to be made an exception to the general law? The fact that the husband slept out or was out one or two nights in inclement weather is not sufficient. The fact that he was brevetted a brigadier-general makes no difference, because he would take rank only when he served by orders in the rank of brigadier-general. That has nothing to do with the pension that should go to him or to his widow. In reply to the gentleman from New York, I will say the common soldier who is in a helpless condition receives $72 a month. If I understand the facts in this case correctly, this comrade during his lifetime received $100 a month. There is no principle of equity, there is no basis upon which this law can be enacted, by which you will give this widow $75 per month while you give the widow of another colonel only $30 per month. There ought to be some equity in this; there ought to be some fixed limit adopted here. Let us be equitable and fair about it, and strive to have some rule of action by which we shall be governed.

Mr. PICKLER. It is very hard to put all the facts in the report that come before the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The report shows that this lady broke down her health in waiting upon her husband.

Mr. HICKS. And spent her fortune in caring for him.

Mr. PICKLER. I think $50 is sufficient in this case.

Mr. BLUE. Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as that is concerned, the fact that this widow spent her fortune upon her husband is no good reason why she should be granted a large pension. How are you to establish a rule governing pension legislation as to how many dollars of the widow's money shall be devoted to the care of the husband? If you do such a thing you will have to go into an examination to ascertain how much money has been spent in that way in each case.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Does not the gentleman think the granting of a pension of $30 a month to Colonel Adams's widow was too low, rather than that this is too high at $50?

Mr. BLUE. No, sir. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, here and now, that when the widow of an officer is pensioned above the general law it ought to be in some extreme case.

Mr. PICKLER. That is right. I believe in that.

Mr. BLUE. And I think that to go on shouting "Vote!" "Vote!" "Vote!" when a matter of such consequence and absolute importance as this is being considered is unworthy of this committee and this House of Representatives. This matter should be dealt with fairly and justly. We have had too much of this business of giving widows of general officers large pensions. Let us establish a rule that the people will approve. There are hundreds, aye, thousands, of women in the State of Kansas just as good as this widow, just as good as the widow of Colonel Adams, just as deserving as either of them, who are glad to get $12 a month.

Mr. POOLE. Did not the gentleman a few weeks ago advocate and vote for a bill granting $75 a month to the widow of General Blunt of Kansas?

Mr. BLUE. Oh, yes; I voted to give $75 a month to the widow of a man who was the hero of a hundred battles and who rose from the ranks to be major-general; but here you are seeking to give this pension to the widow of a lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. PICKLER. The record of this officer is as distinguished as the one the gentleman from Kansas talks about.

Mr. BLUE. The gentleman is mistaken. The record of no man who served in the volunteers west of the Mississippi is superior to that of General Blunt.

A MEMBER. He was a Kansas man.

Mr. BLUE. Yes; he was a Kansas man; and you made the pension exceptional in that case because it was an exceptionally meritorious case, and I did advocate and vote for it. But, Mr. Chairman, at the same time I sought to cut down the pension of the widow of Brigadier-General Gresham from $100 to $75 a month. General Blunt rose to the rank of major-general, and you gave his widow $75 per month, while the widow of General Gresham, who rose only to the rank of brigadier-general, was given $100 a month. What equity was there in that?

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I trust that gentlemen on the other side will not waste time in talking. Let us proceed with this pension business. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLUE (continuing). It was said of the old man, General Blunt, that he never lost a battle, and he never permitted the enemy to hunt him; he found them.

Mr. KEM. Does the gentleman from Kansas believe that a soldier ought to be pensioned because of rank alone?

Mr. BLUE. No, sir.

Mr. KEM. I so understood the gentleman from what he said a moment ago.

Mr. BLUE. No, sir. Rank should count as a factor in determining the question, but the fact that a man held the rank of brigadier-general, if he performed no service, ought not to induce us to give him a pension rated according to that grade. That is why I spoke of the brilliant services of General Blunt.

Mr. HARDY—

> The rank is but the guinea's stamp,
> The man's the gowd for a' that.

Mr. BLUE. I am always enamored of the voice of my friend from Indiana, Mr. Chairman, but I trust he will be parliamentary. I have nothing more to say as to this case. Thirty dollars a month is a fair pension, I think, to give to this widow, and I am willing she should have that amount.

A MEMBER. She is drawing that now under the law.

Mr. BLUE. Well, she ought to be content with that.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to call attention to this fact, which must surely be plain to every member. Unless we place ourselves upon the provisions of general law as to the rating of these pensions, it becomes an endless scramble for the largest amount possible in each individual case as it comes before us, and the time of the House and of this Committee of the Whole will be consumed uselessly unless we come to the plain, businesslike proposition of holding to the general rules laid down under existing law in the rating of these pensions as we pass upon them from time to time.

If a resolution should be adopted by this committee which will bring us to that course of action we can economize time and labor and reach deserving cases that we shall not be able to reach if we continue our present course during the remaining days of this session and of this Congress. If the laws to-day are not adequate with respect to the pensioning of officers of rank and their widows, I submit that the plain, businesslike course to pursue would be to introduce a bill which would give just and fair consideration to those claims, pass that bill into law, and stand upon it. [Applause.]

We should come to that line of action at once. Then the Committee on Invalid Pensions will have a definite rule to stand upon. It has been demonstrated here time after time that when that committee does observe the law as to rating and presents a case with clear evidence to support it, the House, or this Committee of the Whole, frequently reverses that recommendation. Hence the committee has no means of knowing what rule this House would have it follow in submitting bills for consideration here.

Some such rule of action must be adopted before we can even hope to avoid this fruitless waste of time.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, much has been said about the inconsistency of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, but I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to what I consider their inconsistency upon many occasions, and I desire especially to call attention to the inconsistency of the gentleman from Kansas. This Committee of the Whole had under consideration three or four weeks ago a bill to pension the widow of a man who in early life graduated at Annapolis and at the breaking out of the war occupied the position of a cadet. He asked leave of absence from the Navy Department that he might recruit soldiers for the war. He recruited a regiment, and, accepting the position of colonel, rose to the position of major-general, which he earned by gallant and meritorious services during the war. Resigning that position at the close of the war, he went back to the humble rank of a cadet, and rose in the Navy step by step until he reached the position of rear-admiral. This Committee of the Whole denied to that man's widow any greater pension than $50 a month.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] speaks of the gallant services of a soldier from his State. I find that it is the interest of each member of this House to speak in high terms of any soldier coming from his State, regardless of the services of those who come from distant States. [Applause.] I want to say to you, gentlemen, that the consistency of this Committee of the Whole ought to be maintained; and in view of the fact that the widow of Rear-Admiral Samuel F. Carter (and I did not know him except from his record) was granted only $50 a month, no officer of the Army or Navy and no widow of any such officer should be regarded as worthy of a higher rate of pension. [Applause.]

Mr. BLUE. I should like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] one question.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Certainly.

Mr. BLUE. Did I not vote to cut down the pension of General Ewing's widow from $75 to $50; and was not he a Kansas man?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I believe you did. But I wish to say to the gentleman from Kansas that he was not so earnest in asking for the pension of the widow of Samuel F. Carter as he should have been if he had been consistent.

Mr. BLUE. You are mistaken about that.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Chairman, as I voted for this bill in the committee, I wish to say a word in behalf of the pension for this widow. The fact is, General Boughton's services were simply heroic. He rose from the rank of first lieutenant to that of colonel, and afterwards commanded a brigade. While performing services of great value to the Government he contracted a disease from which he afterwards suffered paralysis, resulting in insanity, so that the last twenty years of his life were a blank. During that period of helplessness this poor woman took care of him, and in doing so sacrificed everything she had in the world. As the result of her self-sacrificing care of her gallant husband she is now broken in health, and it is no more than fair she should receive this pension of $75 a month, which I hope will be granted.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Is she not possessed to-day of real estate in this city?

Mr. POOLE. She is the owner of a piece of property in this city; and I will tell you how she got it. There was a small insurance on the life of her husband, with the proceeds of which she bought this place. There is now a mortgage upon the property for all it will bring. I have the assurance of good real estate men of this city that the property in not worth a dollar more than the incumbrance upon it.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment fixing the pension at $30 a month) there were—ayes 61, noes 33.

Mr. HICKS. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman. Certainly a measure of such merit as this is not going to be defeated.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. HICKS. I very much regret the action of the committee on this meritorious measure, and if insisted upon I must, as an act of justice, demand the presence of a quorum.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 61, the noes 33. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania raise the point of no quorum? [Applause.] The ayes have it; and the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment as amended, there were on a division (called for by Mr. HICKS)—ayes 70, noes 36.

Mr. HICKS. I must insist upon my point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN (having counted the committee). There are 130 members present. The amendment as amended is agreed to. The question is now, Shall the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported favorably?

Mr. POOLE. I move to amend by inserting "$50" in place of "$30."

Mr. PICKLER. It is too late to make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the motion is not in order. The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably.

ELIZA G. PYNE.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill—— [Cries of "Regular order!"] Gentlemen, I have been here for the last seven years, attending all your sessions——

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next bill.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3990) granting a pension to Mrs. Eliza G. Pyne.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Eliza G. Pyne, widow of Charles M. Pyne, who was captain of unassigned company of the Forty-second Regiment United States Infantry, at the rate of $20 per month.

The report (by Mr. MCCLELLAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3990) granting a pension to Eliza G. Pyne, widow of Charles M. Pyne, late captain (unassigned) of Forty-second United States Infantry, having carefully examined and considered the facts and circumstances presented, respectfully report as follows:

Capt. Charles M. Pyne enlisted April 15, 1861, and served as corporal, Company A, Third District of Columbia Infantry, in General Stone's brigade, to July 15, 1861; appointed second lieutenant Sixth United States Infantry August 5, 1861; made brevet first lieutenant August 30, 1862, for "gallant and meritorious services in the second battle of Bull Run," being there wounded in left leg. He was taken prisoner and exchanged in October, 1862; appointed first lieutenant August 8, 1863; appointed captain to rank from July 28, 1866; was retired from active service December 15, 1870, for "disability resulting from wounds received in line of duty."

He participated in the battles near Edwards Ferry, siege of Yorktown, skirmish at Chickahominy River, battles of Mechanicsville, James Mill, White Oak Swamp, Malvern Hill, Harrisons Landing, Sadly Chapel, and second battle of Bull Run.

He died in service February 4, 1892, from heart disease, brought on by exposure, resulting in severe attacks of inflammatory rheumatism, and the heart being much weakened by anesthetics administered for five amputations of his left leg, the bone being so shattered by the wound as to render the five amputations necessary.

Widow filed application for pension under general law March 28, 1892, and under acts of June 27, 1890, and March 26, 1892, both of which were rejected, the medical referee holding (September 12, 1894) that—

"The evidence filed does not satisfactorily show the real cause of soldier's fatal malady; that a full and complete medical history of his condition from rheumatism during last ten or twelve years of his life and also disease of heart since its manifest development should be furnished. The condition of amputated stump during last illness and previously, prominent symptoms present during said illness, and mode of death should be fully shown."

Dr. G. B. Bailey, Elizabeth, N. J., filed affidavit April 29, 1893, that he treated soldier past twelve years for rheumatism, and during the month preceding his death for valvular disease of heart. During these twelve years he was unable to perform any manual labor, and died February 4, 1892, from valvular disease of heart.

Dr. I. Heger, colonel, United States Army, retired, filed affidavit April 29, 1893, that while on duty in Washington, D. C., as attending surgeon, soldier frequently reported to him for treatment for rheumatism and valvular disease of heart. This was during latter part of 1889 to time he left the city.

Dr. D. R. Hagner filed affidavit February 17, 1892, that he had known soldier forty years. Sound man prior to enlistment. Shortly after receiving his wound was called to attend him with Drs. Barnes and Coolidge. Everything done to save limb, but as ball had produced compound comminuted fracture (of both tibia and fibula, I believe) amputation became necessary. Since that time have never attended him. Within few years before his death was compelled to reject him for life insurance on account of heart trouble and Bright's disease of kidneys, which diseases were due, no doubt, to his army service and wound received and various operations performed.

November 7, 1894, Dr. Bailey filed supplemental affidavit. During last twelve years soldier suffered frequently from rheumatism and valvular disease of heart. During last few months of life heart disease became gradually worse, general dropsy taking place, and was unable to lie down. During last few weeks of life the stump of his left leg, which had been amputated below the knee, became swollen and inflamed.

Widow's claim under act June 27, 1890, rejected December 6, 1894, on ground of nondependence, she having an income of $400 or $500 a year. Widow was married to Captain Pyne November 12, 1873.

In view of the testimony presented, your committee believe that soldier's death was due to service origin, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a single request. I want to ask consideration of a bill that will take but a minute to dispose of. I refer to Senate bill No. 2045, granting a pension to Harriet R. Matlack. I have never asked the indulgence of this committee before.

This is a poor widow, very old, and I ask consent to take up the bill and have it considered now.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman in the form of a motion.

The question was submitted, and the motion was rejected.

AUGUSTA TULLER.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken five minutes of the time of the committee since we first met here in December. I rise now to ask unanimous consent, if it be necessary, to consider a bill——

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I ask that the regular order be proceeded with.

Mr. HILL (continuing). This is a bill for the relief of Augusta Tuller, a woman who is over 90 years old, partly blind, without any property of any kind——

Mr. PICKLER. Let us pass the bill.

Mr. HILL (continuing). She is wholly dependent upon her stepdaughter for support. Can I have two minutes to pass the bill?

Mr. PICKLER. Let us pass it.

Mr. HICKS. I move that the bill be taken up for present consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States, subject to the provisions of the pension laws the name of Augusta Tuller, the daughter of Isaac Way, a Revolutionary soldier, said woman being now 90 years of age and dependent.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend the adoption of the following amendment: In line 5 strike out the words "subject to the provision of the pension laws" and substitute therefor the words "at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment recommended by the Committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARGARET J. YOUNG.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask consent to make a brief statement not exceeding two minutes. That is all I ask.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HULICK. Let us proceed with the Calendar.

Mr. CANNON. If it be necessary, I will make a motion, Mr. Chairman, which I think the House will not object to when they hear what it is. I move to take up for present consideration the bill H. R. 9130, Calendar number 1209. It is far down, as you will see, on the Calendar. This is a very deserving case.

I want to say a word in reference to it, and I am sure there can be no objection to taking it up. In 1844 Margaret Young, the beneficiary of the bill, took an 8-year-old orphan, an illegitimate child, from the poorhouse—a child that was being mistreated and abused there—and raised the boy to manhood. In 1861 this boy volunteered in the Union Army, and lost his life in the war. He was a good soldier in the Army; he served as a private. The woman is now nearly 80 years old, without any means of support, receiving aid from the public, and I ask the House, in just a minute, to pass this bill giving her a little pension of $12 a month, to keep her out of the poorhouse as she kept this foster child from going there, a boy that lost his life in the service of his country. [Applause.]

The question being submitted, on the motion of Mr. CANNON, it was agreed to.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Margaret J. Young, dependent foster mother of John H. Jones, late a private in Company F, Twenty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ETHAN A. SELLMAN.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that I have ever taken two minutes' time of this committee, and therefore I feel warranted in moving to take up House bill numbered 4490, a bill to restore the name of Ethan A. Sellman to the pension rolls. It is 1023 on the Calendar. I think when the committee, if they will permit me to do so, are informed as to the character of this bill there will be no possible objection to it. This man is more than 70 years old, almost blind, and his name was stricken from the rolls eighteen years ago on an affidavit made by an enemy. The evidence is forty-nine to one in his favor.

The bill is reported favorably from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I can assure members that no more meritorious bill has ever been before the House at any session of Congress in favor of any man. I ask the consideration of that bill. I move that it be taken up for present consideration.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 49, noes 14.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. No quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the committee now rise.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, no quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw the motion if the point of order is withdrawn. I think gentlemen begin to see now that perhaps I have had some justification for my contention with the Committee on Rules so that I could get time to pass some of these bills.

Mr. FENTON. Have you seen a more meritorious bill than this?

Mr. PICKLER (continuing). I have been complained about——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. PICKLER. I am not out of order, with all due deference to the Chair. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum has been made.

Mr. FENTON. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that there is no more worthy bill than this on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is made. The committee will be in order. [After counting the House.] One hundred and seven gentlemen—a quorum—present. Upon this question the ayes are 49 and the nays are 14. The ayes have it, and the bill is ordered to be taken up.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension roll the name of Ethan A. Sellman, late of Company E, Fiftieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $7 per month from September 4, 1878, until the passage of this act, and at the rate of $12 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Ethan A. Sellman, late a private in Company E, Fiftieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month, without any deduction or retention on account of pension heretofore paid to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GRAY'S BATTALION OF ARKANSAS VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the committee do now rise; and pending that, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. NEILL] to make a request.

Mr. NEILL. I move to take up the bill (H. R. 1061) granting a pension to Gray's Battalion of Arkansas Volunteers.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will read the bill sent up by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. NEILL].

Mr. PICKLER. Is not this a general pension bill? It is a bill to pension a battalion.

Mr. NEILL. It is a private bill, just the same as the bill to pension the Missouri battalion, which has been considered here.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not think we have jurisdiction of this bill at this session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not determine until the bill is read.

Mr. McRAE. The House has already decided to consider the bill, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the names of all of the honorably discharged surviving officers and enlisted men of Gray's battalion of Arkansas Volunteers raised under the act of Congress of May 13, 1846, for service during the war with Mexico; and the names of surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men, subject to the limitations and regulations of the pension laws of the United States for pensioning the survivors of the war with Mexico.

Mr. PAYNE. I raise the point of order that that bill can not be considered to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The bill can not be considered at this session.

Mr. McRAE. The point of order is too late. The House has already determined to consider the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. The House has not the power under the rules to consider it.

Mr. McRAE. It is in order. It is a private bill, and not a public bill.

Mr. PAYNE. You can not get the bill considered in this way.

Mr. NEILL. It is a private bill.

Mr. PAYNE. It is not a private bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has held that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. McRAE. I call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it, and the committee determines to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. PAYNE having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bills S. 1511, H. R. 4494, H. R. 1646, H. R. 4281, H. R. 4881, H. R. 4841, H. R. 4519, H. R. 4267, S. 1291, S. 3398, H. R. 4490, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended the bills do pass; also that the committee had had under consideration the bills S. 997, H. R. 6417, H. R. 6792, H. R. 3990, H. R. 9139, and had directed him to report the same to the House without amendments and with the recommendation that the same do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent that on all these bills the previous question be considered as ordered to their passage, with ten minutes' debate in the House on either side.

Mr. McRAE. I object, and I make the point that the hour of 10 o'clock and 30 minutes has arrived.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10 o'clock and 30 minutes having arrived, the House, under the rule, stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WANGER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8356) to establish a life-saving station at or near Great Boars Head, on the coast of New Hampshire, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1952); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. Mr. HALE. I do not know what will be the cost of the publication. The rules are very clear as to a certain limit. Such a matter should go to the Committee on Printing. If the cost is below the limit, I do not object to the adoption of the resolution; otherwise let it be referred.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that there is no provision made in the resolution for printing. It is to be a compilation, which of course will be of no use unless it is printed; and, exactly like the proposition yesterday to have Mr. Durfee make a certain compilation, it should be referred to the Committee on Printing before it is finally acted upon, because printing will necessarily follow the compilation.

Mr. HALE. It is to be supposed that the cost of printing such a document will be much more than $500.

Mr. CHANDLER. Much more. I therefore move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single word. My individual judgment is that it will cost a much larger amount than $500. The cost ought not to be taken from the contingent fund in any event, it occurs to me. I quite agree that the resolution should go to the Committee on Printing.

In this connection I submit a paper somewhat explanatory of the scope of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution and accompanying paper will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the morning business is through, I move to proceed to the consideration of what is considered a privileged bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the morning business is through——

Mr. MILLS. The morning business is not through. I wish to introduce a bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not been concluded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that I may be allowed one moment. Heretofore bills reported from the Committee on Finance in relation to taxes have been privileged bills. I have been every day for a week trying to get up a bill that has been reported from the Committee on Finance, the bill in respect to filled cheese. It is a bill in which the people of the United States, especially farmers, are deeply interested. I hope the Senate will allow that bill to be taken up. I believe it can be disposed of in a short time.

Mr. KYLE. I trust that the bill will be taken up. The people of the Northwest are petitioning very strongly in favor of the filled-cheese bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The people of the East, too.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have had telegrams without number from all parts of the United States urging its passage. I do not want to interfere with the morning business, but I ask the Senate to allow the bill to be taken up. As a matter of course, it does not displace any business at 2 o'clock, but let it be taken up now, and we may be able to carry it through before 2 o'clock.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President——

Mr. MILLS. I wish to introduce a bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I gave notice heretofore that yesterday I would move to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing for the election of United State Senators by direct vote, but on the statement of the Senator from Ohio that he had previously given notice for yesterday, I gave way and changed my notice to this morning.

Mr. SHERMAN. I tried to get up the filled-cheese bill yesterday, and could not do it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am in favor of the Senator's bill, but I can not afford to be crowded out every day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have been crowded out. The moot court question was brought up yesterday and took the entire day.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am not responsible for that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not been concluded. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is next in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MILLS introduced a bill (S. 3206) to grant a right of way through the new Fort Bliss Military Reservation to the El Paso and Northeastern Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORRILL (for Mr. PROCTOR) introduced a bill (S. 3207) donating condemned cannon and cannon balls to Stow Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Calais, Vt.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 3208) for the relief of Rev. J. A. Gilfillan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BAKER introduced a bill (S. 3209) to grant right of way over the public domain for pipe lines in the State of Kansas and the Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 3210) granting a pension to Anna P. Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 3211) to provide for the revision and adjustment of the sales of the Otoe and Missouria Reservation lands in the States of Kansas and Nebraska, and to confirm the titles under said sales; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask the Committee on Indian Affairs to give the bill prompt and favorable consideration. It is concerning a matter of considerable importance, and it is very necessary that a prompt revision and adjustment of the sales of the Otoe and Missouria Reservation lands, in the States of Kansas and Nebraska, should be made, in order that titles to those lands may be confirmed. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GEAR introduced a bill (S. 3212) granting a pension to Moreau J. Burt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3213) to reform the currency of the United States and insure its integrity; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3214) to authorize Joseph J. Kinyoun, passed assistant surgeon of the Marine-Hospital Service, to accept a medal from the President of the Republic of Venezuela; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have here some translations of letters transmitting the medal, which I move be printed as a document and referred, with the bill, to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3215) to increase the pension to William C. Gano; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WARREN introduced a bill (S. 3216) donating condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls to the Wyoming State Soldiers' Home, at Cheyenne, Wyo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3217) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary E. Morrison; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BAKER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 150) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to A. Beecher and others certain internal-revenue taxes illegally collected; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

HENRY A. DU PONT AND OTHERS.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the morning business is over——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have morning business myself to present. I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be allowed out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Henry A. Du Pont the sum of $3,500 in full compensation for all his time and expenses, including printing and counsel fees, in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate of the United States as a Senator from the State of Delaware.

Resolved further, That the further sum of $2,500 be allowed to James L. Wolcott, John Bassett Moore, and William F. Kurtz, counsel in opposition to the claim of Henry A. Du Pont, the same to embrace all their disbursements and expenses in the prosecution of their case.

Mr. PEFFER. What is the first payment proposed?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is $2,500 in each case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair suggests that the resolution should be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes; I presume that reference is necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so referred.

TRIAL OF CITIZENS ARRESTED IN CUBA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. MORGAN, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 16th instant, a report of the Secretary of State, to which are attached copies in English and Spanish of the original text of a protocol executed January 12, 1877, between the minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the court of Spain and the minister of state of His Majesty the King of Spain.

It being, in my judgment, incompatible with the public service, I am constrained to refrain from communicating to the Senate at this time copies of the correspondence described in the third paragraph of said resolution.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, May 23, 1896.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 6) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of Senators by the votes of the qualified electors of the States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a motion pending.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Ohio could not make a motion, I submit, while morning business was pending.

Mr. SHERMAN. The motion I have made, by the uniform courtesy of the Senate, will be entertained.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I want to ascertain the parliamentary status of the measure that was under discussion last evening prior to the adjournment of the Senate, and when it will properly be laid before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. It comes up at 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It comes up at 2 o'clock as the unfinished business.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall insist upon its being taken up at 2 o'clock as the regular order.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is the unfinished business; it comes up at 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It comes up at 2 o'clock as the unfinished business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I insist on my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Oregon each claim the floor. The Senator from Ohio first addressed the Chair, before the morning business had been concluded. While the Chair knows of no ruling on the point raised, yet it does seem that in accordance with the practice of the Senate, or rather what is known as the courtesy of the Senate, the Chair can not take the Senator from Ohio from the floor at this moment, but the Chair will submit the motion he has made. The motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] will be entertained afterwards.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I give notice that unless I have an opportunity to-day, on Monday morning, immediately on the conclusion of the morning business, I shall renew the motion, if I can secure recognition.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the motion?

Mr. HALE. I have given notice that at that time I shall ask the Senate to take up the deficiency appropriation bill. I state this for the benefit of the Senator from Oregon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the motion of the Senator from Ohio. It is to proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8008) defining cheese, and also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of filled cheese.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to enter a protest against the ruling of the Chair. I do not intend to appeal from the decision of the Chair, but I desire to protest that a Senator can not, pending the morning business, rise and secure recognition and then at the conclusion of the morning business claim recognition to call up a bill for consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been done every day this session.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And hold the floor against other Senators when the morning business shall have been concluded. I hold that he can not do it, because that, without any intention upon the part of the Senator from Ohio, is an imposition on the Chair. The Chair was not presumed to know for what purpose the Senator from Ohio rose. The Chair recognized the Senator from Ohio, and very properly, supposing, I imagine, as a matter of course, that he intended to present morning business. But the Senator from Ohio said: "No; I supposed the morning business was through. I move to take up the filled-cheese bill." The Chair replied: "No; the morning business is not through;" and thereupon recognized five or six Senators for morning business. What I protest against is the right of the Senator from Ohio to hold the floor during that time and have recognition at the conclusion of the morning business as against other Senators.

Mr. HALE. It is not precisely that——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is the case.

Mr. HALE. Is it not an everyday occurrence that a Senator rises, when morning business is not yet concluded, for something outside of morning business, and the Chair recognizes him, but informs him that morning business is not concluded? Now, is it not almost the universal custom that that Senator is given first recognition when the morning business is over?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think not.

Mr. HALE. He does not, perhaps, hold the floor, but the Chair frequently says, "The Chair will recognize the Senator at the conclusion of the morning business," and it is a courtesy, almost invariably granted, that he will then have the first opportunity. I think the Senator from Oregon must remember that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to say, in reply to the Senator from Maine, without any reflection upon the Senator from Ohio, or the Senator from Maine, or the Chair, or anybody else, that such a proceeding is an imposition, not only upon the presiding officer, but upon every other Senator. I simply wish to enter my protest against it as being a very bad practice.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon, who has been arguing against the right of the Senator from Ohio to recognition, upon what ground he places his own claims to recognition. Certainly if two Senators are on the floor when the morning business is concluded, it is entirely within the discretion of the Chair to decide which Senator he will recognize.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Undoubtedly. The Senator from Oregon is making no objection to that.

Mr. CHANDLER. But the Senator seemed to assume that if he could possibly get the Senator from Ohio off the floor he would be entitled to it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Oregon himself prolonged the morning business, and then he took the floor and claimed the privilege of making a motion to take up the measure in which he is interested, to the exclusion of the Senator from Ohio, who had been on the floor all the time.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There must be no misunderstanding about the matter. The Senator from Oregon did not assume at all that he had a right to the floor as against every other Senator; but the facts are simply these: Pending the morning business, and before its conclusion, the Senator from Ohio addressed the Chair and was recognized. The Chair informed the Senator from Ohio that morning business was not concluded. The Senator from Ohio took his seat. Five or six Senators, myself among the number, were recognized for morning business. At the conclusion of the morning business I addressed the Chair, and was recognized. The Senator from Ohio claimed that I should not be recognized because of the fact that he had addressed the Chair pending morning business. Those are the facts.

Mr. SHERMAN. The conclusion of the morning business was not announced, and it was to be presumed that when the Senator from Oregon rose under the circumstances he rose to morning business.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do not wish to take up further time. I hope the Senator from Ohio will go on with his bill and finish it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. May I inquire whether the Chair has announced that morning business is concluded?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that announcement was made. Possibly it was not, however. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Tennessee for morning busines..

Mr. HARRIS. I have no morning business. I simply wanted to know the parliamentary status of the question. If morning business is concluded, the Senator from Ohio, I understand, has been recognized.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. HARRIS. Was it a request or a motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. It was a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill called the filled-cheese bill.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Ohio does not ask unanimous consent, but he moves its consideration?

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply made a motion to take up the bill.

REGULATIONS CONCERNING FILLED CHEESE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8008) defining cheese, and also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of filled cheese.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I wish——

Mr. SHERMAN. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. VEST. Then I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion, if the Senator from Ohio insists upon a strict observance of the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. KYLE. I presume it is the intention of the Senator from Ohio not to displace the regular order of business at 2 o'clock?

Mr. HARRIS. He can not.

Mr. SHERMAN. That can only be done by a vote.

Mr. HARRIS. By a vote at 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUBOIS (when Mr. CANNON'S name was called). I announce the pair of the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FAULKNER]. If he were here, he would vote "nay," I think, and I should vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] would vote "yea."

Mr. ELKINS. Then I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE] and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. I do not see him present, and I do not know how he would vote. Therefore I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. The Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] assured me that he would vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. As he and I agree on this question, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. PROCTOR'S name was called). I was requested to announce a pair between the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am paired on certain questions to-day with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CARTER (after having voted in the affirmative). Observing that the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] has not voted, and being paired with him, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE].

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 15; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are two amendments on page 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Finance propose to amend, in section 3, line 5, after the word "pay," by striking out "four hundred" and inserting "two hundred and forty"; and in line 10, after the words "two hundred," to strike out "and fifty"; so as to read:

Manufacturers of filled cheese shall pay $240 for each and every factory per annum. Every person, firm, or corporation who manufactures filled cheese for sale shall be deemed a manufacturer of filled cheese. Wholesale dealers in filled cheese shall pay $200 per annum.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not intend to make a speech upon this bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to present resolutions in the nature of a petition, which I ask may be read, as they bear immediately upon this question?

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall be very glad to have the resolutions read.

Mr. CULLOM. They are very short.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

PRODUCE EXCHANGE, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Chicago, May 21, 1896.

Whereas there is being manufactured and placed upon the market a substance known as filled cheese, which is unsatisfactory to the trade and a fraud upon the consumer; and

Whereas so-called filled cheese has worked great harm to both domestic consumption and export trade in cheese made in the United States: Therefore

Be it resolved, That we urge upon our Senators their active support of the House bill now pending in the Senate.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded by the secretary of the Produce Exchange of Chicago to Senators CULLOM and PALMER of our State.

P. M. LITTLER, Secretary.

Mr. CULLOM. I only wish to make one remark at this time. I received those resolutions in the mail at this moment, and I thought, as the subject was before the Senate for consideration, it was proper that I should present them now.

I desire to say that I have other resolutions and communications the purpose of which is to oppose the passage of the bill, and possibly I may have something to say upon the subject later.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have perhaps a hundred resolutions from different parts of the country, all somewhat similar to those presented by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], which I could produce if necessary; but I do not propose to do so, nor do I propose to make a speech upon this subject. I think the subject is understood without my doing so. I have here, however, a resolution of the New York Produce Exchange, which, as it represents probably the largest organization of the kind in the country, I should like to have read, and it is the only one I shall ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK PRODUCE EXCHANGE, New York, May 21, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you, as the expression of the views of this exchange, a copy of resolution adopted by our cheese committee in advocacy of the bill known as H. R. No. 8008:

Whereas the entire agricultural interests of this country are anxiously awaiting the favorable action of your honorable body on the filled-cheese bill, known as H. R. 8008;

Whereas it is of vital importance to this great interest that this bill should become a law this session, as delay for another year means a continuation of the present depression in dairy products and in many instances absolute ruin to the producers; and

Whereas this exchange is urged and begged by its constituents throughout the entire country to cooperate with them in securing favorable legislation: Therefore

Be it resolved, That the members of this exchange earnestly and urgently request the Senate of the United States to take up and consider the bill now in its hands, known as 8008, at the earliest possible moment, and ask favorable action on the same, that it may be a law at once.

Respectfully,

T. F. SHIELDS,
Secretary Cheese Committee New York Produce Exchange.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, this bill is founded upon what is called the oleomargarine law, and the provisions of it are similar to those contained in that law, and have the same object. The oleomargarine law was intended to protect one class of the farming industry and the object of this bill is to protect another class.

This whole question was very thoroughly considered by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and I have here a large body of printed matter, which every Senator can get who desires, which shows the nature of filled cheese and what abuses have grown out of its manufacture and sale, resulting in the destruction of our commerce in cheese, not only at home, but abroad. There has been a large falling off of our exportation of cheese, and many evils have arisen from this palpable fraud of the substitution of lard oil for cream—that is, the using of lard oil to mix and mingle with skimmed milk—thus creating a compound entirely foreign to real cream cheese. The article of cream cheese is now made, not in manufacturing establishments, but on the farms throughout the country.

Filled cheese is made by manufacturing establishments who take the milk and skim off all there is of it that can be called cream, and make that into butter, and then, to supply the place of healthful cream, they insert lard, cooked more or less, and various forms of oil to take the place of the natural cream, which is the chief and the most valuable part of our cheese.

I have here a very long and interesting statement made by Mr. Hatch, formerly a member of the House of Representatives, upon the subject. I could read to the Senate many points in relation to this matter, but I do not think it is necessary.

This bill is simply intended for the benefit of the farmers of our country, to protect them in their ordinary, common industry of making cheese, which is sold at something like 10 cents a pound on the average.

I do not say that this manufactured article is unwholesome, for there were witnesses who appeared before the Committee on Finance and some before the Committee on Ways and Means, who said that it was not an unwholesome food. I do not base this bill upon that ground, but upon the ground that this filled cheese is a fraud as it is sold. When sold at wholesale, I am told it is called filled cheese. The meaning of that phrase is just as well known as the meaning of any other form of words describing any compound whatever. The principal part of the filled cheese is made out of lard, instead of out of cream or the produce of the cow.

The House report is a very interesting document, and covers the entire ground.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. This bill has been reported by the Finance Committee, as I understand the Senator?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been.

Mr. HILL. By a majority of the members of the committee, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] informs me.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Has the Finance Committee of the Senate given that careful consideration to the bill so that it is able to inform the Senate what is the estimated revenue expected to be received from the bill should it become a law? It is proposed as a revenue bill, is it not?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; it is proposed as a revenue bill.

Mr. HILL. What is the revenue estimated to be received from the bill if it becomes a law?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is very difficult to answer, and I believe there is no data upon which such a statement can be made. An inquiry of that kind was made of the Treasury Department by the House of Representatives, and the Department said it was not able to give it. When the oleomargarine bill was pending it was supposed that it would produce a million dollars of revenue, although many said it would not produce any revenue at all; yet it really produces between two and three million dollars of revenue.

Mr. HILL. Has the Senate committee cut down the tax which was proposed by the House of Representatives?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has cut down the tax.

Mr. HILL. To what extent?

Mr. SHERMAN. We have reduced the amount to be paid by manufacturers from $400 to $240, and the amount to be paid by wholesale dealers from $250 to $200 per annum. The provision in relation to retail dealers is not changed from the way it was fixed by the other House.

Mr. HILL. Upon what ground, will the Senator explain, were the reductions made?

Mr. SHERMAN. The object of the bill, I should have said, is not so much to raise revenue as to prevent fraud. We thought, therefore, that a modified or reduced rate of license tax would be proper. I would say to the Senator that the Committee on Finance heard from the manufacturers, who are naturally opposed to this bill; and we have their printed testimony here in full. So no subject could have been more fully stated on paper or from the mouths of witnesses than has been this question.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator if the manufacturers of filled cheese were heard before the committee?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes. Indeed we did not hear the other side at all. We heard the manufacturers in the Committee on Finance. So far as I can recall there was no one who appearen before us on behalf of the farmers.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Ohio forgets, I think, that we heard the members of the House of Representatives, who framed this bill, and interviewed them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; we heard the manufacturers and the leading representatives of the filled-cheese interest.

Mr. VEST. Then we heard the other side, including the members of the House of Representatives, who are responsible for the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now recall the fact that several members of the other House appared before the committee representing the bill and made their statement.

Mr. ALLISON. Which was very brief.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, their statements were brief. They are all here in print. So I do not think it is necessary to go further into this matter, unless Senators wish to ask questions.

Mr. HILL. If the Finance Committee framed this bill with the object of raising revenue, why was not the highest tax imposed by the House of Representatives maintained by the Senate Committee?

Mr. SHERMAN. It was thought, on the whole, that $250 was a pretty good tax upon a manufacturing establishment, and that $100 or $200 on another class were pretty stiff duties. The object of this proposed law was not so much for the purpose of raising revenue as for the protection of the farmer.

Mr. HILL. If the trade in filled cheese is a fraud, and this fraud can stand this tax and can pay it, why is not the highest tax it can stand imposed upon it for the benefit of the Treasury?

Mr. SHERMAN. It can hardly be said, in one sense, that this is a fraud. The testimony discloses this state of facts: The manufacture of filled cheese requires quite a large establishment, which gathers in the skimmed milk from all the neighborhood around, and when they manufacture the cheese and put it up, they mark it as "filled cheese"; consequently there is no fraud in the manufacture of it; but when it goes into the hands of second parties, the sellers scattered through the country, then it is put in boxes, which are not stamped, and there is no indication at all of what it is, but it is usually stamped by these sellers as cream cheese—"Wisconsin cream cheese," or "Ohio cream cheese," or "New York cream cheese"—and thus a fraud is perpetrated, not by the manufacturer, but by the seller who sells to the people at large, the consumers, and they do not know what they are buying. They suppose they are buying cream cheese. It is said that we had some of that "filled cheese" in our restaurant below here, and nobody knew what it was until its character was disclosed.

Mr. GEAR. I wish to suggest to the Senator that the manufacture of this cheese is itself a fraud, and that the manufacturer who produces this article called filled cheese puts into it an article entirely foreign to that which makes genuine cheese.

Mr. SHERMAN. He does not label it.

Mr. GEAR. I beg the Senator's pardon. He brands it all. The different brands which the Senator suggests of "Wisconsin cheese" or "Ohio cheese" are put on by him.

Mr. HILL. What I want to know is if the ground of this proposed legislation is the prevention of a fraud, and if the traffic will bear a larger tax, why that larger tax was not insisted upon?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from New York desires to keep in the House provision, very well.

Mr. HILL. I think I shall offer an amendment later, before the debate closes.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendments of the committee have already been adopted, but the Senator can have the vote again taken upon them if he desires.

Mr. CULLOM. The object and purpose of this bill is not to prohibit the manufacture of this article if anybody wants to manufacture it, but it is the purpose to have it so stamped or marked that it shall be sold for what it is, and not for what it is not.

Mr. ALLISON. And get a revenue from it.

Mr. CULLOM. And get a revenue from it, of course. The purpose of imposing that revenue is largely in the interest of securing the actual stamping of the article, so that it will not be imposed upon anybody.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator is seeking simply to exercise a police power, and not a revenue power.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the truth about it.

Mr. TELLER. This appears to be a revenue bill within the meaning of the term. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio, who has this bill in charge and who has on various occasions lectured us because we did not take steps to secure additional revenue, why this would not have been a good bill for him or the Committee on Finance to have attached some provision of a nonpartisan character to, some provisions which would not have brought up the question of protection or antiprotection? I inquire if there is not some method by which the revenues can be increased so that we may not be assailed, as we have been every few days, by the declaration that we are derelict in our duty and unpatriotic, and all that, in not providing revenue? The Senator might have added something to the tax on the manufacture of beer, I think, upon this bill, and perhaps have thus met the deficiency of this year, and a little more. The Senator from Ohio has been on various occasions very urgent about the raising of revenue, but it has always been upon a bill that contained some controverted and objectionable features to a majority of the Senate. I think he could have devised an amendment upon this bill which would have secured all the revenue necessary without antagonizing the peculiar views of a majority of the Senate.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I appreciate the force of the remarks just made by the Senator from Colorado; and as this is a bill for raising revenue coming from the House of Representatives, which alone has the power under the Constitution to initiate measures of that sort, I propose to aid the Senator from Ohio in his patriotic, nonpartisan effort to raise revenue by offering the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in as section 20 of this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following as a new section:

SEC. 20. That an internal-revenue tax of 5 per cent is hereby imposed on the value of all articles, in excess of $10,000 per annum, which are manufactured by any person, company, or corporation in the United States, from iron, steel, copper, nickel, brass, lead, zinc, cotton, wool, hemp, silk, or flax, or either of them, in whole or in part; and the revenues collected from the same shall be applied to the purchase and extinguishment of the interest-bearing debt of the United States as fast as the same may be collected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator from Texas will not intervene with such an amendment as that. As a matter of course, he can do it if he chooses. This is a bill demanded by the farmers of the country. There can be no objection to its passage. Its provisions are all clear and unobjectionable. Why delay it or involve this bill in controversy with the tariff question? We have a bill here from the House of Representatives——

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me finish.

Mr. MILLS. This is not a tariff bill. The Senator from Ohio will observe that this is an internal-revenue bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is all the same. The Senator's amendment is intended to defeat this measure of relief to the farmers. I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. I suggest the want of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. MILLS. It will be some time before you pass this bill if those tactics are pursued.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Roach,
Bacon,	Gear,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Sherman,
Bate,	George,	Mitchell, Wis.	Shoup,
Berry,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Smith,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to lay upon the table the amendment submitted by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope we may be able to go along with this bill and dispose of it without any——

Mr. GRAY. Obstructive tactics.

Mr. CULLOM. Obstructive tactics, as my friend from Delaware suggests. This is a bill——

Several SENATORS. Debate is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CULLOM. I was merely making an appeal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Texas that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do now adjourn?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the motion of the Senator from Texas. The question is upon that motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs upon the motion of the Senator from Ohio to lay upon the table the amendment submitted by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUBOIS (when Mr. CANNON'S name was called). I announce the pair of the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SHOUP (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. SHOUP. I have a standing pair with that Senator, and withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—42.

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to add as a new section what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add as a new section:

SEC. —. That to raise revenue to carry out the provisions of this and other acts of Congress and to meet the deficiencies in the revenue there shall be levied and collected, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, a tax of $1 on every barrel of lager beer, ale, and porter manufactured and sold in the United States in addition to the tax now imposed thereon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to lay the amendment on the table. It is not germane at all.

Mr. TELLER. Why not?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves to lay the proposed amendment on the table.

Mr. MILLS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUBOIS (when Mr. CANNON'S name was called). I announce the pair of the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEAR. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], and I withhold my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired generally with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], but as we would vote alike on this question I have voted.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Allison,	Elkins,	Mitchell, Wis.	Sherman,
Brown,	Frye,	Morrill,	Shoup,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Smith,

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. GRAY. I move to add, as a twentieth section, at the end of the bill:

That there shall be levied and collected as a duty upon tea and coffee 3 cents per pound on all those articles imported into the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware will be stated, and then the Chair will recognize the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. GRAY. I desire to modify my amendment by making the rate 10 cents per pound on tea and 3 cents per pound on coffee.

Mr. VEST. If my friend from Delaware will permit me to make a suggestion, why not submit the question first upon the amendment as to tea at 10 cents per pound?

Mr. GRAY. I would rather have the vote taken on both propositions.

Mr. VEST. Let us take a separate vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Ohio when the amendment has been stated. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Delaware will be stated as modified.

The SECRETARY. Add as an additional section:

SEC. 20. That there shall be levied and collected a tax of 10 cents per pound upon tea——

Mr. GRAY. I will further modify the amendment by stopping at "10 cents per pound upon tea."

Mr. MILLS. And also insert the words "an import duty."

Mr. GRAY. I also suggest that the words "an import duty" be inserted in lieu of the words "a tax."

Mr. SHERMAN. Has the amendment been put in form?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to have read the amendment, in order that the Senate may understand it. The amendment will be read as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 20. That there shall be levied and collected as an import duty upon tea 10 cents per pound.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUBOIS (when Mr. CANNON'S name was called). I make the announcement for the day that the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

So the amendment was laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that that bill will be temporarily laid aside for a few moments until a vote can be taken upon the pending bill.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, no. We want all the rest of the time to-day on the unfinished business. I shall object to laying it aside.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from Ohio will recognize my right to the floor, I have no objection, so far as I have any control over the bond bill, to let it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, no; let us go on with the bill.

Mr. VEST. Let us go on with the bond bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I object to laying it temporarily aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SHERMAN. My request is that the present order of business be temporarily laid aside with a view to final action upon the filled-cheese bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I am in sympathy with both bills, and I want to see both measures pass.

Mr. HARRIS. I object to temporarily laying it aside for any purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the end of it, then, for to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the further consideration of the filled-cheese bill be postponed until Monday.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope I can not be taken off the floor by a motion.

Mr. MILLS. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor and he can not be taken off.

Mr. ALLEN. I decline to be taken off the floor for a motion. I have not yielded to the Senator from Ohio for a motion.

Mr. MILLS. The Senator from Nebraska had not yielded the floor.

Mr. WILSON. We in this part of the Chamber can not hear a single word that is being said.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senator from Nebraska has the floor. He rose and addressed the Chair, and the Chair thinks he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to yield that I may ask consent that the filled-cheese bill be laid over until Monday, so that we can take it up again on Monday.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The bill goes over.

Mr. ALLEN. Do I understand the Senator to refer to the bond bill as going over until Monday?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; the filled-cheese bill. I ask that its consideration be postponed until Monday.

Mr. HARRIS. There is no unfinished business in the morning hour.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no objection to the filled-cheese bill going over until Monday, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRIS. It goes back to the Calendar.

Mr. GRAY. It takes its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio will please state his request and the Chair will submit it to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Nebraska having the floor, I ask the consent of the Senate that the filled-cheese bill be postponed until Monday at 1 o'clock.

Mr. MILLS. It is already postponed.

Mr. SHERMAN. And that it be made the special order.

Mr. HARRIS. I object to any consent agreement in respect to the cheese bill, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to the request of the Senator from Ohio.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7664) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes; receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 14, 18, 19, and 190; insisted upon its disagreement to the residue of the amendments of the Senate to the bill; asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, and Mr. SAYERS, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

REGULATION OF BOND ISSUES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, when the pending bill went over at yesterday's session I was referring to the fact that at the extraordinary session of the Fifty-third Congress the Democratic party in this Chamber promised the country that the repeal of the purchase clause of the Sherman Act would be speedily followed by a bill for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the established ratio of 16 to 1. Every appeal that was made to the chairman of the Finance Committee for an amendment of the repealing act providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver was rejected. I did not at that time believe that there was the slightest purpose on the part of the Democratic party to reestablish the free coinage of silver. I lost faith in its promises when the repeal of the purchase clause was not accompanied by an act providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

I think the Democratic party is responsible also in another sense and in view of another important fact connected with the history of the Fifty-third Congress. The silver Democrats in this Chamber had a majority at that time in their caucus. If they had seen fit they could have controlled the complexion of the Finance Committee in the interest of silver. They could have made it a free-coinage committee if they had seen fit to do so. They had the power to do that. They did not do it. Whether they attempted to do so or not I do not know, but they are chargeable, in my judgment, and held responsible to the country by the fact that they suffered the gold monometallists in their party, who were in the minority, to control the organization of the Finance Committee, and by that means rendering it impossible to report a bill to the Senate in favor of free coinage.

But I do not think the Democrats are any more responsible than the Republican party. I think the Republicans are equally as responsible, for every Republican member of the Finance Committee of the Fifty-third Congress was a gold monometallist. There was no exception, as I now recall the fact, and when we came to vote on the passage of the bill my recollection now is that 28 Republicans voted for it and 19 Democrats.

So there was no hope, and never has been, in my judgment, for free coinage at the hands of either of the old parties. I will take occasion, before I conclude, to show from the platforms that the Democratic party has, all through the years of its existence, been pledged to gold and silver as primary money; that it has been pledged against the domination of national banks; and I shall undertake to show that to-day no political party is more bankridden and more under the control of the banks than the Democratic party. I think I shall be able to show the same thing respecting the Republican party.

Yesterday the honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] told us how to maintain the parity between gold and silver. He has never told us what constitutes parity, a word that has by some mysterious process crept into political nomenclature within the last six or seven years. It did not appear before the Sherman Act of 1890. We were not told what constitutes parity by the honorable Senator from Delaware; that is, a definition was not given of the word "parity." But he told us (I do not use his exact words, but the substance of his meaning) that parity exists to-day in consequence of all other forms of money being subsidiary to and ultimately redeemable in gold. I think that is a fair statement of the Senator's position as he gave it to us.

Mr. President, parity is a law of equality.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I do not know that I gave any definition of the word "parity." I said that parity actually was maintained by the Treasury Department paying out indifferently gold and silver as it might be demanded by the person who had a right to demand the payment under the law; that the duty imposed by the act of 1893 upon the Treasury was to maintain the parity of the two metals in the markets of the world, which I supposed meant the equality of the purchasing power of either in the markets of the world.

Mr. ALLEN. I still think I will be found to be right when the Senator's statement is analyzed. The Senator lays down the proposition that there is a disparity between the bullion value of gold and silver. I admit that under present conditions. And he follows that with the statement that there is a parity between gold and silver coins because of the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to place silver and paper money on a gold basis, or to estimate them from a gold point of view. I am stating the Senator's position about as he stated it yesterday.

Now, Mr. President, that does not constitute parity. It is a good deal like the parity given us a few days ago by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], when he said parity consisted in making subsidiary coin of silver and using it in connection with gold. It is disparity that the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Ohio have been talking about. Parity, if I understand it, is a law of equality existing between two things, not between the bullion value of the gold or the silver that enters into the dollar, but the money value of gold and silver when used as money.

The office of money, it has been said, and in my judgment wrongly, is to measure values; that it is a standard of value. I do not agree to that. There is no such thing as measuring value. Value is simply the estimate of people of the relation existing between two or more articles, and that estimate or value may be expressed in money, and when thus expressed it is called price. It is an ideal thing. The value of articles rises and falls like the tides of the ocean, according to the law of supply and demand. A dollar to-day may properly express the value of a bushel of apples. To-morrow there is a disparity between the dollar and the bushel of apples, resulting from the law of supply and demand. So, if it is a measure at all, it is a very imperfect measure. It is subject to constant fluctuations.

Then what is money? It is a medium of exchange, pure and simple. It possesses no office that may not be properly found in the definition of those words. It operates to facilitate exchange. It is in a certain sense a temporary receptacle or repository of value when it is taken in exchange for property and held for a time to be exchanged for other property or to be used in payment of debts, but there is no proper office that money can perform which is not embraced in the definition of a medium of exchange.

Now, then, if parity is a law of equality, I want to know of my honorable friend the Senator from Delaware how he is to establish parity by taking from one of the metals the particular function that has been given it by law and which makes it money on a parity with gold? [A pause.] I am waiting for the Senator to answer.

Mr. GRAY. I do not exactly understand the Senator's question. Will he be good enough to repeat it?

Mr. ALLEN. My question is this: You have limitless coinage of gold. The bullion value of the gold dollar is equivalent to the gold coin simply because the holder can convert it into coin without any expense to himself. You have stricken down silver. You have refused to permit silver to occupy the same position at the mints of the United States that you accord to gold. You have denied to it the monetary function as primary money. Now, I I should like to have the honorable Senator tell me, after having done that, how it is possible to reestablish the parity between those two metals until you put them on an exact equality at the mints of the United States.

Mr. GRAY. Let me see if I understand the Senator at all. His question is a little metaphysical, I admit. I was talking yesterday about the duty that had been imposed by law upon the Executive of the United States and the Government of the United States to maintain the parity of the two metals in the markets of the world.

Mr. ALLEN. Is the Senator talking of metals or coins?

Mr. GRAY. The language of the law is "metals."

Mr. ALLEN. That is the language of the Democratic platform. The Democratic platform is in the law.

Mr. GRAY. I stated that. How long it could be done, and whether it was right to expect to Government to do it, is another question, but that certainly there is no other way by which we could hope that even for a short time it could be done than for the Government to pay out gold and silver indifferently at the demand of the person holding demand paper for the coins. That is all I attempted to say yesterday. I know of no other way to maintain it in the markets of the world.

Now, the Senator from Nebraska is talking about something a little different from that, if I understand him. He is talking about the power of a law giving free coinage to silver on the terms that it is given to gold. I say that with such a law the parity between the two metals, at the present ratio of 16 to 1, could not be maintained in the markets of the world.

Mr. ALLEN. Why?

Mr. GRAY. I do not want to interrupt the Senator now.

Mr. ALLEN. It is no interruption at all.

Mr. GRAY. Very well. Because the known commercial value of silver, 16 parts of silver to 1 of gold, is less than the value of 1 part of gold.

Mr. ALLEN. No; I deny the Senator's premises.

Mr. GRAY. Oh, well, the commercial value of an ounce of silver.

Mr. ALLEN. Measured in what?

Mr. GRAY. The commercial value of an ounce of gold is more than the commercial value of 16 ounces of silver. That is what I mean.

Mr. ALLEN. No; that is not correct.

Mr. GRAY. Very well. I can not undertake to make facts. I leave the Senator to do that.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not going to make facts, and I do not ask the Senator to make them.

Mr. GRAY. Let us hear what the Senator has to say. I did not mean it in any offensive way at all.

Mr. ALLEN. To put it in simple phrase, the Senator says it is a 50-cent dollar.

Mr. GRAY. I would rather the Senator would use the phrase I used. The Senator always gets away from the phrase I use.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well. If I got away from the phrase the Senator used, I will get back to it. He says that in the markets of the country, the markets of the world, probably—I do not remember the language of the Democratic platform exactly, and I do not think any other man does—the bullion in the silver dollar is not worth more than 50 cents. That is the position.

Mr. GRAY. About that, yes.

Mr. ALLEN. About that. That is in the neighborhood of the position, somewhere near it. Now, in what does the Senator estimate the bullion value of silver? What is the standard of estimation?

Mr. GRAY. I was estimating it as compared with gold.

Mr. ALLEN. As compared with gold. I thought it would come to that.

Mr. GRAY. Of course.

Mr. ALLEN. Of course. There it is. There is the whole thing.

Mr. GRAY. As that seems to be an important matter in the Senator's estimation, let me add that the very thing he is talking about is the ratio of 16 to 1. That is, 16 parts of silver to 1 part of gold.

Mr. ALLEN. That is right.

Mr. GRAY. That is the very thing with which I therefore compared silver, because I confined my estimate to the very terms of the Senator's own proposition. I said that in the markets of the world 1 ounce of gold is worth more than 16 ounces of silver—a great deal more.

Mr. ALLEN. I knew the Senator from Delaware would land exactly where he has landed.

Mr. GRAY. It is not very hard to know that.

Mr. ALLEN. And, Mr. President, you never saw a gold monometallist who did not land there.

Mr. GRAY. There is no other place for him to land.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me ask the Senator from Delaware, who I believe to be a fair-minded man, if he believes it is proper to estimate silver bullion in its stricken condition, which the Senator's party helped to bring about, from the standpoint of appreciated gold coin, and say that that is the commercial value of the silver bullion in a dollar?

Mr. GRAY. There is no sentiment in monetary economics.

Mr. ALLEN. I agree with that statement.

Mr. GRAY. And the stricken condition of this virgin silver may appeal to the sentiment and the affections of the Senator from Nebraska, but business knows no sentiment, monetary economics know no sentiment. All that I do know or think I know is that commercially the gold in a gold dollar is worth a good deal more than the silver in a silver dollar. In other words, 1 ounce of gold is worth a good deal more than 16 ounces of silver.

Now, the Senator says, "Is it fair to compare the two with silver in its present stricken condition?" I am not concerned about that. Whatever the stricken condition may be, whether it comes from that cause or another, we are dealing with facts. Take it in its stricken position, or take it in its resurrected position or any position that you please, I want the fact as it exists. I suppose the Senator is going to say, then, that we must make this tremendous experiment to see what the commercial value of silver is to be after you restore the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1.

Mr. ALLEN. We know what that is. We do not have to wait to see. I never saw a gold monometallist in my life who did not run away from the point when brought to it. The Senator crawfishes, if I may use the expression.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator will present his point I will promise not to run away from it. I will either meet it——

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator repeats an argument that is stale and moss-grown. He says the gold bullion in the dollar is equivalent to its coin value. There is not a child 10 years of age in the United States who does not know that. There is no discovery in that statement. Why is it? It is because you can take the bullion and go to the mints of the United States and have it coined freely without charge.

Suppose I should come to my friend the Senator from Delaware, who at this moment may have in his pocket 25.8 grains of gold in the form of bullion, and say, "I will give you 99 cents for it." He would not take it, would he? He would not take it. And why? Because he would say to himself and say to me, "I can take that bullion to the mints of the United States and have it coined into a dollar."

Mr. PEFFER. Law fixes the value.

Mr. GRAY. That is what they come to.

Mr. ALLEN. I am willing to——

Mr. GRAY. Law fixes the value of the dollar, says the Senator's Populist colleague.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Delaware would refuse to take 99 cents, because the mints of the United States are open to the free coinage of the bullion in his pocket, and therefore the market value of the bullion and the coin value are equivalent.

Suppose I should go to the Senator, who has in his pocket 412½ grains of standard silver in the form of bullion, and say to him, "I will give you 95 cents for it." He would take it.

Mr. GRAY. Indeed I would.

Mr. ALLEN. Indeed he would. Yes; he is a true gold bug.

Mr. ELKINS. Ninety-five cents in what?

Mr. GRAY. In gold.

Mr. ALLEN. In any kind of money you will have. I ask him if he would take 95 cents, and he says indeed he would. Why would he do so? Simply because he knows that silver by law is shut out from the mints and can not be coined. Now, that is all there is to it. You never found a gold monometallist who would not back down when he came to the point.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. Let me finish.

Mr. GRAY. Certainly. I do not want to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. I will yield to the Senator in a moment with pleasure. Suppose, under a system of free coinage, where silver could be coined into a dollar just as freely as gold can be coined, I should go to the Senator from Delaware and say, "I will give you 95 cents for 412½ grains of standard silver in the form of bullion in your pocket," Would you take it? I ask the Senator if he would take it?

Mr. GRAY. If it could be coined into a dollar?

Mr. ALLEN. If it could be coined into a dollar free of charge by the United States would the Senator take 95 cents for it?

Mr. GRAY. That depends.

Mr. ALLEN. Upon what?

Mr. GRAY. I will tell the Senator. I can not answer——

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to have the Senator answer me.

Mr. GRAY. Very well, if the Senator will let me answer. I do not want to interrupt him. It is very unsatisfactory to state one's position, where one does not want to interrupt the course of an argument, in disconnected phrases. I say to the Senator that if with the free coinage of silver and with the free coinage of gold as it existed prior to 1873 he had come to me with a gold dollar and had asked me to give him 412½ grains of silver for it, I would not have done it, because the silver in the coin was worth more than 100 cents in gold; and if I had been governed by the ordinary business notions that control sane men, who are acting on strictly business and economic principles, I should have said, "No, for the bullion is worth more than 100 cents in gold." It was worth 103 cents or 104 cents, and at one time it was worth 107 cents.

Mr. ALLEN. That does not answer the question.

Mr. GRAY. Very well; if that does not answer it I will give up. Now let the Senator answer that.

Mr. ALLEN. Answer what?

Mr. GRAY. Answer whether, if the positions had been reversed, he would have taken it.

Mr. ALLEN. But the Senator——

Mr. GRAY. No "buts" about it.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator intends to put that question to me in evasion of the question I asked him.

Mr. GRAY. I answered the Senator's question.

Mr. ALLEN. Then I will answer his question. Turn about is fair play. I will answer it squarely, too. If your 412½ grains of standard silver could be coined at the mints of the United States without charge to you and converted into a dollar, would you take 95 cents for the bullion in your pocket?

Mr. GRAY. Ninety-five cents in gold?

Mr. ALLEN. In anything; I do not care what it is.

Mr. GRAY. That is an insensible question. What does the Senator mean? Ninety-five cents in what? What kind of cents?

Mr. ALLEN. I mean 95 cents in money of any kind that is current in the country.

Mr. GRAY. That will not do. I should take 95 cents in gold for it.

Mr. PUGH. Why?

Mr. GRAY. Because I believe that the free coinage of silver would not bring up the commercial value to the mint value, and because I believe that if free coinage obtained the gold dollar would still be more valuable than the silver dollar; that is, the bullion in the gold dollar would be more valuable than the bullion in the silver dollar. Therefore, I would not accept his offer. Now I have answered the Senator's question. Will he answer mine?

Mr. ALLEN. I will answer the Senator's question. There was never but a temporary disparity between gold and silver at the period the Senator speaks of, and gold and silver were both out of circulation at that time. There was a little circulating on the Pacific Slope, but none in this section of the country. That disparity was made largely in consequence of the fact that under this system of restricted legal-tender greenbacks gold and silver had been made articles of commerce rather than money.

Mr. GRAY. How was it prior to 1860?

Mr. ALLEN. There was no disparity except in the form of alternate overvaluation and undervaluation.

Mr. GRAY. Oh, yes; there was.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware——

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not do that. I wish to get through my remarks.

Mr. BUTLER. All right.

Mr. ALLEN. I will be charged with occupying the floor too long. I will yield at the proper time.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator would not take the 95 cents?

Mr. GRAY. No.

Mr. ALLEN. He would not take it because the bullion could be converted into a dollar, and he could use the dollar in the payment of debts or the purchase of property, and the moment silver bullion can be admitted to the mints of the United States and made a part of the standard coin of the country, coin of ultimate redemption as our Republican friends sometimes speak of it, that moment it will be worth in the markets of this country and in the markets of the world the face of the coin.

Mr. GRAY. I said I would take it, not that I would not take it.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator has given his great influence to striking down silver and destroying the parity that existed between the two coins, and then he expects silver to get on its feet without any aid. He says there is no distinction——

Mr. GRAY. Did the Senator understand me to say I would not take 95 cents for the 412½ grains of bullion? I said distinctly that I would take it in gold.

Mr. ALLEN. I am afraid the Senator would take it, but I should dislike to risk a large sum under those circumstances. Suppose instead of having 412½ grains of silver bullion the Senator had what would amount to $1,000,000, if coined into standard dollars, and I should go to him and offer him 95 cents for every 412½ grains. He would not take it under those circumstances, he says.

Mr. GRAY. It would depend upon the commercial value of the bullion.

Mr. ALLEN. He would not take it because he could take it to the mints and have it coined into dollars which would be the equivalent of gold dollars.

That is all there is to it. That is where all these gentlemen land when they come to argue the question of parity.

Mr. GRAY. There is no difficulty in conducting an argument of that kind—I am always glad to conduct it—when the Senator both puts the question and answers it himself. So I leave him such triumph as comes from that mode of argument.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to give one or two illustrations of my interpretation of the views of the Senator from Delaware of the question of maintaining the parity. They are very homely and simple illustrations, but they bring out, I think somewhat forcibly, the views of that Senator and the senior Senator from Ohio and others of like belief.

Let us take the case of two men of about equal strength. We will say one is a yellow man and the other a white man, to make the simile complete. They are engaged in a physical struggle for the mastery. They are men nearly equally matched in strength. There is "a parity" of strength existing between them. Now, we are going to establish a parity between those men on the principles that have been argued by the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Ohio. How will we do it? We will have some third person intervene and bind the white man with chains, so that he is powerless. Then we will say that the yellow man being free and the white man being bound so that he can not move, a parity of strength is established between them. Strike down one, prevent him from using the strength given to him, and give the mastery to the other, and it is asserted that a parity of strength has been thus established between them. That is the condition of gold and silver to-day. That is an illustration of the "parity" now existing between gold and silver.

Suppose my friend the Senator from Delaware were driving a team of horses, one a yellow horse, if the expression is permissible, and the other a white one, equally matched in speed and size and strength. Suppose a man having a monopoly of yellow horses should say to him, "Your white horse has no intrinsic value. The yellow horse has. You ought not to use it. It is true it travels as well and looks as well. It is as strong and perfect as the other; but it lacks intrinsic value, and you must establish a parity between the horses." How? By breaking the leg of the white horse, so that he can not travel or by binding him so that he can not travel. He is to be kept in that condition according to the logic of the Senator from Delaware—I am not using his language, but his logic—and the parity is to be established on that basis between the horses, until the white horse by force of circumstances breaks his environments and reestablishes the former relation existing between himself and his mate. That is the reasoning on parity of the gold-standard men.

Now, let us go one step further. The Senator has a gold and a silver bushel measure on his premises. Each measures a bushel. Some one having a monopoly of gold measures says to him, "Your silver measure has not the intrinsic value of the gold measure. There is a disparity between the two, and the parity must be established or the disparity wiped out." The Senator would cut down the silver measure one-half, according to his logic, and leave it a half measure until of its own accord it grew to full parity with the other. That is the logic.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. I will yield in a moment. Suppose the Senator has two yardsticks, each 36 inches long, of course, one made of gold and the other of silver, and some gold bug should say, "The intrinsic value is not in the silver yardstick. There is a disparity between the silver and the gold." What would you do? Would you cut off 18 inches of the silver stick and leave it there to grow out and establish the parity between itself and the gold yardstick, just as the law destroyed the parity between gold and silver in 1873?

Mr. GRAY. There was no parity between them.

Mr. ALLEN. And the pseudo logicians argue that the parity must be established when silver has been completely stricken down and a disparity produced.

Mr. GRAY. I wish to know whether the Senator pretends to say that in 1873, when the free coinage of silver was discontinued, there was a parity between the gold dollar and the silver dollar?

Mr. ALLEN. Practically there was.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator and those who agree with him are dealing very much in phrases of this kind. They talk about striking down silver or destroying the parity by the act of 1873, and I will venture to say that there never has been a parity between gold and silver such as that phrase assumes there was from the beginning of the coinage of gold and silver down to 1873.

Mr. ALLEN. It is the misfortune of men who were born and raised and educated in the country where I was born and raised to be incapable of expressing themselves as plainly as our brethren who were educated at the better schools of the East.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. I wish to see if I understand the Senator correctly. I understood the Senator to draw a comparison between a yellow horse and a white one entirely equal.

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct.

Mr. CAFFERY. And a gold bushel measure and a silver bushel measure. Do I understand by that that the Senator means there is a natural parity between those two metals?

Mr. ALLEN. No, Mr. President; the Senator from Louisiana is getting on dangerous ground for him. There never was a natural parity between any two things of which I have any knowledge.

Mr. CAFFERY. I will ask the Senator what he understands by parity?

Mr. ALLEN. I understand parity to be a relation of equality existing between articles.

Mr. GRAY. What sort of relation?

Mr. CAFFERY. What is the precise definition of parity?

Mr. ALLEN. There may be a variety of relations. It may be a relation of value, or a relation of volume, or a relation of use. It may present itself in a variety of forms.

Mr. GRAY. What do you mean by it?

Mr. ALLEN. I want the Senator to answer my question, and not to run away from the discussion.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator pardon me again?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask the Senator whether it is that sort of parity that one piece of these metals of a certain weight is equal at all times to another piece of metal of the same weight?

Mr. ALLEN. I say to the Senator from Louisiana that as to articles which are produced in substantially the same quantity, have the same durability, are adapted to the same uses, and used to the same extent, there is not only a natural parity existing between them, but also a parity that may be established by the law. Now, I think I have answered the Senator.

Mr. CAFFERY. Not specifically.

Mr. ALLEN. But the Senator from Louisiana will not draw me on ground of his choosing.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am not trying to draw you on the ground of my choosing, but this is the ground of your own choosing.

Mr. ALLEN. No. I say that there has never been, so far as I know, a time when there was a commercial parity, if that is what you are speaking of, between two articles. The Senator from Delaware knows a great deal of these matters, and I ask him to point out an instance.

Mr. GRAY. I can not point it out between silver and gold at a given ratio.

Mr. ALLEN. No. Of course the ratio is the relation fixed by men; that is all.

Mr. GRAY. Do you not propose to fix it in the bill to restore free coinage?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly. I say that when you took away from silver one of its chief uses you destroyed the commercial relation which existed between it and gold as well as the money parity between the two, just as when you take from your yardstick one-half you destroy the parity of measurement, just as you destroy the parity between your horses in one instance when you cripple one and permit the other to go free, just as you destroy parity between your bushel measures when you cut down one and permit the other to stand at full measurement.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator contend—for he has not yet quite distinctly said so, although the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], of the same party, has said so—does the Senator from Nebraska contend that the parity between the two metals is a mere matter of law?

Mr. ALLEN. No doubt the Senator from Delaware would like me to answer that question.

Mr. GRAY. I should, very much.

Mr. ALLEN. And the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] was after me a moment ago to answer it, and I declined to walk on the ground chosen by the Senators. I ask the Senator to come to my ground for debate.

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator believe that the mere enacting of a law that 16 parts of silver shall be equal to 1 part of gold will make it so, irrespective of commercial considerations?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I expect under a system of free and unlimited coinage of silver, which will give a new use to silver, or a use of which it has been deprived since 1873, that commercial parity between the metals as articles of commerce will be reestablished.

Mr. GRAY. Then the Senator does not believe that it is in the power of law alone to make an arbitrary parity between these two metals at 16 to 1, or whatever the ratio described in the law may be?

Mr. ALLEN. I have not said so. I know very well the Senator from Delaware would like to have me say so. Then he would like to contend that the Senator from Nebraska favors fiat money.

Mr. GRAY. No. I will promise not to argue that.

Mr. ALLEN. I say to the Senator that by demonetization of silver you took from it one of its chief functions.

Mr. GRAY. Let me ask the Senator——

Mr. ALLEN. Wait a moment. By that means you destroyed the commercial parity between silver and gold, which is given to either by the privilege of being coined at the mints free.

Mr. GRAY. Now, I think I understand the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. I say if you will remove the demonetization statute and place silver once more at the mints where it stood when it was demonetized, the coin value of the metals and the bullion value of the metals will be equal.

Mr. GRAY. I want to be entirely fair to the Senator. The Senator knows that I do, though I may have misapprehended him.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, yes; I believe you do.

Mr. GRAY. This question is too important a one to be insincere about. If I misstate the Senator's position, of course he will correct me; but, as I understand it, it is this: that there are two elements to be taken into consideration in the value of the two metals, gold and silver, as a medium of exchange—that is, as to the value of the metal in them—that at the ratio of 16 to 1 we have to consider not only the commercial value of the bullion alone, apart from any legal recognition of them as money metals, but we have also to consider the value that is given to them by the free coinage of both of them, and the establishment of them both on an equality as money metals. That is true, is it not?

Mr. ALLEN. No. Let me state my position to the Senator; and I think I can state it so that he will understand me, and so that it will be broad enough to be understood by everyone. I say that the demonetizing act of 1873 destroyed the parity between gold and silver as coins, as money, and made silver a mere article of commerce. You destroyed it by legislation—that is, by withdrawing from silver its chief function, the money function.

Mr. GRAY. Very well; I take that.

Mr. ALLEN. One moment. If you will repeal the demonetization act and reestablish silver at the mints in the condition it was when it was demonetized, that moment the bullion in the silver dollar will be worth commercially the silver coin.

Mr. GRAY. Now I think I understand the Senator; but I may have been unfortunate in trying to state his position. Let me state it again. It is this, then, in his own language, that in considering the commercial value of the two metals the coinage privilege or the money function of each is a very important if not the chief element in that value, or something of that kind——

Mr. ALLEN. The coinage use.

Mr. GRAY. Very well—and taking away that coinage use of course destroyed that element of value, and the only element remaining, for it still has value, is its commercial value as a metal, irrespective of and entirely apart from any money function that it may have. Is that so?

Mr. ALLEN. Its value is estimated from——

Mr. GRAY. It has some value.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, just exactly as pig lead and copper.

Mr. GRAY. Exactly. But it has a value independent of coinage. That is true, is it not?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. And that value is affected like the value of all other commodities, by supply and demand, is it not?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; to a certain extent, with the qualification that the demand for its use as money has been taken away by statute.

Mr. GRAY. Not the whole demand, for there is still a commercial demand after the money demand has been stricken off.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I am speaking now of that value that remains after the money function was stricken down.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAY. That value is subject to the ordinary causes which affect the values of all other commodities, supply and demand.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Very well. Now, suppose we restore silver to free coinage, then we would restore that other element of value, to wit, the money function, the money use, which you say would be sufficient to do away with the disparity that now exists between the silver dollar and the gold dollar. Now, grant for the sake of argument that that would be fixed. Then, suppose there was an entire revolution in the metal element of the value, the bullion element of the value, and suppose the mines should treble in their output, would not that affect the value of the bullion in that silver dollar in addition to what had been worked in it by the restoration of free coinage?

Mr. ALLEN. The trouble, Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. Let me add further, if that be so, how can you predicate and establish a permanent parity between the two metals, even if you do restore silver to free coinage?

Mr. ALLEN. I answer the Senator in this way—and yet it is not according to the rules of proper discussion for me to run after suppositious cases which he puts, but I am willing to do so—I am willing to let the Senator lead me on to his own ground at this time. I say to the Senator that one of the primary laws of economics is that everything must respond to the law of supply and demand. Articles rise and fall according to the supply and demand. Gold and silver are not exempt from that law; and when you use either of the metals as an article of commerce it is subject to the laws of supply and demand as any other article of commerce, the same as wheat and oats and other products; but when gold and silver are used as money, and a new use given them that is not given other articles, then they respond to the law of supply and demand as money rather than as articles of commerce, and it is their money value that is taken into account, and not the commercial value of the materials.

Mr. GRAY. But the commodity value remains, does it not?

Mr. ALLEN. The commodity value when converted from bullion into coin assumes a new character.

Mr. GRAY. But the commodity value remains?

Mr. ALLEN. Now, I will answer the Senator in another respect. For twenty-seven centuries of the world, down to 1873, gold and silver were never to exceed three points apart, notwithstanding there was a great difference at times in the output.

Mr. BAKER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. BAKER. What per cent would the three points apart be—how many cents?

Mr. ALLEN. What is your question?

Mr. BAKER. You say there was never more than three points difference between gold and silver in all these centuries. How many cents in a point?

Mr. ALLEN. What I mean to say is this: That in the various forms of estimating in the different countries—I do not know how many cents there would be in the estimate of the use of gold and silver in Jerusalem, and I do not think the Senator from Kansas does either—they did not differ to exceed three points.

Mr. BAKER. That is not answering the question.

Mr. ALLEN. What I mean to say is, that in the estimate of all countries for twenty-seven centuries the difference between the two metals has never been to exceed three points.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator a question for information?

Mr. ALLEN. I want to answer your other question first.

Mr. GRAY. I wish to ask a question right there, and then the Senator can go on and answer them together, for notwithstanding his extreme modesty, I think he knows a great deal about history.

Mr. ALLEN. Thank you, sir.

Mr. GRAY. However, there is a great deal in the history of the first thousand years to which I have not had access, and perhaps the Senator has. During that period there is much so-called history about which there is a great deal of uncertainty, but I wish to ask the Senator if, say during a thousand years—I will not say two thousand seven hundred years—the commercial ratio between silver and gold has been at the rate of 16 to 1?

Mr. ALLEN. It has not always been at that ratio.

Mr. President, I must return my profound thanks to the Senator from Delaware——

Mr. GRAY. How does the Senator say that it has not varied more than three points?

Mr. ALLEN. I return my profound thanks to the Senator from Delaware for his characterization of my knowledge of history. I have never met—I say it in candor and in kindness—an Eastern advocate of the gold heresy who did not at all times carry his egotism with him.

Mr. GRAY. If there is any charge I wish to utterly resent it is the one of egotism. I assure the Senator that what I said was said in perfect good faith. I believe he knows a great deal more about the history of coinage than I do. I think, perhaps, I am a little more clear about the present status of coinage than he is, or I would not presume to speak to him upon this question; but so far as what I said was concerned, I assure the Senator it was said in perfect good faith, and not meant in any other way.

Mr. ALLEN. I accept the apology, Mr. President. The Senator, however, was interrupting me when I was answering his question.

Mr. GRAY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ALLEN. The fact is that the withdrawal of silver from its money use produced disparity between the metals. Then we have this fact that may come within the knowledge of the Senator from Delaware; and he has lived a few years more than I have, and of course knows more by virtue of that fact and by virtue of his closer proximity to colleges, universities, and books.

Mr. GRAY. Now the Senator is sarcastic.

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all. I am simply willing to accord to the Senator that which he claims for himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAY. I have not claimed it.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly the Senator from Delaware will not deny that there was any substantial disparity between gold and silver until 1873? I am speaking of a marked disparity.

Mr. GRAY. There was not much for two years after 1873.

Mr. ALLEN. And yet the Senator stood here yesterday and told us, and the changes are rung upon it from time to time, that there will be a disparity between gold and silver even if we return to free coinage. During a hundred years of national existence—and I am now within modern history—during a hundred years of national existence and a hundred years more of colonial existence, there was no disparity between the metals until 1873.

Mr. GRAY. The ratio was not always the same.

Mr. ALLEN. At any ratio—15½ or 16.

There was a time when we undervalued our silver, and it went out of the country; there was a time when we undervalued our gold, and it went out of the country; but that was in consequence of law and not in consequence of the disparity between the metals. That is about all there is to this question of parity.

How is it about appreciation? Our friends say there is no appreciation of gold; they tell us that gold is always stationary. Why, of course, anything is stationary with itself and always equal to itself; but gold does not mark the rise and fall in prices properly, honestly, and justly, considering the business and industrial interests of the country. What would be thought of this proposition—and I call the attention of the Senator from Delaware, with whom I have established a parity of friendship, to the remark—what would be thought of a contract, for instance, to deliver a thousand yards of cloth for a dollar a yard, and when the day of delivery came the man who is to receive the cloth would say to the other that the law had in the meantime changed the yard from 36 inches to 48 inches, and he was entitled to receive 48 inches of cloth for a yard instead of 36 inches, according to the standard of measurement at the time of the contract?

Mr. GRAY. That would be a pretty hard case.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator says it would be a hard case. What would be thought, for instance, of a law which, after a contract had been made between two men that one was to deliver to the other 1,000 bushels of wheat for 37 cents a bushel—the price prevailing in my country now—if he were told before he delivered it that Congress had changed the law and now called 120 pounds a bushel instead of 60 pounds—had changed the standard of measurement? I suppose the Senator from Delaware would say that that was a hard case, too, would he not? That is precisely what was done under gold monometallism and by the demonetization of silver. It would be confiscation in the two instances I have mentioned, and, Mr. President, demonetization was confiscation. At the close of the war we could have paid our war debt, our bonded indebtedness of $2,800,000,000 in 2,800,000,000 bushels of wheat at a dollar a bushel, but in consequence of the demonetization of silver and the appreciation of gold and the introduction of the gold standard we have paid over three billions of the debt, principal and interest, and had something like $700,000,000 left before Mr. Cleveland and his Administration increased it by additional bonds; and we have used the value of 7,000,000,000 bushels of wheat in doing so; and yet men can be found with the hardihood to assert that there is no appreciation in gold.

I want briefly to direct attention to another thing that I regard as of importance. The honorable Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] yesterday and the day before, and the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER] yesterday, reiterated the old story that the Populist party is in favor of an irredeemable paper money. Even the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] spoke of the Populist party as being a party in favor of irredeemable paper money. I say to the Senator from New York, as I have said to him before, and to the Senator from Ohio and the junior Senator from Kansas, and every other Senator who makes this assertion, that he talks of something he knows nothing about and that he has no right to assert unless he can find it in the party platform.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly. I knew I would have the attention of the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. I hardly think that any remark I have made will bear the construction that the Populist party was in favor of the limitless issue of paper money. There must be some limit to it, I suppose, but I do not exactly understand what.

Mr. ALLEN. Do not let us chop logic on this question.

Mr. HILL. I do not know what the Senator means by that expression.

Mr. ALLEN. I mean to say that there is nothing in the declaration of the Populist party showing it to be in favor of an irredeemable currency.

Mr. HILL. When the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] was asked what he wanted, he spoke of a billion or so.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from South Carolina is one of the leaders of the Democratic party and is going to the Chicago convention. He is not a Populist.

Mr. HILL. I do not know how long he will remain at Chicago. The point of the statement I made the other day was simply that I thought the Populist party was in favor of an irredeemable paper currency.

Mr. ALLEN. Here is the Populist platform, adopted in 1892, in the book which I will hand to the Senator, and I ask him to find any such declaration.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will allow me, no matter what your platform says, if you provide for the issue of paper money and do not provide anything whatever of any substantial amount for its redemption, it would be in fact an irredeemable currency.

Mr. ALLEN. You provided nothing, and your party has provided nothing, to redeem your currency.

Mr. HILL. The Senator himself voted the other day to put a clause upon an appropriation bill for the issue of Treasury notes without providing a single particle of money with which to redeem them.

Mr. KYLE. I ask the Senator from New York how much will a basis of $100,000,000 support? Is it not a matter of judgment, merely?

Mr. HILL. I suppose you might say that a basis of $100,000,000 might support thousands and thousands of millions.

Mr. ALLEN. Just about two billions, according to the Democratic Administration.

The Senator from New York is a very great lawyer—and I mean what I say—and he knows very well that an issue of legal-tender notes under the act to which he referred the other day would be redeemable in coin under existing law.

Mr. HILL. When we did not provide anything for their redemption? You provided that they should be issued, that is all.

Mr. ALLEN. We have statutes on the books now providing for their redemption, but the trouble has been and is that under a Republican, and a Democratic Administration as well, you have bankrupted the Treasury and can not redeem your paper to-day.

Mr. HILL. I suppose my friend thinks that one of the things that has bankrupted the country is the passage of the Wilson bill, for which he voted.

Mr. ALLEN. No; I do not. I did not have any restraint placed on me at that time.

Mr. HILL. You do not seem to have any restrictions on you now. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. No; in other words, I was not tied up on the Wilson bill so that I could not vote my convictions.

Mr. HILL. I tried to get my friend to vote against it, but he seemed to be awfully tied up.

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir.

Mr. HILL. He said he was compelled to vote for it, and he did vote for it.

Mr. ALLEN. I had no unnatural alliances with Republicans or Democrats, as others had.

Mr. HILL. No; yours was a natural alliance. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. No; and it does not come with a very good grace from the Senator from New York—I am speaking of his party, of course—for my distinguished and able friend to gibe the Populist party. It comes with ill grace from my friend from New York, whose party has bankrupted the country jointly with the Republican party and reduced the Treasury so that you can not redeem, to say anything in disparagement of the Populist party.

Mr. HILL. Let us see about that. The only measure of any great importance relating to the finances which the Democratic party has passed was the Wilson bill, which was passed with the Senator's support and aid, and without which it could not have passed. Now, what other measure affecting the finances of the country can the Democratic party be held justly responsible for? If they are responsible for the Wilson bill, the Senator shares with them the responsibility.

Mr. KYLE. It was a good bill with the income tax embodied in it.

Mr. ALLEN. The Democratic party is responsible for the passage of the Wilson bill. The Democratic party passed something bigger than the Wilson bill; it passed the opportunity for success.

Mr. HILL. We are talking about legislation.

Mr. ALLEN. That was something a great deal bigger than the Wilson bill.

Mr. HILL. In what other respects does the Senator say the Democratic party has bankrupted the country?

Mr. ALLEN. If your party after the inauguration of Mr. Cleveland had promptly taken up the tariff question before some Senators on the Democratic side had formed alliances with the Republicans, and had passed a scientific tariff measure; if you had had the courage to take hold of the silver question; if you had not been bound by the shylocks who make your political success or your defeat certain, and had taken hold of the financial question, you could have established yourselves in this country, in my judgment, so that the next fifty years would have witnessed you in power; but you had no courage when you came to the test. Your President was bound by the gold power and the bond power, which precipitated the bankers' panic in 1893.

Then, following the bankers' wishes and not the people's, he convened Congress in session to unconditionally repeal the purchase clause of the Sherman Act.

Mr. HILL. The President never did a better thing in his life.

Mr. ALLEN. No, he never did many good things——

Mr. HILL. He never did, I say, a better thing in his life than when he convened the extra session of Congress to repeal the Sherman Act. There was not an intelligent silver man in the country who ever discussed the question who ever claimed that the Sherman law was a consistent and logical silver bill. It was a fraud from beginning to end, and ought to have been repealed, and every true silver man would probably take that position.

Mr. ALLEN. He has not done many great things, I think, in the last three years. Your party claims to be a party of bimetallism. I have heard the Senator from New York himself say he was a bimetallist. The world knows that he is a Democrat, for he has said so. That has been repeated from hilltop to hilltop and from valley to valley. If your party is a bimetallic party, why did not the country have the benefit of your services, when you repealed the purchase clause of the Sherman Act, in the passage of a free-coinage bill? Did not the Senator from New York vote constantly against free coinage during the three months of the extra session of 1893? No, Mr. President, the record of both of these parties is spotted all over. You have not the coin, gold and silver combined, to redeem the paper money. The banks do not pretend to redeem. They get together greenbacks and go down to the Treasury and call for gold and get the gold, and then get greenbacks back again and get more gold, and go through this endless process that Mr. Cleveland speaks of, and which he discovered within a year, long after it had been discovered by Populists.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Nebraska vote for a provision that when greenbacks are once redeemed they shall not be reissued?

Mr. ALLEN. If you will supply their place with coin I will do so.

Mr. HILL. Why not let that question stand by itself? The Senator complains that the President of the United States uses for the ordinary expenses of the Government what is called the proceeds of the bonds, to wit, greenbacks received on redemption. I suggested yesterday in the remarks which I made here a method by which you could stop that by a simple amendment to this bill. Will the Senator support it?

Mr. ALLEN. What is the amendment? State it and I will tell you whether I will support it or not.

Mr. HILL. The amendment suggested is that when greenbacks are redeemed and placed in the Treasury they shall not be reissued.

Mr. ALLEN. Provided——

Mr. HILL. Provided what?

Mr. ALLEN. That their place in circulation shall be supplied by silver or gold dollars. I will support your amendment with that proviso attached to it.

No, Mr. President, I do not expect to hear the Senator assert again that the Populist party is in favor of irredeemable paper money.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. I heard the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER] assert that yesterday, and he asserted it in the light of the fact that there is no doctrine of that kind contained in the platform or in the official utterances of the Populist party.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ALLEN. Always; certainly.

Mr. BAKER. Did I understand the Senator from Nebraska to say a few moments ago that for two thousand seven hundred years there had been only two or three points' difference between the price of gold and silver?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know what the Senator from Kansas understood me to say.

Mr. BAKER. Did the Senator say that in two thousand seven hundred years there had not been a difference of over three points?

Mr. ALLEN. I passed that point half an hour ago in my discussion.

Mr. BAKER. Did the Senator make that statement?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; I said something like that.

Mr. BAKER. Will the Senator tell me what a point is?

Mr. ALLEN. I answered the Senator.

Mr. BAKER. How many cents is a point?

Mr. ALLEN. It might be more or less than the Senator and I would agree on.

Mr. BAKER. Well, how much is it? The Senator is talking now upon finance.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall be glad indeed to answer the Senator from Kansas if he will give me a chance to finish my discussion of the point that I am on.

Mr. BAKER. This is a good time, when a man is posted on the finances, to tell us how much a point is. Does the Senator know?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas is pettifogging and beating about the bush, offering nothing substantial.

Mr. BAKER. Does the Senator know that a point is about 7 cents?

Mr. ALLEN. No; and the Senator from Kansas does not know it either.

Mr. BAKER. Three points are about 21 cents.

Mr. ALLEN. I say that points differ according to the particular market and the particular article and the particular country in which the transaction takes place.

Mr. BAKER. Suppose the scale ran, as you say, a difference of only two or three points for two thousand seven hundred years. How much would that be in cents? How much would be the difference between gold and silver? Tell me that.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator seems to know a great deal about this matter, and questions my knowledge, and I do not object to it, either. I say to the Senator that gold and silver have run from 10½ to 16 from the foundation of the history we have of them.

Mr. BAKER. Sixteen what?

Mr. ALLEN. Sixteen grains.

Mr. BAKER. How much variation would that be on the dollar?

Mr. ALLEN. It would take me longer to figure that out than I care to devote to it. It involves a minute calculation.

Mr. BAKER. When the Senator said three points did he not know that it did not mean 3 per cent, but that it meant 21 cents?

Mr. ALLEN. No; I did not know anything of the kind——

Mr. BAKER. Then the Senator ought not to talk on the question of silver.

Mr. ALLEN. And the Senator from Kansas does not know anything of the kind, and is not capable of enlightening me.

Mr. President, I have made a discovery to-day. I have discovered that this Senator who budded and blossomed on the prairies of Kansas understands all about this question.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. BAKER. I have made no such statement, but I want to say to my friend from the sand dunes of Nebraska that I think I perhaps know fully as much about it as he does. I have studied the question of points, I presume, fully as much as he has, and I can state to him now that a point is between 6 and 7 cents.

Mr. ALLEN. I have never lost anything on a board of trade, and therefore I do not know much about modern points.

Mr. BAKER. I presumed that was the case.

Mr. ALLEN. What I meant to assert and what I do assert, notwithstanding I incur the displeasure of the powerful judgment of the junior Senator from Kansas, is that from the time we have had any history of the relation of gold and silver to each other it has been from a little below 11 to 1 up to 16 to 1 in our age and at this time. Now, you may call that a point or lack of point or whatever you may see fit; that is the relation that has come down to us in the ages.

Mr. KYLE. The ratio of production, the Senator means.

Mr. ALLEN. The ratio of production. Mr. President, I do not know how many points that would make in the estimation of the Senator from Kansas, or that it would make any, and to be entirely frank with him and the country, I do not care. But the Senator from Kansas was one of the Senators who asserted in this Chamber yesterday (notwithstanding he had been corrected repeatedly) that the Populist party is in favor of an irredeemable currency.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have the speech of the junior Senator from Kansas right here. I will buy the gentleman a suit of clothes if he finds that statement in the speech I made. Now, come down to the truth and be honest. Here is the speech. Find the words there that you say I used, that the Populist party favors irredeemable paper money.

Mr. ALLEN. I am certain the Senator has made that statement two or three times here.

Mr. BAKER. What I said was paper Populism.

Mr. ALLEN. Paper Populism? That is good.

Mr. BAKER. That is what I said.

Mr. ALLEN. How long ago has it been since the Senator delivered a carefully prepared essay in this Chamber in which he used exactly the words I quoted?

Mr. BAKER. You can not find it even in the prepared speech that I delivered any more than you can find it in the little speech I delivered yesterday.

Mr. ALLEN. It was during this session of Congress. Now, the Senator from Kansas should not beat about the bush. During the present session of Congress the Senator, in his room or somewhere else outside of this Chamber, deliberately wrote a speech in which he spoke of the Populist party being in favor of an irredeemable paper money. The Senator from Kansas will not deny that.

Mr. BAKER. I have that speech. I think the Senator must have been reading the Omaha platform or the Ocala platform and got mixed.

Mr. ALLEN. No, I am not mixed on Populism. I am mixed sometimes on what constitutes Republicanism when I see on the other side a division among Senators on vital issues and somewhat mixed as to what constitutes Democracy over here; I get rather confused when there is a division in voting.

Mr. President, I have here the Omaha platform. I made the assertion in this Chamber a short time ago (and I believe it stands good yet) that seven Senators out of ten have never read that platform. I propose to read it. I am going to give the world the benefit of the Populist platform. I invite the careful and prayerful attention of my friend from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and my friend from New York [Mr. HILL] as I read this platform:

Assembled upon the one hundred and sixteenth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, the People's Party of America, in their first national convention, invoking upon their action the blessing of Almighty God, put forth, in the name and on behalf of the people of this country, the following preamble and declaration of principles:

The conditions which surround us best justify our cooperation. We meet in the midst of a nation brought to the verge of moral, political, and material ruin. Corruption dominates the ballot box, the legislatures, the Congress, and touches even the ermine of the bench. The people are demoralized. Most of the States have been compelled to isolate the voters at the polling places to prevent universal intimidation or bribery. The newspapers are largely subsidized or muzzled, public opinion silenced, business prostrated, our homes covered with mortgages, labor impoverished, and the land concentrating in the hands of the capitalists. The urban workmen are denied the right of organization for self-protection; imported pauperized labor beats down their wages; a hireling standing army, unrecognized by our laws, is established to shoot them down, and they are rapidly degenerating into European conditions. The fruits of the toil of millions are boldly stolen to build up colossal fortunes for a few, unprecedented in the history of mankind, and the possessors of these, in turn, despise the Republic and endanger liberty. From the same prolific womb of governmental injustice we breed the two great classes—tramps and millionaires.

The national power to create money is appropriated to enrich bondholders; a vast public debt payable in legal-tender currency has been funded into gold-bearing bonds, thereby adding millions to the burdens of the people.

Silver, which has been accepted as coin since the dawn of history, has been demonetized to add to the purchasing power of gold by decreasing the value of all forms of property as well as human labor, and the supply of currency is purposely abridged to fatten usurers, bankrupt enterprise, and enslave industry. A vast conspiracy against mankind has been organized on two continents, and it is rapidly taking possession of the world. If not met and overthrown at once, it forebodes terrible social convulsions, the destruction of civilization, or the establishment of an absolute despotism. We have witnessed for more than a quarter of a century the struggles of the two great political parties for power and plunder, while grievous wrongs have been inflicted upon the suffering people. We charge that the controlling influences dominating both these parties have permitted the existing dreadful conditions to develop without serious effort to prevent or restrain them.

Neither do they now promise us any substantial reform. They have agreed together to ignore, in the coming campaign, every issue but one. They propose to drown the outcries of a plundered people with the uproar of a sham battle over the tariff, so that capitalists, corporations, national banks, rings, trusts, watered stock, the demonetization of silver, and the oppressions of the usurers may all be lost sight of. They propose to sacrifice our homes, lives, and children on the altar of mammon—to destroy the multitude in order to secure corruption funds from the millionaires. Assembled on the anniversary of the birthday of the nation and filled with the spirit of the grand general chief who established our independence, we seek to restore the Government of the Republic to the hands of "the plain people," with whose class it originated. We assert our purposes to be identical with the purposes of the national Constitution, to form a more perfect Union and establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty for ourselves and our posterity.

We declare that this Republic can only endure as a free Government while built upon the love of the whole people for each other and for the nation; that it cannot be pinned together by bayonets; that the civil war is over, and that every passion and resentment which grew out of it must die with it, and that we must be in fact, as we are in name, one united brotherhood. Our country finds itself confronted by conditions for which there is no precedent in the history of the world. Our annual agricultural productions amount to billions of dollars in value, which must within a few weeks or months be exchanged for billions of dollars of commodities consumed in their production; the existing currency supply is wholly inadequate to make this exchange. The results are falling prices, the formation of combines and rings, the impoverishment of the producing class. We pledge ourselves that if given power we will labor to correct these evils by wise and reasonable legislation in accordance with the terms of our platform.

We believe that the powers of government—in other words of the people—should be expanded (as in the case of a postal service) as rapidly and as far as the good sense of an intelligent people and the teachings of experience shall justify to the end that oppression, injustice, and poverty shall eventually cease in the land.

While our sympathies as a party of reform are naturally upon the side of every proposition which will tend to make men intelligent, virtuous, and temperate, we nevertheless regard these questions—important as they are—as secondary to the great issues now pressing for solution, and upon which not only our individual prosperity, but the very existence of free institutions depend, and we ask all men to first help us to determine whether we are to have a Republic to administer, before we differ as to the conditions upon which it is to be administered, believing that the forces of reform this day organized will never cease to move forward until every wrong is righted and equal rights and equal privileges securely established for all the men and women of this country; we declare, therefore,

UNION OF THE PEOPLE.

1. That the union of the labor forces of the United States this day consummated shall be permanent and perpetual; may its spirits enter into all hearts for the salvation of the Republic and the uplifting of mankind?

2. Wealth belongs to him who creates it, and every dollar taken from industry without an equivalent is robbery. "If any will not work neither shall he eat." The interests of rural and civic labor are the same; their enemies are identical.

3. We believe that the time has come when the railroad corporation will either own the people or the people must own the railroads, and should the Government enter upon the work of owning and managing all railroads, we should favor an amendment to the Constitution by which all persons engaged in the Government service shall be placed under a civil-service regulation of the most rigid character, so as to prevent the increase of the power of the national administration by the use of such additional Government employees.

THE QUESTION OF FINANCE.

We demand a national currency, safe, sound, and flexible, issued by the General Government only, a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, and that without the use of banking corporations, a just, equitable, and efficient means of distribution direct to the people at a tax not to exceed per cent per annum, to be provided as set forth in the subtreasury plan of the Farmers' Alliance, or a better system; also by payments in discharge of its obligations for public improvements.

Let me say right here that this is the only weak point that Democrats or Republicans could ever find in the Populist platform. It has never been advocated in either branch of Congress, and by the action of the National Alliance in this city in January last it was eliminated. So the subtreasury plan is no longer a part of the doctrine of the party.

Mr. LINDSAY. How about the 2 per cent plan?

Mr. ALLEN. Does not the Senator from Kentucky know that the 2 per cent plan is the subtreasury plan? It is just as inseparable as the dog from the tail.

Mr. LINDSAY. I am glad to know it.

Mr. ALLEN. I am glad to inform the Senator.

Mr. KYLE. The Senator from Kentucky probably refers to the 2 per cent loan upon lands.

Mr. ALLEN. There is no such thing in the platform.

Mr. KYLE. That was the policy advocated by the late Senator from California, Mr. Stanford, and it was a Republican, not a Populist, doctrine.

Mr. ALLEN. That is not in here and never has been. Now, further—

We demand free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold at the present ratio of 16 to 1.

There is nothing there about maintaining the parity, such as you find in the involved phrases of the Democratic and Republican platforms.

Mr. LINDSAY. You are entitled to credit for that, no doubt.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; we are entitled to credit for something, if it is for nothing more than mere persistence.

We demand that the amount of circulating medium be speedily increased to not less than $50 per capita.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am following the Senator very carefully in his reading of the Populist platform. I find there are many excellent ideas in it—good things, many of them—and I should like to have the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the Senator expound some of them.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me finish reading the platform, and then I will expound it.

Mr. CHANDLER. At this particular point, about making the circulating medium $50 per capita, does the Senator mean that we should have $50 per capita of all kinds of money?

Mr. ALLEN. Of all kinds of money.

Mr. CHANDLER. And that that should be the limit?

Mr. ALLEN. That of gold, silver, and redeemable paper $50 per capita should be the amount to which the circulation should be brought.

Mr. CHANDLER. Gold, silver, and paper of all kinds?

Mr. ALLEN. No; not paper of all kinds; not national-bank issues. We do not want that kind of a circulating medium.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator's point is that there shall be in the circulating medium——

Mr. ALLEN. Legal-tender notes issued.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of all money $50 a head?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, I want to ask the Senator how, if a paper issue is necessary, we are going to get that money into circulation among the people.

Mr. ALLEN. By putting it out in the form of erecting public buildings, improving rivers and harbors and mill ponds up in New Hampshire and other places.

Mr. CHANDLER. And not in any other way?

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, no; a man must work for what he gets in this world.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is where I am disappointed, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLEN. I know you are disappointed. [Laughter.] It has become a popular thing for some men who do not know anything of the Populist party—and I have no reference to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], because I give him credit for keeping abreast of the times——

Mr. CHANDLER. I am studying all the time the Populist platforms and the Senator's speeches.

Mr. ALLEN. I know the Senator is. There is some hope, because the Senator has voted with us a few times. But it has been a popular thing among a certain class of statesmen who do not know anything of the Populist party to charge it with all kinds of vagaries.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator permit me to interject a remark here?

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. GRAY. We are all studying platforms. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWLEY. After you get up to $50 per capita and the circulation is more than double what it is now it does not make much difference whether you absolutely distribute some money at the back door of the Treasury every day or loan it without limit as to sum to anybody who comes along at 2 per cent per annum.

Mr. ALLEN. No; we do not advocate anything of the kind.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think my expression, "anybody who comes along," may be a little indefinite. They would probably use some discretion, but it is to be distributed among the people at a tax not to exceed 2 per cent per annum. I thought that meant a loan.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Connecticut was evidently in the cloakroom enjoying himself when I explained that matter.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was enjoying myself before I came in here.

Mr. ALLEN. I said to the Senate that that was the weak point, and the only weak point, in the Populist platform. Let me say to the Senator from Connecticut that I do not know of a Populist in public life who has ever advocated it. It is like the heresy of a 10 per cent tax on State banks that the Democrats have in their platform. It is like some heresies in the Republican platform. Now, the National Alliance, with whom that plank originated, removed it from its demands this winter in this city, at its national meeting.

Mr. GRAY. They postponed it.

Mr. ALLEN. No; they removed it as a part of the demands of that organization. It is no longer a part thereof.

Mr. GRAY. They did believe in it once, but they do not believe in it now.

Mr. ALLEN. The National Alliance believed in it. The Populist party never believed in it. It was weak enough to submit to the demands of the National Alliance, or to some members of the National Alliance, and put that plank in. Was not the Democratic party a little weak when it declared for the repeal of the 10 per cent tax on State bank issues?

Mr. GRAY. I have always been in favor of it.

Mr. ALLEN. A Democratic Congress voted it down.

Mr. GRAY. I am speaking of myself.

Mr. ALLEN. They would not have it.

Mr. GRAY. I am speaking of myself.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will ask the Senator, in view of the fact——

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator will not compel me to talk until 6 o'clock.

Mr. LINDSAY. I want to ask a very simple question. In view of the retraction of a small portion of this platform with regard to money, how does the Senator propose to get the $50 per capita into circulation—into the hands of the people?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator was evidently asleep when I was answering the question of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. I answered the Senator from New Hampshire as to that question a moment ago. Was the Senator from Kentucky sitting here at the time?

Mr. MILLS. Another gentleman looking for his $50 per capita. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINDSAY. The Senator from Nebraska told the Senator from New Hampshire that he did not intend to give the money to the people. Now, I ask him how does he intend to get it into circulation among the people?

Mr. ALLEN. How do you get your present volume of money in circulation among the people? How do you get it out? It is twenty-one dollars and sixty-odd cents now, according to Mr. Carlisle. How do you get it out? How was it got out in the first instance? That is something hard to solve, is it not? Suppose you go to building public buildings in Kentucky; suppose you pay pensions, pay salaries; improve the rivers and harbors of the country; improve Yellow Mill Pond in Connecticut.

Mr. KYLE. The difficulty is in getting enough.

Mr. ALLEN. The same as one of the appropriation bills proposes. How long would it be until the money would be in circulation? Make every man give an honest day's work—and I am afraid that condition my friend the Senator from Kentucky would not agree to—for the dollar he gets. Is there anything wrong about that? Is it anything hard to accomplish?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. There is another Senator who wants his $50. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. He will have to earn it if he gets it.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. ALLEN. Let me get through the platform.

Mr. CHANDLER. The railroads can be bought, and money can be used to buy the railroad and telegraph lines. I want to help out the Senator from Nebraska all I can.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not care about being helped out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state to my colleague that that will only take $11,000,000,000.

Mr. ALLEN. I prefer to appeal to the friends of a platform and never appeal to its enemies, even though they come as Greeks bearing gifts.

Let me go on with the platform, because I have started a school of education here which will prove valuable. I have been interrupted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY]——

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator is weary I will read the rest of the platform.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not weary. I never get weary reading it.

We demand a graduated income tax.

I think that was voted for here. I think the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] voted for it.

Mr. LINDSAY. What is that?

Mr. ALLEN. A graduated income tax. Did the Senator vote for it?

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes, but it was not graduated.

Mr. ALLEN. No, it was not.

We believe that the money of the country should be kept as much as possible in the hands of the people, and hence we demand that all State and national issues shall be limited to the necessary expenses of the Government, economically and honestly administered.

That seems to be a truism in political faith.

We demand that postal savings banks be established by the Government for the safe deposit of the earnings of the people and to facilitate exchange.

Then there follow some resolutions which are along the same line, but which are not a part of the platform.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will ask the Senator if the transportation clause is not sufficient to get the $50 into circulation, if that plank is carried out?

Mr. ALLEN. No. I hope the Senator will not become facetious or funny. I have explained to him that the money is to be put into circulation the same as all money is put into circulation; the same as the money that we now have in circulation was put out. It is not necessary or proper that the Senator from Kentucky should make sport or game of me as respects the platform of the party.

That ends the whole thing; that is all there is to it, and it is a revelation to Senators. Where is my friend the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] now? I thought he was here. My friend the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is here, and I will do him the credit of saying that I have not heard him repeat the statement in this Congress that Populists wanted an irredeemable paper money, and yet it comes from the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER], and other Senators, from time to time, that the Populist party wants an irredeemable paper money. Do you find it in the platform? That is as free from a demand of that kind as the Democratic or the Republican platform.

Have the Republican and the Democratic parties a monopoly of political knowledge? Mr. President, do you not suppose there are at least a few among the Populists who know that an irredeemable currency issued in limitless volume would ruin any country? I say any gentleman hereafter, after he has heard the platform read, must subject himself to the charge of mendacity if he repeats the statement that the party demands the issuance of irredeemable paper money.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Kansas has frequently been asked upon this floor, when he has been advocating the issue of paper money, what limit he would put to the issue, and he has never defined the limit. I never have understood the Senator from Kansas——

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. No; I mean the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], who sits opposite me now.

Mr. BAKER. The senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER]?

Mr. CHANDLER. The senior Senator from Kansas; the Populist Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BAKER. I was sure the Senator did not mean me.

Mr. CHANDLER. The senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] has been asked over and over again on this floor where he proposed to stop the issue of paper money. He has always said, "We intend to have enough of it."

Mr. ALLEN. That is right. What is wrong about that?

Mr. CHANDLER. He has answered in the same indefinite way when asked how he proposed to get the money out among the people. He said they would get it out somehow; and now the honorable Senator from Nebraska says that none of us ought to venture to say that the Populist party is in favor of the issue of unlimited paper currency. I point him to the senior Senator from Kansas, now sitting, as he has done much of late, upon the Democratic side of the Chamber, who has always refused to answer the question, and who to-day, as I understand it, is in favor of issuing unlimited paper currency.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think the senior Senator from Kansas—he can speak for himself—ever said that. I never heard him advocate it, and I feel quite confident he would have told me something during our acquaintance if he believed it.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the limit of the senior Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know where the Senator from Kansas——

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Nebraska says he has frequently talked with the senior Senator from Kansas, and he knows he is not in favor of an unlimited paper currency. How does he suppose the Senator from Kansas proposes to limit paper currency?

Mr. ALLEN. I suppose the Senator from Kansas proposes to be bound by the platform. I know nothing to the contrary. But what is the Republican limit of money, I ask the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Republican limit to the issue of money is that amount of paper money which may be redeemed at all times in gold or silver.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not talking of paper money. I am talking about all forms of money.

Mr. CHANDLER. All the paper money which can be safely issued, redeemable in gold or silver.

Mr. ALLEN. We agree. How are you going to redeem it—in silver?

Mr. CHANDLER. In gold or silver.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator redeem it in silver?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am a bimetallist myself. I am not for the free coinage of silver, nor am I for the single gold standard.

Mr. ALLEN. You buy one metal with the other.

Mr. CHANDLER. I stand halfway between the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] as I heard them debating the subject a little while ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator says this is an educational exercise, and I want a little education.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator needs it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no doubt of it, and the Senator from Nebraska can give it to me.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; I can give it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator admits two propositions—first, that we have about $2,000,000,000 of money. Is that correct?

Mr. ALLEN. I think there is something of that kind reported by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have about $25 per capita.

Mr. ALLEN. No, we have not that; but the Secretary of the Treasury——

Mr. GALLINGER. Let me make my statement and then the Senator can answer it, and we will have it all together.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the statement that we have $2,000,000,000 of all kinds of money. We have $25 per capita. If we have $50 per capita, we will have double the money in circulation. How is it to be supplied? From what source? Is it to be silver, paper, or gold; and where is it to come from?

Mr. ALLEN. Another Senator has been passing through a Rip Van Winkle sleep. I explained that to the colleague of the Senator from New Hampshire a moment ago, and I explained it to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. GALLINGER. I listened, but I did not comprehend it. Will the Senator kindly explain it to me?

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator want to know how it is to be got into circulation?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do very much wish to know.

Mr. ALLEN. It may be put out in circulation in various ways. It may be paid out in the construction of public works——

Mr. GALLINGER. Where will you get it before it is put out?

Mr. ALLEN. In the improvement of harbors and rivers. It may be put out at the rate of a billion dollars in a year if necessary, although I would not favor that.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is in opposition to the Omaha platform, which says we shall not spend any more money than is absolutely necessary for the economical administration of the Government. Where shall we get the money before we put it out?

Mr. ALLEN. Get it from the mines. Dig it out of the ground and take it to the mints and coin it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will take our mints just fifty years at their full capacity to mint silver enough to give us $2,000,000,000. How are we to get it?

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, no.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. It will not require any such length of time.

Mr. GALLINGER. We can coin $40,000,000 of silver a year, and it will take fifty years to give us enough.

Mr. ALLEN. It does not require anything of the kind, and if it did, let us increase the capacity of the mints.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would not be economy in administering the affairs of the Government.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator wanted to find some fault with the Populist party——

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. ALLEN. And he has failed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want information.

Mr. ALLEN. The Populist party wants gold and silver, and a paper currency redeemable as it is redeemable now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly.

Mr. ALLEN. In gold and silver.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. ALLEN. Increased by healthy and safe degrees to $50 per capita.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but you must double the present currency of the country of all kinds before you can have $50 per capita. How are you going to do it?

Mr. ALLEN. How are you going to do it?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLEN. I have said to the Senator that we would take gold and silver from the mines and coin them freely at the mints.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will take fifty years to do it.

Mr. ALLEN. It will not.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will, absolutely.

Mr. ALLEN. It will not.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire whence comes this scare of inflation if we can coin only $40,000,000 in a year?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all you can coin of silver.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to get along with my argument. That is all there is to the Populist platform, and this thing that has come in here like a ghost occasionally, which has been brought in by Republicans and Democrats, disappears when you come to read the platform.

Let us go into the earth, into the rocks, and take the gold and silver that are produced there and bring them to the mints and coin them freely, and coin them in sufficient quantities. Let us issue a volume of money, paper money, redeemable in gold and silver, in a quantity that experience proves the coin basis will safely carry.

What is wrong about that? Yet I repeat that the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER], and other Senators, whose names I do not now recall—I recall those particularly—have stated in this Chamber and asserted from time to time that what the Populists want is an irredeemable paper money. There is no excuse for you, gentlemen, if you assert it again.

Mr. BAKER. Have any of your speakers asserted that doctrine? Has any Populist speaker asserted that you want a large amount of paper money, and that it should not be redeemable in gold or silver at all? Have any of your speakers canvassed the country upon that proposition? Did the Senator ever hear Jerry Simpson make a speech, in which Jerry said——

Mr. ALLEN. I have heard him speak.

Mr. BAKER. That gold and silver should not be dug from the mountains, but that they should remain in the mountains, that paper money should be issued against them as they lay in the mountains, because the gold and silver in the mountains were more safe and less expensive than if they were piled up in the Treasury?

Mr. ALLEN. I never heard Mr. Simpson say that, and I do not believe he ever did say it.

Mr. BAKER. Has the Senator ever heard that?

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir; never.

Mr. BAKER. The Senator is no Populist.

Mr. ALLEN. I never heard Mr. Simpson say that. I have not the slightest doubt that the junior Senator from Kansas is honest in what he says. I would not question his honesty. I might be induced to question his intelligence on the subject. I have never heard a Populist make a speech of that kind. It may be that Mr. Simpson, after being out on a long campaign on the bleak prairies of Kansas with the junior Senator from that State, got into that peculiar frame of mind that would make him a little reckless in what he said, but I do not believe it.

Mr. BAKER. I never had the pleasure of being out with Jerry at night or at any other time. Jerry goes out at night, and I do not. Perhaps the Senator has been out with Jerry and knows his habits. I think so, at times, although I have no right to speak of it authoritatively.

Mr. ALLEN. No; the Senator knows but little.

Mr. BAKER. But when the Senator says that he or that his party is not in favor of irredeemable paper money he has not listened to Populist speakers in the State of Kansas and Populist speakers in the State of Nebraska, because they have asserted time and again that there should be no gold and no silver, and that our money should be paper money and nothing else, and based upon the credit of the Government and nothing else.

Mr. ALLEN. I thought I would chase the Senator from Kansas away.

Mr. BAKER. And when that has been asserted by public speakers and by men in the Populist party who are just as eloquent and able as the Senator from Nebraska, it is just as authoritative and we have just as much right to believe it is the policy of the Populist party as the hedging statement of the Senator at this time. I will ask the Senator——

Mr. ALLEN. No; I do not yield to the Senator for the purpose of making a speech.

Mr. BAKER. May I ask the Senator another question? Has he not sat in the Senate of the United States when bills were introduced by Populist Senators providing that there should be issued for the benefit of the people of this country a thousand dollars per capita, and that it should be printed upon silk paper or aluminium? Has he not listened to the reading of such bills?

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from Kansas is through with his speech, I will resume mine. I have never heard anything of the kind. I do not believe the Senator from Kansas ever has. He may have.

Mr. BAKER. Shall I get the bill for the Senator?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator can get anything he wishes. I do not care what he gets, if he is able to carry it.

Mr. BAKER. Would the Senator deny it if I produced the bill?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator can take the hot end of a poker if he wants to, so far as I am concerned. I do not care what he gets or what he carries.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. ALLEN. I would prefer to continue for a few minutes, and then I will yield to the Senator from New Hampshire. The interruptions have been quite numerous, and they have rather diverted my attention from the proper line of the argument I intended to make.

I wish to answer the junior Senator from Kansas, who thinks he knows a great deal of the Populist party and who knows little of other things, that I do not know of a Populist who has ever made a speech such as he mentions.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. No; I will not be interrupted any more.

Mr. BAKER. I have the RECORD here. Will the Senator not allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLEN. No; I will not be interrupted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield.

Mr. ALLEN. This snapping by the junior Senator from Kansas, like a coyote, and running into the grass after it has been done, I do not believe in.

I have never heard arguments of that kind in the State of Nebraska. I do not know, of course, what has occurred in Kansas. However, my knowledge of Kansas statesmen who are members of the Populist party does not lead me to believe that the statement of the junior Senator from Kansas can be borne out by the facts.

I know of fiat-money men in the Republican party. I know of Republicans who are suffering imprisonment in the penitentiary. I know of fiat-money men in the Democratic party. I know of Democrats who are suffering imprisonment in the penitentiary. My honorable friend the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] shakes his head. He says he does not; but I do. I have no doubt that there are Populists and Prohibitionists and all classes represented in the penal institutions of the country. I will not ask the junior Senator from Kansas, because he will answer me in my time; but does that make the Republican party responsible for the utterances of the fiat-money men in its ranks, or the Democratic party for the utterances of their fiat-money men? Is it a part of the Democratic or Republican faith? Do they stand sponsor for the conduct of those who have violated the laws and are in prison? No; and no one would hold them responsible.

Mr. BAKER rose.

Mr. ALLEN. I will not yield. Do they stand sponsor for the conduct of those who have violated the laws and been sent to prison? Yet the junior Senator from Kansas, who is a "funny man" as well a "smart man," and who is having fun, as he imagines, at the expense of the Populist party, by undertaking to make game of it, stands here and seriously asserts that that party is responsible for the utterance of every little cross-roads Populist orator who may be in the State of Kansas. The test of what a party is is what it promulgates by its official and recognized convention. Its platform is the test of its belief, and it must stand as the test of its belief until it is modified by the official action of the party.

Now I pass from that. I hope the time will not come again when any self-respecting gentleman will permit himself to stand in this Chamber and assert——

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. I will not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield.

Mr. BAKER. All right.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the time will never again come when any self-respecting gentleman will permit himself to stand in this Chamber and assert that the Populist party is in favor of an irredeemable currency.

The honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] yesterday read from a letter which had been sent out by bankers, the American Bankers' Association, on March 23, 1896. It appears in his remarks on page 6113 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday. They have not only done that but they have gone to greater lengths. The so-called Sound Money League of New York has undertaken to prescribe the course that shall be pursued by all the little newspapers. The National Bankers' Association is to influence the bankers throughout the country; they are to control the delegations to both the Republican and Democratic national convention, and see that they vote in the interest of the gold standard. Possibly my friend from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] might inform the Senate as to whether they have succeeded in Illinois or not. They are to control the delegations in the interest of the single gold standard of both old parties. The Senator from Delaware sees nothing wrong in that. That seems to be legitimate business in his view of the matter. Those men are to use the agencies which they possess, one chief agency being that of the relation of debtor and creditor, to squeeze the little banks, and through them their debtors, into accepting the single gold standard. That is not a conspiracy, is it? There is nothing wrong about it, I suppose.

But, Mr. President, they are not content with that. I have two letters from the so-called Sound Money League, sent to the editor of a Populist paper in my State, and by him sent to me. What do they propose to do? They are to furnish single gold standard literature free to the papers; they are to furnish editorials free, set up in plate work, so that the unsuspecting voters out on the farms and in the workshops may be misled into the belief that the article they may read was produced by the editor of their own paper. I have a specimen here from the president of the New Era Publishing Company:

KEARNEY, NEBR., May 12, 1896.

DEAR FRIEND: Herewith we hand you two circular letters we have received from the gold shylocks of New York.

We made an editorial note some time ago about circular of April 2, and send them to you, hoping you may use them in an effective way, should you have a chance.

Yours, respectfully, ROY W. RHONE, Kearney, Neb.

Senator W. V. ALLEN,
Washington, D. C.

Here are two other letters. The first is dated April 2, 1896, and is headed "Reform Club. Committee on sound currency."

Mr. President, every time one of those men uses the expression "sound money" he is guilty of a deliberate fraud and premeditated falsehood. He does not mean sound money; he means gold, and nothing but gold. He is guilty of false pretenses and of misleading the people when he says he is a "sound-money" man. Here is the letter:

52 WILLIAM STREET, New York, April 2, 1896.

DEAR SIR: In order to push the educational work for sound currency and to resist the efforts of free-coinage advocates to put this country on a silver basis, this committee has arranged to supply sound-currency matter to newspapers in certain States. We offer to supply it in two forms:

1. Sound-currency plates.—We will supply these through either the American Press Association, the Western Newspaper Union, the A. N. Kellogg Company, or the Century Press Company. A page is issued every four weeks; later we may issue as often as every two weeks.

That is, of course, when the Presidential campaign comes on.

There will be no charge for these plates; but you will have to pay expressage on them. All orders for plates must go through our office.

2. Ready prints.—If your paper is a ready print, and is printed by the Western Newspaper Union, A. N. Kellogg Newspaper Company, or the Nebraska Newspaper Union, or any of their branch offices, you can have from one to two columns of our matter inserted by notifying your company to that effect.

Inclosed herewith is a proof of the plate page which we are issuing this week. It is a fair sample of all of our matter. Inclosed are also order blanks containing information to assist you in ordering. All orders for plates should be sent direct to our office. Orders for ready-print matter may be sent to your ready-print printer. The plate and ready-print matter in most cases will probably be the same. Should you desire more than two columns per week of our matter in your ready prints, it is possible, though not probable, that your company can grant your request. By ordering at once you can receive matter on the inclosed page in plate form or in your ready prints.

Yours, truly,

CALVIN TOMKINS,
Chairman of the Executive Committee.

They are to corrupt the very sources of information that the people have.

Mr. GRAY. You only want your sort of education.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not talking about the sort of education.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Nebraska just now said he was conducting an educational campaign. Do you want to deny that right to anybody else?

Mr. ALLEN. No. I misapprehended the Senator's word. I thought he said "sort." I do not hear all things as distinctly as I should. No; but I would not go like a thief in the night, as these fellows have gone, and undertake to corrupt the editors of country papers by receiving this rot and trash at their hands and palming it off as the advocacy of sound-money principles upon the people. I would not do that.

Here is the other letter to which I have referred:

52 WILLIAM STREET, New York, May 8, 1896.

DEAR SIR: It is evident from letters constantly being received by us that many newspaper editors neither know where they can obtain sound currency matter nor the terms upon which it is supplied. Hence we repeat our offer of April 2.

Sound-currency plates.—We offer to all editors willing to use them a page of plates every two weeks. We pay for the plates, but do not pay expressage or freight. All orders for plates should be sent to us, but they can be filled by any office or branch office of the American Press Association, the A. N. Kellogg Newspaper Company, the International Press Association (Western Newspaper Union), or the Century Press Company. Each page contains several cartoons—mostly single column ones—and numerous short and carefully prepared articles.

Speech plates.—Supplied upon the same terms as our regular sound-currency plates, but issued only through the American Press Association. We can fill your order now, or at any time during the next six weeks, for speech of Carlisle at Chicago on April 15; of Judge Aldredge at Atlanta last year; or of MCCLEARY in Congress last February. These speeches are in great demand in all parts of the country. The first two are in full in one page each of nonpareil; MCCLEARY's has been cut down to one page. We expect to issue such future speeches as are likely to be in great demand, and as promptly as possible after delivery. Perhaps, also, we may decide to issue in this form such other speeches or pamphlets as are well fitted for such work. We do not expect to issue a page oftener than once every two weeks, but may do so if there is a sufficient demand and our funds will permit.

Ready prints.—If your paper is a ready print and is printed by the Western Newspaper Union, A. N. Kellogg Newspaper Company, Nebraska Newspaper Union, Chicago Newspaper Union, or the Sioux City Printing Company, or any of their branch offices, you can have two columns of our matter inserted every week by notifying your company to that effect. We will send our plates to any other ready-print company that has an opportunity and is willing to use them.

All of our matter is strictly nonpartisan. Discussion is devoted almost entirely to the standard of value and against the present 16 to 1 free-coinage proposition.

Inclosed herewith is a proof of the plate page which we are issuing this week. It is a fair sample of all of our matter. Inclosed are also order blanks containing information to assist you in ordering.

Yours, truly,

CALVIN TOMKINS,
Chairman of the Executive Committee.

What is the "ready print"? Here is some of the matter those fellows are sending out containing their political rot. [Exhibiting.] Here is what is printed at the top:

SOUND CURRENCY—REGULAR—NO. 2.

Issued once in two weeks and supplied free of charge by the sound currency committee of the Reform Club, 52 William street, New York City, to whom all orders should be addressed. Return used plates to the company from which they are received.

Here are the columns of plate matter, the first containing Mr. Carlisle's speech at Chicago and other matter of that kind, which are to be palmed off on the people as original matter of the editor to whom they may be sent.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator kindly permit a very brief interruption?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is there an offer in that letter to pay for the insertion of this matter?

Mr. ALLEN. None whatever.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well. Then the newspapers will not reprint this matter unless they are what you call "gold men."

Mr. ALLEN. It is matter which is sent out to be put in the paper as original matter and set up in form.

Mr. COCKRELL. Already set up in type.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; but I want to know, as it is not to be paid for, if the newspaper man can not put it in his paper in any way he pleases, or not put it in at all? If he puts it in, it is evidence that he is a gold man already.

Mr. ALLEN. It is evidence that he is either a gold man or an ignoramus or lazy and does not write his own editorials.

I shall abandon my purpose to discuss other vital principles of the Populist party, as this bill is to be voted on on Monday next at 5 o'clock, and other Senators desire to be heard.

Mr. BAKER. Will the Senator kindly yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ALLEN. Not for the purpose of passing a bill until I conclude. I shall conclude in a moment.

Mr. BAKER. I do not wish to pass a bill, but I should like to call the Senator's attention to a little bill which was introduced appropriating $67,000,000,000 of money since he has been a member of the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not propose to get into any further controversy with the Senator from Kansas. When I have any controversy with a man I want to know that he means to play fairly and be a man.

Mr. BAKER. I have the RECORD here.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator has not a bill unless it is a bill introduced by some person by request—he has not got a bill of the character of which he speaks. The Senator from Kansas is as persistent in his ignorance as a night moth in its desire for destruction, and eventually he will be scorched by his constant flitting around the fire. It is wonderful how he has discovered so much which is inexcusable in the Populist party. It is wonderful how it was reserved for him to arraign the Populist party as guilty of vagaries and inconsistencies.

Mr. President, the Populist party numbers 2,000,000 voters today, and I thank God a great majority of them are more intelligent than the junior Senator from Kansas has shown himself to be on this financial question. The party numbers 2,000,000 honest citizens, whose loyalty to the country and our institutions can not be doubted; men of as good education as the Senator or any other Senator in this Chamber. They are intense, Mr. President; they feel these wrongs; they know they exist; they have the manhood and the womanhood to sever their relations with the old parties and stand together for the protection and preservation of the American home, and they are not to be driven into silence nor quieted by the ridicule of extremely cunning, shrewd, and sharp men like the junior Senator from Kansas.

Mr. President, it was due that I should make these remarks respecting this charge against the Populist party of being in favor of the issuance of irredeemable currency. It has been here asserted from time to time until really some intelligent people began to believe that was a part of the Populist faith, but when any man looks at the platform which was promulgated in 1892, and upon which as modified by the action of the National Alliance last winter the party must stand until it meets in its national convention at St. Louis, he will see that the charge that it is in favor of the issuance of an irredeemable paper money is not true. Anyone who makes such an assertion after this must do so at the expense of being justly charged with knowledge of its falsity.

But, Mr. President, the Senator from New York yesterday wanted to know, as the junior Senator from New Hampshire wanted to know a while ago, where the money is to come from if we return to free coinage and increase the volume of our money. The junior Senator from New Hampshire said to me, with one of those sweet but crushing smiles of his, that it would take fifty years to increase the per capita circulation to $50.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it was to be in silver.

Mr. ALLEN. In silver, fifty years. Why, let us go to digging the gold and silver and constructing additional mints as rapidly as we are appropriating money for the construction of war vessels, and it will not be ten years until we have ample capacity to coin every dollar of gold and silver bullion that can be taken from the bowels of the earth.

I want to say to the Senator from New York, who is the distinguished leader of the gold element of his party, and always the able and conscientious champion of the present Administration, that when we increase the full capacity of our mints, when we restore silver to free coinage, as the Constitution intended it should be coined, when we restore it to the free coinage that was given to it by the Constitution and by the framers of our Government, when we stop the onward march of greed and begin to make provision for the homes of our country and lift the burdens from the people, we shall find that our industries and our commerce will expand sufficient to give us ample revenue under the present system of taxation to pay the ordinary expenses of the Government and discharge the national debt as rapidly as it inures.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I had intended to submit some remarks to-day in regard to the pending measure, but I am suffering with a headache, and find that I am unable to proceed. I ask to be allowed to proceed on Monday.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 673) granting a pension to Joseph R. West, brigadier and brevet major-general, United States Army Volunteers;

A bill (S. 888) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Capital Railway Company," approved March 2, 1895;

A bill (H. R. 75) granting a pension to Mary F. Davenport;

A bill (H. R. 485) for the relief of Kate Eberle, an Indian woman;

A bill (H. R. 1601) to amend the military record of John S. Evans;

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4785) to incorporate the National University. I desire to say in relation to this bill that the District Committee authorized the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to report it to the Senate. When the attention of the Select Committee to Establish the University of the United States was called to it, it was thought that it might, to a certain extent, be in conflict with the jurisdiction of that committee; and on my motion the bill was transferred from the jurisdiction of the District Committee to the Select Committee to Establish the University of the United States. That committee has reported the bill favorably, finding that there was no conflict whatever.

The passage of the bill is rendered necessary, for the reason that under the general law half a dozen individuals may incorporate themselves in the District into any kind of educational institution, no matter what it was. This privilege was used improperly, undoubtedly, in some cases; and then Congress passed a law which provided that all such educational institutions should call on the District Commissioners for a permit.

This national university has been in existence for a quarter of a century. It is a university of dignity and character, and has graduated thousands of students, and it did not like to be exposed to that humiliating position, and so called for an act of incorporation. The House committee reported it favorably, and it passed the House, and, as I say, both committees in the Senate—the one on the university and the other on the District of Columbia—have reported it. There is no possible objection to the bill, in my judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARTER in the chair). The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. HAWLEY. I make no objection. I wish to observe, however, that while they have a right to be called and have been called the National University for quite a number of years, they really have, as I understand, but two branches of education pursued there, though they have always been hoping that they would be enabled to do more.

Mr. FRYE. They propose, I think, to increase it somewhat.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not object. On the contrary, I am very earnestly in favor of the passage of this bill; but I want to suggest to the Senate that, if I can get recognition after the bill is passed, if it shall be passed, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the Calendar to consider private pension bills, as the end of the session is near at hand, probably, and it is important that they should be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Maine?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4785) to incorporate the National University.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. That the pending order be laid aside informally for that purpose?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, that the present order be laid informally aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the pending order be laid informally aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. PASCO. I ask if that request covers all the remaining work of the day—if we are to adjourn after the pension bills have been disposed of?

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not state it in that way; but if the Senator desires I will couple that statement with the request that nothing further shall be considered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that that may be the understanding, that no other business but pension bills shall be done to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] submits the request that it be understood that no other business but the consideration of pension bills be transacted for the remainder of the day.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has a bill which he is waiting for, to come from the House of Representatives.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not agree to the suggestion that nothing else shall be done to-day, because there are two conference reports which we want acted upon. Let the understanding be that no bills on the Calendar shall be disposed of except pension bills and appropriation bills.

Mr. HAWLEY. I believe the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives to the river and harbor bill has not yet been announced.

Mr. HILL. No.

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] withdraws his request. The question recurs to the request of the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that the Senate lay aside informally the pending order of business and proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The pension bills on the Calendar will be considered in their order.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HANNAH NEWELL BARRETT.

It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Hannah Newell Barrett, eldest daughter of Noah Harrod, late a soldier in Colonel Shephard's regiment and Captain Webb's company of Massachusetts troops in the war of the Revolution, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll of the United States the name of Mrs. Emily M. Van Derveer, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Ferdinand Van Derveer, at the rate of $75 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. BRICE, and Mr. HANSBROUGH were appointed.

MRS. MARY GOULD CARR.

The bill (H. R. 4354) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Committee on Pensions will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, before the word "dollars," strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased, at the rate of $75 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a mistake; the committee did not report that amendment.

Mr. HILL. That is the case of the widow of General Carr?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is; but the amendment is a mistake. The committee did not make that recommendation.

Mr. HILL. I wish to detain the Senate but a moment. I think that this pension should be $75 a month. That is the action which the committee ought to have taken, in my opinion. I should like to have the Secretary read the House report.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it will not be necessary to take time to do that, if I may make a statement. As chairman of the Committee on Pensions I very cordially concurred in the wish of the Senator from New York that this pension should be placed at $75 a month. General Carr rendered very conspicuous service. But I will say to the Senator that the reason why the committee did not report it was because I did not have quite time to canvass the committee in regard to it, and we have not had a committee meeting for a few days.

Mr. HILL. General Carr was very early in the service and he continued until the close of the war, finally a brigadier-general and then a major-general. He served gallantly during all the war. I had personal acquaintance with him. He was for four years secretary of state of New York, elected by the State to serve during my term as governer. He was a prominent candidate for governor. His widow is in very moderate circumstances. The case is a very strong one. He was a man prominent in all the affairs of our State and a faithful and gallant soldier. She is a most deserving widow and has the care of an invalid daughter, requiring her constant attention. Seventy-five dollars a month is frequently given and this is such a case. I move to amend the bill, in line 7, by striking out "fifty" and inserting "seventy-five"; so as to make the amount $75.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. CANNON, Mr. ROACH, and Mr. GALLINGER were appointed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the action of the other House on the sundry civil appropriation bill may be laid before the Senate. I will state briefly that the House rejected the conference report and then receded from certain amendments, and have asked for a further conference upon the remaining disagreements in the bill. I desire to move that the Senate insist upon its amendments still disagreed to and agree to the conference asked on the part of the House. I presume there will be no objection to that course, although I understand there was a unanimous agreement that no business except what had been agreed upon should be transacted. It is only a formal matter.

Mr. FRYE. Conference reports were excepted.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is very manifest that there will be nothing done except by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives concurring in some and nonconcurring in other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7664) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments and agree to the further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

MRS. GEORGE PAULS.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to have present consideration of the bill (S. 2117) for the relief of Mrs. George Pauls. I have had two letters from the Secretary of State in relation to the case. I have one of them in my hand, in which he says:

At the instance of the German ambassador at this capital, I desire to call your attention to S. 2117, Calendar 623, being a bill for the relief of Mrs. George Pauls.

I earnestly concur with Baron Thielmann in the hope that the bill may be enacted by the Senate without delay and sent to the House with a view of its becoming a law at the present session.

Very respectfully, yours, RICHARD OLNEY.

I reported the bill from the Committee on Foreign Relations. It seems to me a plain case. The German bark was lying at her wharf at Wilmington, N. C. The Colfax, a revenue cutter, was lying at an adjoining wharf; no steam up. They undertook to turn the bow of the Colfax out to sea. They neglected to fasten a rope, so that it could not go too far. They did not succeed, at any rate, in fastening it. The result was that the Colfax floated down into the German bark, the rigging got entangled, and Pauls, the husband of this woman, as was his duty, went out on the cathead of his ship to disengage the rope, and was thrown overboard and drowned. It seemed to be entirely the fault of the cutter that he was drowned, and not his own, because he was doing what he was obliged to do as a sailor.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments, in line 7, after the word "by," to strike out "the neglect on the part of officers of the United States" and insert "a collision with the United States"; and in line 10, after the word "Carolina," to insert "in full for all damages therefrom"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $5,000 to Mrs. George Pauls, widow of George Pauls, whose death was occasioned on May 8, 1896, by a collision with the United States revenue cutter Colfax, in the harbor of Wilmington, N. C., in full for all damages therefrom.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF GOVERNOR ALTGELD'S SPEECH.

Mr. COCKRELL. On the 14th of this month, at the instance of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], the speech of Hon. John G. Carlisle before the workingmen of Chicago, Ill., delivered April 15, 1896, was printed as a document. I ask now that the reply of Governor Altgeld, of Illinois, may likewise be printed as a document.

Mr. CULLOM. I think this practice is a very bad one, but as the Senator from Wisconsin asked and obtained consent that the speech of the Secretary of the Treasury should be published as a document, I am not disposed to object to the publication of its answer, whatever it may be.

Mr. HILL. The only question that occurs to me is this: Of course one is an official of the Government; and while the speech was not made in an official capacity, yet possibly that courtesy was due to an officer of the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is the speech of the governor of a sovereign State, one of the United States.

Mr. HILL. But not a United States official.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from New York will not object.

Mr. HILL. I have not the slightest objection. I merely make that distinction.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to say that I fully agree with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] that this is a very bad practice, and the original precedent I think a very bad one. I hope this request will be agreed to, and that the precedent will die out with the agreement to this request.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has been a practice immemorial, I desire to say to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, because I have paid some attention to it, to print important publications as documents by order of the Senate, and where there is no abuse of it—anything can be abused—I see no objection to the principle of publishing important papers, that we may have the use of them.

Mr. CULLOM. The worst precedent I know of is the publication of Henry George's book.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was not under a permission to print, but it was published in a speech.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that was a pretty hard strain on the practice.

Mr. CHANDLER. That went into the RECORD as a part of several speeches.

Mr. CULLOM. I know it did.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is not what is asked to be done here.

Mr. HARRIS. My objection is not to printing important documents; but I think a request to publish as a document a political speech, I do not care by whom made, long after its making and made elsewhere than in the Senate, is a bad practice. But as one speech has been published, I hope the other will be. However, I trust the practice will die with this action.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri a question. The Senator from Wisconsin, who asked to have the speech of the Secretary of the Treasury published, agrees with the speech and indorses the sentiments therein expressed. Do I understand the Senator from Missouri with equal cordiality and positiveness to indorse the speech of Governor Altgeld?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not read his speech, but I have no doubt I indorse it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator thinks he will add his approbation?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no doubt I will indorse it.

Mr. BAKER. I hold in my hand a speech delivered——

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us dispose of this question.

Mr. BAKER. I may want to object.

Mr. COCKRELL. Object if you want to.

Mr. BAKER. I do not want to object just yet. I hold in my hand an answer both to Mr. Carlisle's speech and the speech of Governor Altgeld. It is of about the same length as either one of them, and I ask that it may be printed. It is a speech by a very eminent man. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD at the same time.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is not a request to have Governor Altgeld's speech printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ALLEN. Whose speech is it that the Senator from Kansas has?

Mr. BAKER. Jacob L. Green's.

Mr. ALLEN. Who is Jacob L. Green?

Mr. BAKER. He lives at Hartford, Conn.

Mr. ALLEN. What is the character of the speech?

Mr. BAKER. I should call it a pretty honest money speech. I presume the Senator would call it a dishonest money speech.

Mr. ALLEN. What is the general character of it? I do not care anything about——

Mr. BAKER. It is the same as Mr. Carlisle's—upon the money question.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall object to Mr. Jacob L. Green's speech being printed, because he is a private citizen.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Altgeld is no more than that, I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. He soon will be no more than a private citizen.

Mr. ALLEN. No; he is at present governor of the State of Illinois.

Mr. BAKER. Then I object to Mr. Altgeld's speech being printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri that the speech of Governor Altgeld in reply to Secretary Carlisle be printed as a document.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is not present. My impression is that when the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] asked the Senator from Colorado whether there would be any objection to printing Mr. Carlisle's speech, the Senator from Colorado said he would not object, but that he would ask to have Governor Altgeld's speech printed as an offset to it when he got a copy of it. I only state that as one of the reasons why, perhaps, it is only fair, as the Senator from Colorado is not present, to allow this speech to be printed.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that the Senator from Missouri requests unanimous consent. The Chair understands that the Senator makes a motion that the speech be printed as a document.

Mr. COCKRELL. I made the motion, as the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER] made a personal objection.

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to supplement the statement of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] by saying that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] repeated the conversation he had with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and he also told me that he had submitted it to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] before asking that the speech of Mr. Carlisle should be printed as a document. The Senator from Wisconsin said he responded to the Senator from Colorado that he had no objection whatever to Governor Altgeld's speech being printed as a document.

Mr. BAKER. Owing to the courtesy of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], I withdraw any objection I made to the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am very much obliged.

Mr. BURROWS. Of course I do not know what the practice of the Senate may be or has been heretofore, but I agree with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. The proceeding is, it seems to me, most extraordinary and very dangerous. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether the speech of Governor Altgeld is to be printed for the use of the Senate? Is it the purpose of this order to inform the Senate?

Mr. COCKRELL. As a matter of course, the same number of copies as in the case of any other document will be printed, and they will go to the document room, where any Senator can get copies.

Mr. CULLOM. How many copies will be printed?

Mr. COCKRELL. The usual number—1,700, I believe.

Mr. FRYE. It can go through the country in indefinite quantities.

Mr. BURROWS. If this document is to be printed because it contains superior information to that possessed by other American citizens and will enlighten the Senate, and the Senate needs it in the course of its legislation, that is one thing, but if it is proposed to be published, as I apprehend the other speech was published, for political ends, not for the use of the Senate but simply to get free entrance to the mails and distribution, then I think it ought not to be done.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the Senator from Michigan will permit Mr. Carlisle to go to Chicago and make a political speech, and when the governor of the State in which he has gone makes a reply to it, the Senator would refuse to have his speech printed.

Mr. BURROWS. My friend the Senator from Missouri misunderstands me. If I had been present and had known of the request to have Secretary Carlisle's speech printed as a document for the use of the Senate or for free distribution, I should have objected to it unless the traditions of the Senate compelled it to be done. No such thing is ever done in the House of Representatives. Political speeches are not published as documents by the authority of the House of Representatives. Members very frequently allude to speeches, read them as a part of their own remarks, or have them entered as a part of their remarks by the consent of the House, but not within my knowledge have political speeches been printed at public expense as public documents and printed to furnish material for campaign purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would the Senator prefer to have this speech printed in the RECORD?

Mr. BURROWS. I have not made any objection at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. I would much prefer to have it go into the RECORD.

Mr. BURROWS. I have simply called attention to the fact that I think the practice is a pernicious one. I join with the Senator from Tennessee in the hope that this will be the end of it if that is the practice. Then I also desire to know of the Senator from Missouri how many copies he proposes to have printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. The law prescribes the number. I am not making a proposition about it.

Mr. BURROWS. How many is the usual number?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the number is 1,700, but I am not positive.

Mr. GALLINGER. One thousand nine hundred.

Mr. HARRIS. I think it is 1,900; I am not sure. It is in that neighborhood, however.

Mr. COCKRELL. That number is for the Senate and the House. Each Senator will get two or three copies.

Mr. BURROWS. I have said all I care to say. I do not wish to object, but I think the practice is an exceedingly pernicious one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri that the speech of Governor Altgeld shall be printed as a document?

Mr. HARRIS. It is to be printed as a document and not in the RECORD?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not to go into the RECORD.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope we will never do it again.

Mr. CULLOM. So do I.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am very glad this colloquy has occurred, because I confess I felt great dissatisfaction with the course taken in the case of the publication of the speech of the Secretary of the Treasury at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. It was entirely improper. I very gravely doubt whether two wrongs will make a right. Still it looks like a great hardship to exclude Governor Altgeld's speech at this time. I hope the example will not be repeated in the future.

I think the distinction drawn by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] is entirely proper. Any paper that gives valuable information to the Senate should be printed as a document; but political speeches made elsewhere certainly are not the proper subject-matter to be included in the official documents of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has repeatedly had letters and speeches of foreigners, eminent gentlemen abroad discussing the financial question, printed as documents. I have myself had one or two printed. The Senator from Colorado the other day——

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if they did not come in the form of memorials or petitions?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, Mr. President. They were simple discussions of the subject; and they were presented and requests made that they should be printed as documents. I call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to a case which perhaps he will remember. The Senator from Colorado offered a letter from Mr. Benjamin Butterworth in favor of bimetallism accompanied by a letter to Mr. Butterworth on that subject, which Mr. Butterworth thought was an excellent discussion of the silver question. So he wrote a letter embodying the letter to him. They were printed as a document.

I remember that at the last session of Congress two documents, one the speech of Mr. Giffen, president of the British Agricultural Society, were printed, I think, on the joint motion of the Senator from Colorado and myself, accompanied by the letter on silver of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. It was thought that those documents would enlighten the Senate upon the general subject of the free coinage of silver. So such documents have been printed repeatedly, and of course it is much better that they should be printed as documents in this way than that they should be put into the RECORD, as in the House of Representatives the whole book of Henry George was put into the RECORD, divided up among various members, each one putting in a part; and so several speeches have been inserted in the RECORD in the House of Representatives.

I think it desirable that the RECORD should be kept free from these bulky documents, but I do not think any great harm has been done by the printing in special form of anything that has been printed hitherto. I do not think any harm has been done by printing Secretary Carlisle's speech, and I certainly think we can stand the argument of Governor Altgeld.

Mr. CULLOM. The feature of this matter that I think makes it objectionable is that a Senator gets hold of a speech made by somebody outside, apparently without any other purpose than to get it into an official form, so that it can be franked, and comes in here and asks that it be made a public document. That movement is followed by another Senator asking the same privilege, because the speech that he asks shall be printed is an answer to the other one already printed. If we are going to begin the practice, whenever we find an important speech which we think should be made a public document, of an individual Senator coming in and asking that it shall be printed, we will have 10,000 public documents of that sort, of a political nature, piling up here, and to no good purpose, in my judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]? The Chair hears none, and the speech will be printed as a document.

ELBRIDGE M'FADDEN.

Mr. FRYE. As I shall be called away on important business the first of the week, I should like to secure the passage of another little bill. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. 5999) to correct the military record of Elbridge McFadden.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion and grant an honorable discharge to Elbridge McFadden, late of Company I, Thirty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BONDS, ETC., OF ARIZONA TERRITORY.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3161) amending and extending the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act approving with amendments the funding act of Arizona," approved June 25, 1890, and the act amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto approved August 3, 1894.

There bing no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was that bill reported?

Mr. WHITE. A very short time ago, I think.

Mr. PERKINS. It was reported from the Committee on Territories yesterday.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report has not been laid on my table.

Mr. PERKINS. The report is printed, and the Secretary will read it for the Senator's information.

Mr. COCKRELL. I can understand much better when I have the report myself. Does the report explain the bill?

Mr. PERKINS. I so understand. I will say that I introduced the measure more especially at the request of the Delegate from Arizona, and it is to correct some informality. The committee examined it very carefully, and from those who have stated the matter to me I learn it is a very proper measure.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. DAVIS May 22, 1896:

The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred Senate bill 3161, having considered the same, hereby adopt House Report No. 1931 in support of a bill identical in tenor, and recommend the passage of Senate bill aforesaid.

[House Report No. 1931, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred House bill 8885, beg leave to submit the following report:

The act of Congress entitled "An act approving, with amendments, the funding act of Arizona" became a law June 25, 1890, and authorized the funding of all Territorial, county, municipal, and school-district indebtedness of Arizona which had accrued and would accrue, with the interest thereon, until and including December 31, 1890, into 5 per cent bonds, and under the provisions of the act a loan commission, consisting of the governor, secretary of the Territory, and Territorial auditor, was created to fund indebtedness under the terms of the act.

The purpose of the law was to effect an annual saving in interest and place the Territory upon a cash basis. The floating indebtedness of the Territory represented by warrants bore 10 per cent interest, and upon that indebtedness an immediate saving was had of 5 per cent. The average rate of interest on the bonded indebtedness of the Territory was 8 per cent, and the operation of the law effected a saving of 3 per cent upon all indebtedness funded. Only such bonded indebtedness could be funded as had matured or was voluntarily surrendered by the holders thereof.

A supplemental act of Congress was passed and approved August 3, 1894, extending the time for funding outstanding warrants for Territorial expenses only until December 31, 1895. The object of the present bill is to further extend the provisions of the funding act approved June 25, 1890, until January 1, 1897, so as to permit and authorize the funding of such outstanding indebtedness as might have been funded under the original act had the same been surrendered before the act had lapsed.

It is not proposed to fund any indebtedness which could not have been funded under the original act had said indebtedness been presented in time.

No new indebtedness is proposed to be funded in excess of the limit prescribed by law. In authorizing the funding of the outstanding liabilities the act also validifies the indebtedness already funded and authorized to be funded, so as to prevent the possibility of repudiation of bona fide obligations.

The eighteenth legislature of Arizona unanimously memorialized Congress to validate securities about which doubt existed.

Upon investigation the committee believe the legislation beneficial and wise and in the interest of good government, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TWYMAN O. ABBOTT.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2526) for the relief of Twyman O. Abbott.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 4, after the word "directed," to insert "out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated"; and after the words "sum of," in line 7, to strike out the words "twenty-seven thousand seven hundred and forty-eight" and insert "ten thousand nine hundred and sixty-seven"; so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Twyman O. Abbott, of Tacoma, State of Washington, his heirs or legal representatives, the sum of $10,967.75, in full and final settlement of his claim for damages sustained by reason of the breach of a certain contract for lease of a building and ground for post-office purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $27,748.75 is hereby appropriated for the purpose of paying the above claim.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The signature of the Vice-President was announced to the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR HASTINGS, MICH.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 948) empowering and directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish four pieces of condemned cannon to the city of Hastings, Mich.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLONEL HAINS'S STATEMENT BEFORE COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. WHITE. I rise for the purpose of correcting an error in a document printed by the Senate in the report of a hearing before the Commerce Committee of the Senate on the subject of a deep-water harbor in southern California, of which we have heard considerable. The testimony of Colonel Hains, on page 29, contains the following statement:

The fact that they use these wharves so much without a breakwater is pretty good evidence that they need very little protection from the outside. I think that a breakwater made of plank would accomplish the purpose.

I received a letter from Colonel Hains this morning, calling attention to the error, and I desire to correct it. He wrote me as follows:

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Baltimore, Md., May 22, 1896.

MY DEAR SENATOR WHITE: My attention was called a few days ago to the speech made by you in the Senate on May 9 relative to the deep-sea harbor in southern California, in which you quote certain remarks made by me at the hearing before the Committee on Commerce. These remarks were taken by the stenographic reporter, but they were never submitted to me for revision, and he has written them out as he doubtless understood them. I refer to the quotation on page 5527 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 11, 1896, in which I am quoted as saying that "I think that a breakwater made of plank would accomplish the purpose." That expression was not made by me. I said, "I think that a breakwater made of that plan" (referring to the plan hung on the wall) "would accomplish the purpose."

The reporter left out the word "that" in front of the word "plan," and attached the letter "k" to the word "plan," which has given the sentence an entirely different meaning from what was intended. I suppose it is too late to make any correction of the sentence now, but I write this in order to show you that I did not make use of such an absurd expression as quoted from the stenographer's report.

Very truly, yours, PETER C. HAINS.

Hon. S. M. WHITE, Washington, D. C.

Colonel Hains is a distinguished officer, and of course desires to be technically accurate, and I make this statement so that it may be found corrected in the pages of the RECORD.

LOUIS V. HOUSEL.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2336) to place on the retired list of the Navy Louis V. Housel, late lieutenant of the Regular Navy.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BATE. Was that bill reported by a committee?

Mr. COCKRELL. It was reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BATE. And recommended?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIGHTS OF PURCHASERS UNDER MORTGAGES.

Mr. HILL. There is one more bill I should like to have taken up and considered. It is Senate bill 1832. While the title is a very broad one, it relates simply to one particular railroad. It has been unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1832) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That whenever any mortgage made by the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company under and by virtue of acts of Congress is foreclosed in any court of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and any sale of the road, equipment, lands, franchises, privileges, and other rights and property covered by said mortgage is made under a decree or decrees of such courts, the purchaser at any such sale or sales and their associates or assigns shall constitute a new company, which shall have and shall be entitled to hold and possess the franchises and property so sold, and to exercise the same rights, powers, privileges, grants, and franchises, including the franchise to be a corporation, granted by the act of Congress approved July 27, 1866, incorporating the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, and by acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, which were owned and possessed by said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, or said mortgagees at the time of such decree of foreclosure; and the incorporation as hereby provided shall be completed and become effective whenever the said purchasers and their associates or assigns shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a certificate of incorporation hereunder, duly acknowledged, specifying the name of such new corporation, its president, and the names of its directors, the amount of its proposed capital stock and bonds, together with certified copy of the decree or decrees ratifying such sale; but nothing in this act shall make such purchasers and their associates or such new corporation liable for any debts or claims or contracts of the old corporation not expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale: Provided, That the amount of the proposed issue of stock of such new corporation shall not exceed the aggregate amount which the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company has already issued and is now outstanding, except that said corporation may issue an additional amount of stock which, with the stock heretofore issued, shall not exceed the aggregate amount heretofore authorized by Congress, and such additional stock shall not be issued except for money, labor, or property, estimated at its actual cost value, in exchange for such stock at its full or par value: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as making any additional grant of lands or other franchises to such successor corporation, or as a waiver of any rights of the United States now existing to enforce any forfeiture of lands heretofore granted to the said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, or as in any manner affecting the vested rights of any settler or settlers on any of the lands heretofore granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company or of any purchaser or purchasers of said lands from said company.

SEC. 2. That Congress shall at all times have the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to inquire of the Senator from New York if he would have any objection to an amendment to this bill providing that this new company shall be responsible for any moneys that may be recovered by any parties on any warranty issued by the old company where the lands were found not to belong to the company, so as to protect the purchasers?

Mr. HILL. The Senator will recollect that we had this whole question before the Judiciary Committee; and I suggest that that can be done in the House of Representatives.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to state, in order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the two bills before the Judiciary Committee, that one was relating to the Atlantic and Pacific and the other relating to the Northern Pacific.

Mr. HILL. The other is a very large matter.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I know, but at the same time I simply desire to state that since the Northern Pacific bill has been reported I have come to the conclusion that there ought to be, as to that bill at least, if not as to this, a provision so as to protect the parties who purchased land and hold warranty deeds from the old company and never got the lands.

Mr. HILL. I will assist the Senator in that.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not necessary to do that on this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do not wish to embarrass this bill, and perhaps there may be circumstances which render it unnecessary to place such a provision in this bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. This bill simply authorizes the purchasers under mortgage to enjoy and use what they have purchased.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from New York would oblige me if he would add to the title the words "concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad."

Mr. HILL. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad."

OWNERS OF BRIG TALLY-HO.

Mr. PASCO. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 337) to refer the claim of the owners of the brig Tally-Ho to the Court of Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not object to this bill, but I suggest that I shall move to adjourn after the bill is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 25, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 23, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will be considered as approved.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. The privileged question is contained in the document which I send to the desk.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker, I object to the approval of the Journal, and call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM] objects to the approval of the Journal.

Mr. HOWARD. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. This is a question of the highest privilege. The question is on the approval of the Journal.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move the approval of the Journal, and on that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the Journal was approved.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. I send the privileged matter to the Clerk's desk, and ask that it be read, after which I desire to address the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

I do impeach Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, of high crimes and misdemeanors on the following grounds:

1. That he has sold or directed the sale of bonds without authority of law.
2. That he sold or aided in the sale of bonds at less than their market value.
3. That he directed the misappropriation of the proceeds of said bond sales.
4. That he directed the Secretary of the Treasury to disregard the law which makes United States notes and Treasury notes redeemable in coin.
5. That he has ignored and refused to have enforced the "antitrust law."
6. That he has sent United States troops into the State of Illinois without authority of law and in violation of the Constitution.
7. That he has corrupted politics through the interference of Federal office-holders.
8. That he has used the appointing power to influence legislation detrimental to the welfare of the people: Therefore

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to ascertain whether these charges are true, and if so——

Mr. STEWART. I rise to a question of order. This is not a question of privilege, and I object to the reading.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading, as follows:

to report to the House such action by impeachment or otherwise as shall be proper in the premises. And said committee shall have authority to send for persons and papers.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration. At this late hour of the session I think it is hardly worth while to go into that matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine raises the question of consideration.

The question was taken; and the House refused to consider the question of privilege.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized on a conference report.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire the Clerk to read amendment No. 9. The House is dividing on that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read amendment No. 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

(9) For court-house and post-office at Little Rock, Ark.: For additional amount to construct an addition to the United States court-house and post-office and enlarging judge's chamber and the offices of the marshal and clerk of the circuit and district courts, and for an elevator, $43,000.

The SPEAKER. The amendment No. 9 was disposed of.

Mr. CANNON. Then I ask for the reading of amendment No. 10.

The Clerk read as follows:

(10) For constructing a bathroom and lavatory in the basement of the post-office building at Sioux Falls, S. Dak., $300.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same.

The question was taken, and the motion to recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

(11) For court-house and post-office at Los Angeles, Cal.: For additions to and alterations in the court-house and post-office building, $12,000.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McLACHLAN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon the members of this body seemed determined to vote down every appropriation proposed in the amendments of this bill on general principles. It is possible that some of these amendments have merit, and to vote them down on general principles may be doing grave injustice to the locality in which the improvement is sought to be made. I believe such to be the case with reference to the proposed amendment providing an appropriation of $12,500 for the improvement of the post-office facilities in the city of Los Angeles, Cal. I desire to state briefly the condition of affairs in that city. About eight years ago provision was made for the erection of a Government building in that city at a cost of $100,000, when it was a small place and contained but a few thousand people. Since that time the city of Los Angeles has had a marvelous increase in population, until to-day it is a city of upward of 100,000 population. Its growth has simply been marvelous. The business of the post-office has increased in the same proportion, until during the last fiscal year the revenues of the Government amounted to over $160,000, and the increase in the revenues during the first quarter of this fiscal year is sufficient to warrant me in saying that the revenues to the Government from that source alone will be over $180,000 during the present year.

The post-office is now conducted in the first story of the Government building, and is wholly inadequate for the proper performance of the vast amount of labor required in the proper management of that office. The Postmaster-General, recognizing the increased business at the post-office in Los Angeles, has recently provided a large additional force, and this fact emphasizes more strongly than ever the cramped quarters in which the large business was required to be performed. The Post-Office Department, through its inspectors, has duly reported that the basement of the public building at Los Angeles could be properly improved so as to make a suitable addition to the present post-office facilities for the sum of $12,500. That is the amount asked for in the amendment now under consideration. We do not ask for this appropriation for the purpose of enlarging the building by making additions, but simply to improve and fit up the basement of the building now in existence.

Mr. HENDERSON. It ought to be done.

Mr. McLACHLAN. Mr. Speaker, it is not in the line of additional improvements that we ask for the amount named in this amendment, and the objections raised to many of the amendments that have been adversely voted upon by this House do not apply in this case. If this amendment does not prevail, and this amount is not allowed for the improvement of the basement of the Government building already in Los Angeles, it will be necessary to move the post-office from its present location to other quarters at a large annual expense to the Government for rent in the quarters so procured. The rent that the Government would be required to pay in a single year for proper quarters for our post-office in that city would almost, if not quite, equal the amount asked for in this amendment; and it is therefore economy on the part of the Government to make proper provision for improvements in its own building. Mr. Speaker, I submit in all candor that this is a just provision, and should be voted upon favorably by the members of this House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a single word. I indorse what the gentleman says. This appropriation is not fairly within the line of public-building appropriations. The building is occupied, and from the extraordinary growth of the city they have got to fit up the basement so as to do the public business, or else they have got to go and rent quarters outside.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is economy to do it.

Mr. CANNON. If it was not for the fitting up and alteration—that means the cutting out of a door here and there—this appropriation could be paid from the general appropriation for repairs; but, under the technical rulings of the technical Comptroller of the Treasury, it is not available for that purpose. In my judgment it can be done without sacrifice of principle, and it ought to be done.

Mr. TERRY. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the condition which has been described as existing at Los Angeles is exactly the condition at Little Rock.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. I acknowledge it.

Mr. TERRY. But your side voted it down.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, there are 150 just such cases before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CANNON. No, sir; so far as I know there is not one such case.

Mr. HICKS. We have them, though.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have been in Los Angeles and know this building and know the city. It has grown from a little village until it is now the San Francisco of Southern California—a large, aggressive city, transacting the great business of that part of the beautiful fruit and flower region of this country. The people there need this improvement. It ought to be made. It is necessary for the transaction of the business of the city, and it will be economy for the Government to grant this appropriation.

Mr. MORSE. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to give me two minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I give the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. MORSE. I have in my memory at least two cases that are of equal importance to this. One is St. Albans, Vt., where the roof of the building is burned off. Another is at Topeka, Kans., where they are doing the post-office business in the cellar, and where they are crowded badly—have entirely inadequate facilities for the transaction of the post-office business. As a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I say now that we have many cases before our committee as meritorious as this, and if we are not going to vote the others we ought not to vote this one. We ought to treat them all alike. And I object to the way in which this and all these bills come here as riders on an appropriation bill from the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says he knows several places where they are doing post-office business in the cellar. This $12,000 is asked to enable the post-office at Los Angeles to do just that very thing—to fit the basement of the building for use.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I hope this side of the House will vote in favor of this California proposition, because it is meritorious; and I think that is the ground on which these appropriations ought to be considered.

The question being taken on the House receding from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 40.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would not do that.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum is made. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-one gentlemen present—a quorum.

Mr. MORSE. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused, only 4 members voting in favor thereof.

So the House receded from its disagreement and concurred in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For court-house and post-office at Martinsburg, W. Va.: For completion of approaches, $5,000.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON].

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I hope I may have the attention of the House for a simple statement with regard to this amendment. Here is a public building that has been erected, finished, and paid for, and the only thing necessary is the completion of the approaches. This building has been finished over a year and is occupied. The municipal regulations of the city of Martinsburg require every property owner to put in front of his property the necessary walks. That requirement has been sustained by the courts of our State. The Government has persistently disregarded the requirement for the putting down of these walks, and to-day we are in the position there that men who have to attend the courts that are held in that building are compelled to do so by walking over pine boards. This is an item of $5,000 only, and that is all that is necessary to complete the approaches to this building. I hope the House will concur in the amendment.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I wish the gentleman from Illinois would give me two minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, there is no question that many of these cases are meritorious, but, as I said yesterday, the same is true of at least forty other cases that are not included in this bill, and out of forty or fifty bills pending before our committee there are many cases very much more meritorious than this. There is no absolute necessity for this appropriation. Still I would favor it if it came here in a legitimate way, with other measures quite as deserving; but I oppose all of these appropriations, with one or two exceptions where there is an absolute necessity, upon principle.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to ask the gentleman a question of parliamentary law. Does he think that this particular item is one that should come directly before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I think so. If it belongs to the Committee on Appropriations, that is another matter.

Mr. SAYERS. I just asked the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. MORSE. If you are going to pass these appropriations for public buildings in this way, you might as well abolish the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. TAWNEY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Maine a question. Is there a bill pending before your committee for this purpose?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not recollect.

Mr. TAWNEY. If your committee had reported a bill of this kind would there be any objection at all, under the circumstances stated by the gentleman from West Virginia, to the House passing an appropriation of $5,000 for this purpose?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I answered that question yesterday. It was understood by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that, on account of the condition of the Treasury, it was desirable upon the part of the House, desirable upon the part of the Executive, desirable upon the part of a great many people who have the interests of the country at heart, that in the present crisis our appropriations should be as small as they could be made consistent with getting along with the public service, and in order to keep down the appropriations, in consonance, as we believe, with the wishes of the House and of patriotic men generally, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have delayed reporting bills for these appropriations and putting them upon the Calendar.

Now, as I said yesterday, if you pass in this way—which I regard as a most vicious method of legislation—public-building bills as Senate amendments to an appropriation bill, you leave a large number of the members of this House in a very disagreeable and embarrassing position. When they go home to their constituents, they will be asked, "Why have you not taken care of the interests of your constituents in regard to this or that public building?" and when they turn around and say, "It was not the policy of Congress to pass public-building bills," they will be pointed to Tom and Dick and Harry and Peter and Jim who got their public buildings through by having them sneaked into this House from the Senate in the way of amendments upon appropriation bills. In this way members will be left in a very bad position.

Mr. HULICK. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Certainly.

Mr. HULICK. Have the claims of the cases now presented here been considered by the gentleman's committee?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Some have been and some have not.

Mr. HULICK. If any of these cases have been passed upon by the committee and fully considered, then of course it might be important that we should know it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Public-building bills which come into this House for its consideration should come from the committee, with a report stating the merits of the case, so that the House might know the circumstances and legislate intelligently.

Mr. WILLIS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Maine a question—whether he does not think the vote of this House sometimes depends largely upon the condition of the weather? [Laughter.] Yesterday, for instance, we took up the Senate amendments in a body, and with a spirit of rigidity and extreme opposition we voted down everything that came along. This morning it seems the House is in such a delectable condition—as sweet and soothing as a summer breeze—that we want to pass this one and that one and the other one. As the gentleman has wisely said, this policy will put a number of gentlemen of the House in a false position.

Mr. MORSE. You are right.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no use in having our Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, if we are going to vote through amendments of the Senate in this way, without any report from our committee. I have a number of propositions for public buildings in my own State which I have not had the nerve to offer to the House. And I feel that when propositions are presented in this way I ought to vote against every one of them.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman has answered his own question so admirably that I do not think anything further is called for from me.

Mr. CANNON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON].

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the utter unfairness of the position taken by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN]. He substantially admits that this is a work of necessity—a meritorious improvement. He simply insists that the appropriation for it should not be granted because the proposition has not passed through his committee. I maintain that such a position is not fair or right.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have not asserted that this is a work of necessity.

Mr. DAYTON. You have parried the direct question that was put to you in regard to the matter.

The proposition here is simply to complete a public work. It has no relation to the building itself. In refusing to sustain this action of the Senate the House will stand in absolute defiance of a State regulation which requires all property owners to put down these walks in front of their property. If we desire that respect be paid to the laws which we pass we ought to have some respect for local regulations of this kind.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Just one word. I wish to say that in almost every one of these cases where the limit of the appropriation is broken the appropriation is to complete a public building.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the question, "Will the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the amendment of the Senate?" it was decided in the negative; there being on a division—ayes 47, noes 83.

The SPEAKER. The House refuses to recede and concur, and insists on its disagreement.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 5, in line 15, strike out "seventy" and insert "one hundred"; so as to make the paragraph read:

"For court-house, custom-house, and post-office at Omaha, Nebr.: For continuation of building under present limit, $100,000."

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a vote.

Mr. MERCER. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to yield to me five minutes on this proposition.

Mr. CANNON. I will do so, Brother MERCER, unless three minutes will do.

Mr. MERCER. Possibly three minutes may suffice. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to move to concur in the amendment of the Senate with the following amendment:

In line 15, after the word "dollars," add "and the limit of cost of said building and site is increased from $1,200,000 to $1,300,000."

Now, Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House——

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Nebraska merely give notice of that amendment, or does he offer it now?

Mr. MERCER. Does the gentleman intend to raise a point of order?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I suppose it is my duty to do so on the increase of the limit.

Mr. MERCER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I believe I will offer the amendment, because this is on a par with the amendment offered with reference to the post-office building at Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Kansas City has been nonconcurred in. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I regret to say that is true.

Mr. MERCER. Well, that may be, Mr. Speaker, but, in the language of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. WILLIS], that action was taken when the weather had a depressing effect upon the members of the House, and they were not in as good humor as they are this morning. [Laughter.] I take it now that, being in a little better humor, they will accept the amendment and reverse the decision of yesterday.

I have in connection with this matter, to which I desire to ask the attention of the House, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury bearing on this point, which I will read for the information of the House:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 9, 1896.

To the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following statement relative to the United States court-house, custom-house, and post-office building now being erected in the city of Omaha, Nebr.

The limit of the cost of the site and building as fixed by act of Congress of January 21, 1889, is $1,200,000, the cost of the site $400,000, leaving a balance for the construction of the building of $800,000.

The cost of the contracts and contingent expenses to date is $554,090.75, leaving a balance for the completion of the building of $245,909.25.

The work yet uncontracted for consists of the plastering, joinery work, iron stairs, plumbing, elevators, electric wiring, heating, clock, approaches, certain carving of stonework of superstructure, etc., for the completion of which items the Supervising Architect of this Department estimates the sum of $345,909.25 will be required.

As the balance for construction under the present limit is $100,000 less than is absolutely necessary for the completion of the building, I have the honor to recommend that this amount be appropriated for that purpose in addition to the amount yet to be appropriated under the said limit.

This additional appropriation is rendered necessary by the fact that South Park, Colorado, granite was used in the construction of the building in lieu of limestone, the material originally intended in the official estimate, this substitution being made for the betterment of the building at the earnest solicitation of Hon. Charles F. Manderson and upon the recommendation of the Supervising Architect of this Department.

Respectfully, yours, etc.,

Now, Mr. Speaker, the building referred to by this amendment is in process of construction and is almost completed. If the House should strike down the amendment it would leave a building partially constructed, standing exposed to the elements, in which condition it must remain for at least twelve months. It is precisely in the same position as the post-office building in this city. If the House desires to take the position that the Omaha building, almost completed, shall stand exposed to the weather and subject to a damage which may probably reach as much as $250,000, let the House bear the responsibility.

If the gentleman from Illinois, however, insists on the point of order, I desire to be heard on that.

Mr. HICKS. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Are you not a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House?

Mr. MERCER. To the best of my knowledge and belief I am. [Laughter.]

Mr. HICKS. Have not you voted against reporting bills to the House for public buildings at this session?

Mr. MERCER. Why, we have not had an opportunity to vote in favor of reporting them for action.

Mr. HICKS. I beg to say the gentleman is mistaken in that, for we have had the opportunity.

Mr. MERCER. Then I was not present.

Mr. HICKS. That was just the matter; the gentleman was not there.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska to recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur, with the amendment stated by him.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MERCER) there were—ayes 59, noes 86.

So the motion was rejected.

The question being taken on the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment, it was rejected.

So the House refused to recede and concur, and insisted on its disagreement.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

(14) For custom-house and post-office at St. Albans, Vt.: For rebuilding and repairing same, made necessary by recent fire, $70,000.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, the proposition embodied in this amendment is supported not only by its own intrinsic justice, but it has pictures to match. I hold in my hand a picture of the public building at St. Albans, Vt., when it was completed, ready for occupancy, and would have been occupied within two weeks but for a disastrous fire which befell that town in July, 1895, a fire as disastrous to St. Albans as the great fire in Chicago in 1871 was to that city. It wiped out the business portion of the town in two hours and a half, and in its ravages destroyed the public building that had been erected by prior appropriations of Congress, and left but a wreck, as shown in the photograph I hold in my hand. Any gentleman on the floor who will take the two pictures and compare this building as it was when completed and as it is to-day will appreciate the importance of immediate action upon this question.

One-third of the existing structure of to-day can be utilized and saved permanently if work is commenced on it at once; but if there is a delay of another year, even this part of the building will be utterly destroyed, and the Government will be subjected to an additional cost of twenty-five or perhaps fifty thousand dollars more than would be necessary at this time to preserve it.

Now, as to this item in the appropriation. A bill passed the Senate appropriating the money unanimously, and the House sent it to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds when it reached this body; and by that committee, as I am informed by three or four members, and if I am not correct the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] will correct me—it was approved by the committee. Every member of the committee agreed that the appropriation ought to be made; but, in view of the condition of the Treasury, the same policy inaugurated in respect to other public buildings was followed—that is, that no bill was to be reported to the House, although every member agreed that the appropriation ought to be made. Thereupon this amendment was put on in the Senate, and it comes over to the House for its action. I have the authority of each member of the conference committee having the matter in charge to say that they themselves agree that the amendment ought to be made.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me submit it to the candid judgment of this House. Here is a piece of public property. If it stands twelve months longer the action of the elements upon it will absolutely destroy it from summit to base. If this appropriation is made and work resumed, one-third of the walls of that building can be utilized and the building reproduced. Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit to the candid judgment of this House that we can not afford, as representatives of the people, to allow the public property of the people to be wasted. If any one of you had the roof of your house burned you would, as a prudent man, at once go to work and save the balance of the House. Why should we not adopt the same thing here? Talk to me about the money in the Treasury being insufficient to do these things! No man in his private affairs would allow his partially burned dwelling house to go to ruin if he could save it by borrowing a few dollars. Why should not the Government, then, do the same thing with respect to this and try to act with economy rather than to act with extravagance? Why, sir, we were told by the Chaplain in his prayer this morning that man was created a little lower than the angels; but when you look upon the action of the House on yesterday I think the Chaplain probably was absent. I think if he had been present he would have had an entirely different idea.

Be that as it may, this is a matter of absolute merit, and no man can controvert it. Any man who will take the trouble to look at the picture of that building as it was and as it now is will at once vote for this proposition.

Mr. CANNON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am not going to disagree with the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] as to the merits of this case. I only want to say to him that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds did report in favor of his bill. That is to say, they made a report and filed it in the committee room. They have not made it to the House. But they have also made reports as unanimously for perhaps thirty or forty other buildings or more, in cases many of which are quite as meritorious as this. But as I have before said (and there is no necessity for me to repeat it), it has not been the policy of this Congress to do what the gentleman states the Government should do in this case, and that is to do what a prudent business man would do or should do if he had the matter in hand. There are a great number of cases, not only those which have been reported but others in this country, a great many in the city of Washington, where, if the Government acted as a good prudent business man would act, it would appropriate money not only to repair but build public buildings. When one of the heads of the bureaus of this Government comes before the committee as an expert and states that if the Government will build a certain public building in six years it can save the entire cost of it by having modern improvements and conveniences, he states quite as strong a case as the gentleman from Vermont has stated, and yet nothing is done.

The gentleman says we are going to save a good deal because one-third of the walls of that building is left. Now, are the walls going to perish? I suppose they are built either of stone or brick. I do not know what the building is constructed of.

Mr. POWERS. Of marble.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, I do not think the weather is going to deteriorate that marble in the course of the next twelve months, and the gentleman has not stated there is anything left inside the building that is not burned up.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. POWERS. One word further. I ought to have stated, Mr. Speaker, that this building is to accommodate the custom-house at one of the largest ports of entry in this country, the post-office, the internal-revenue collector's office, etc. The Government is now paying large sums in rent for the use of those offices, and I have no doubt that in eighteen months' time the rent which the Government pays would equal the amount of money called for to make this appropriation.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will say that the Government is now paying more than $30,000 a year rent for accommodations for the Post-Office Department in this city, and more than $30,000 a year rental for the accommodations of the Public Printing Office, and yet we do not build new ones.

Mr. TAWNEY. But you have appropriated money for a new post-office, and for an addition to the Printing Office?

Mr. POWERS. We can not consider more than one thing at a time. Let us do the right thing about this and consider the others when they come up.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

Mr. GROUT. I shall not want five minutes, Mr. Speaker. I simply want to call the attention of the House to the difference between this case and those stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN], chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. He says various other projects before his committee are as meritorious as this. Very likely; but in nearly every instance it is the authority to erect a public building which is asked for.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Oh, no; not in every instance.

Mr. GROUT. In most instances.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Not in the majority.

Mr. GROUT. It is always the authority to erect public buildings that is granted by the gentleman's committee. That is what is ordinarily referred to that committee, except in cases like this. It seemed to me, in fact, when the bill came here from the Senate, that it should have gone to the Committee on Appropriations, as it calls for an appropriation simply, because the authority already exists. The Speaker, however, thought it should go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, very properly no doubt, and so it went there. But ordinarily, Mr. Speaker, where authority exists for an appropriation, all that is necessary is for the Committee on Appropriations to make the appropriation. This had been once made, it is true, and this building was destroyed. This appropriation is really in the nature of repairs, because there is something left of the building to be preserved, as has been stated by my colleague.

The gentleman from Maine says that the frost of winter would not unfavorably affect these blocks of marble. Everybody who knows anything about granite or marble knows that it would affect unfavorably such part of the walls as still stand. Every block of marble which could be used in the new structure, if left to the action of the frost, as it is, the joints being somewhat open, as they are from the effects of the fire, would be subject to disintegration. My colleague from Vermont stated that this was one of the largest subports of entry in Vermont.

Mr. POWERS. In the country.

Mr. GROUT. Yes, in the country; but if the largest in Vermont it would be large, for the district of Vermont is one of several large subports. And as illustrating the size of this subport I will say that the amount of revenue received at the port of St. Albans exceeds the amount received in the whole collection district of Portland, Me. And it is to accommodate the large customs business at this port as well as the post-office necessities of a large town that this appropriation is asked.

Now, I ask the members of this House to observe the ground on which the distinction between this case and those already rejected really rests. These other projects which have been voted on are where there was an increase in the limit—where there was a new authority to be granted. Here no authority is to be granted to erect a public building; that already exists. The simple request is for the money to rebuild it. The fire destroyed the building, but did not destroy the law authorizing it; that still exists, and this is an appropriation in accordance with that authority.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the interior finish exposed to the elements?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly; to a very great extent. The roof was burned away and all the interior woodwork destroyed.

Mr. HICKS. Does not that increase the limit of the cost?

Mr. GROUT. Not at all. This item is for precisely the same sum originally appropriated.

Mr. HICKS. It has already been paid for once.

Mr. GROUT. Certainly; but the law authorizes a public building at St. Albans. There is now none there, and this appropriation provides the money with which to build it, and the limit is precisely the same as already authorized by law.

Mr. HICKS. But it doubles it.

Mr. GROUT. It leaves the limit unchanged.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the gentleman will allow me one moment.

Mr. CANNON. I think we are ready to vote, if the gentleman has concluded.

Mr. MILLIKEN. It seems very curious that marble up in the State of Vermont would not stand the frost after the inside of the building was burned out. Now, if the marble will not stand frost in Vermont, I think the best thing the Government could do would be to build it up of granite, which will stand the frost of that country. Now one thing more. The gentleman is wrong in stating that the limit is not going to be exceeded. This authorizes $70,000 more. You had a limit fixed as the cost of your building, and the building according to the statement of your colleague

[Mr. POWERS] has been constructed and the money that was appropriated, to that limit, was expended.

Now, if Congress votes $70,000 it is certainly extending the limit. The gentleman says, further, that in these cases that have come before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds they are for the authorization of new sites. You take the case of the appraiser's store in the city of New York, which I mentioned yesterday. That is a case exactly in point with that of the gentleman. That building has been built up one story. It was authorized years ago. There is a proposition now before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to strengthen the ironwork of the first story, because it is not strong enough, as proved by experts, to support the building and what it will have to contain hereafter. This was authorized long ago; yet it is properly before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. GROUT. I do not say that there are not other meritorious cases. I simply say this is one of great merit, which even the gentleman from Maine does not deny. I also say it is entirely different from the cases already voted down by the House.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding from the disagreement to the Senate amendment and concurring in the same.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. POWERS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 69.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to delay the action of the House, but I think this question is one on which we ought to have a vote of the whole House. I call for the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

After a pause,

Mr. GROUT. I suggest that the vote be by tellers.

Mr. POWERS. I will take it by tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the demand for the yeas and nays, and asks that the vote be taken by tellers.

The question was taken on ordering tellers, and tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] will please take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 58.

So the motion was agreed to; and the House receded from its disagreement and concurred in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For post-office, court-house, and custom-house at St. Paul, Minn.: For continuation of building under present limit, $125,000.

Mr. KIEFER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman whether, with the limit unchanged, there is not money enough in the House appropriation?

Mr. KIEFER. The statement which the chairman of the committee made to me yesterday was that the $60,000 appropriated by the House, or about to be appropriated in this bill, with the money still on hand, was all that could be used up to March 3, 1897, according to the report made by the Treasury Department and as per the statement made by the Supervising Architect before the Committee on Appropriations. Is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. That is correct. I have the statement here.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Is the limit proposed to be broken in this case?

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, if the limit is not broken, there is no objection on my part to this item, because it does not come within the rule.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the House to disagree to the amendment, simply because there is money enough in the House provision.

The question being taken, the House refused to recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For court-house at Savannah, Ga.: For continuation of building, $25,000; and the limit of cost of said building is increased $100,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding and concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LESTER].

Mr. LESTER. Mr. Speaker, this amendment appropriates $25,000 for the continuation of the building of the court-house at Savannah, and increases the limit of cost $100,000—that is, it extends the limit from $400,000 to $500,000. The situation at Savannah is this, and I think it is a case where the judgment of the House will be that the appropriation ought to be made, or at least that the limit ought to be extended, for reasons which I will explain. In 1886, ten years ago, this public building for the post-office and court-house was authorized by an act of Congress. After purchasing a site and partly erecting a building upon it, the site was changed and the limit was made $400,000. Subsequently the erection of a building upon a new site was commenced and the basement and lower story were finished with stone, the general expectation being that the building would be faced with marble. Last year they were ready to commence the erection of the superstructure, after having previously completed the basement, and it was then discovered that possibly there might not be money enough to finish the building as contemplated by the plans. Bids were advertised for by the Secretary of the Treasury for the completion of the building with brick and also alternate bids for marble. It turned out when the bids were received that the bid for the marble finish exceeded the amount of the appropriation. The same firm who offered to complete the building with brick also made the bid for marble. The Secretary of the Treasury, joining in the idea and the expressed wish of everybody concerned, that the building ought to be completed with marble—because so important a building in a city as important as Savannah should be of stone instead of brick—made an arrangement with the bidder to suspend his contract (which was to commence some time in October) until June of this year, in order to give Congress an opportunity, if it pleased, to extend the limit so that the building might be finished with marble, as it ought to be. The Secretary of the Treasury wrote a letter to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which I ask the attention of the House:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., April 24, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to Department letter dated February 7, 1896, addressed to you, relative to bill H. R. 317, entitled "A bill to increase the limit of cost of the public building now being erected at Savannah, Ga."

The office estimate for the work contemplated the use of limestone for the facing of the first story, with pressed brick and terra-cotta trimmings above, and contract on that basis was awarded August 20, 1895, in amount $117,000, which amount was within said office estimate.

At the earnest request of the Hon. RUFUS E. LESTER, who represented to this Department that the citizens of Savannah earnestly desired that the building should be faced with marble throughout, a communication was addressed to the contractors requesting them to state whether they would stand by their alternate bid for marble facing for the building until Congress should have an opportunity to make an extension of the limit.

In response thereto they agreed to stand by their proposition until June 1, 1896.

As the time limit is rapidly approaching, it becomes necessary to take action on the above bill, should Congress desire to comply with the request of the citizens of Savannah for the proposed substitution.

I have, therefore, to request that early action be had in the matter, so that this Department may know what course to pursue relative to the contract now in force.

Respectfully, yours, J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

To the CHAIRMAN,
COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LESTER. May I have another minute?

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. LESTER. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House took the same view of that question, and recommended that the bill be passed extending the limit in respect to this building. I understand that the only objection raised now is based on some fanciful notion that perhaps if any public building bill be passed in any shape or form at this session it may reflect injuriously in some way upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and injure them with their constituents at home. I think, Mr. Speaker, that this case stands upon its own merits, like the proposition with reference to the public building at St. Albans, Vt., and the public building in California. I ask, therefore, that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and concur in that amendment.

It will be noticed that this amendment embraces two propositions—an immediate appropriation of $25,000 and an extension of the limit to $100,000 for the purpose of completing this building with marble. If this amendment be not adopted at this session we can not afford to wait until the next session of Congress for the continuance of this work, as may be done in the case of other public buildings. Unless this provision be now adopted, then, as the contract time will be up the 1st of next June, the work will be continued under the contract providing for finishing the building with brick. Hence, this question must be determined now or not at all. It will be seen that this case stands on a very different footing from the cases which other gentlemen have presented here this morning.

In reference to the immediate appropriation of $25,000, I will say that if it pleases the gentleman from Illinois to ask that that immediate appropriation be struck out I shall have no objection, because the building can be finished in the way I have stated by a mere extension of the limit.

Mr. HICKS. Would not an appropriation of $25,000 be sufficient for the present?

Mr. LESTER. I am willing that if the immediate appropriation of that amount be objectionable it be struck out altogether, retaining simply the provision extending the limit of cost.

Mr. CANNON. My recollection (which I think examination will verify) is that under the present law the limit of cost for the building at Savannah is $400,000, with authority to contract. Under that limitation there is plenty of money appropriated to care for this work during the coming year. The pending proposition, however, is to break the limit and authorize an expenditure of $500,000. If the House should authorize this increase it means a different finish for this building; if not, it means that it shall be finished in the manner originally contemplated. I am ready for a vote.

Mr. LESTER. I think the gentleman from Illinois is under a misapprehension in regard to the facts.

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding from the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment and concurring therein.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 35, noes 52.

Mr. LESTER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 33 voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER. Tellers are refused; the noes have it. The House refuses to recede and concur, and insists on its disagreement to the amendment.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Insert on page 6 of the bill the following:
"For court-house and post-office at Salt Lake City, Utah: For purchase of site and commencement of construction of building, $75,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House recede from its disagreement and concur in this amendment of the Senate?

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I would not undertake to occupy the time of the House on this question if it were like the questions which have already been decided. In the first place, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that so far as this bill is concerned there can be no objectionable precedent set by favorable action on this amendment, because this is the last of the public-building amendments in this bill.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Yes, it is. I wish also to call attention to the statement made here yesterday by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN], that it is the policy of this House not to do anything in the line of public buildings at this session of Congress. I challenge that statement. The House has not so expressed its policy. It has not had the opportunity of declaring at this session what shall be its policy with reference to these questions.

Utah is the youngest State in the Union. It is the only State as to which provision has not been made for a public building at its capital. The Senate has passed a bill authorizing the construction of a public building at Salt Lake City, the capital of Utah. The House committee, if I am correctly informed, has in its pigeonholes a bill for this purpose which has been approved unanimously by that committee. It is true that no bill of this kind has been passed; but both Houses—one by an affirmative vote, the other by the action of its Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—have declared it necessary and desirable that there should be a public building at Salt Lake City. The present proposition is to purchase a site for that building; and every argument which has been advanced here in favor of the other propositions of this kind which have been adopted can be advanced in favor of this proposition.

Gentlemen have said it is in the interest of economy to restore the public building at St. Albans, Vt. So I say it is in the interest of economy that a building be erected at Salt Lake City. And inasmuch as this case stands by itself, is sui generis, I ask that this amendment be concurred in.

Mr. CANNON. A single word, and I am ready for a vote. Gentlemen will understand that this is an entirely new building, authorized for the first time by the Senate amendment to the bill.

I now ask a vote.

The question was taken on receding from the disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and concurring in the same.

On a division (demanded by Mr. ALLEN of Utah) there were—ayes 24, noes 51.

So the House refused to recede from its disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read amendments 18 and 19, as follows:

Amendment numbered 18: Strike out "two" and insert "three."
Amendment numbered 19: Add the words "and the limit of cost of said building is increased $410,000." So the paragraph will read as follows:
"For post-office at Washington, D. C.: For continuation of building under present limit, $375,000; and the limit of cost of said building is increased $410,000."

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to consider these amendments together. They properly belong together. If the limit is broken, as proposed in one of the amendments, then the appropriation ought to be increased as the Senate amendment provides.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the two will be considered together.

There was no objection.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 18 and 19 and concur in the same.

I will state that these two amendments have reference to the post-office building in the city of Washington. It is absolutely necessary that these amendments should be adopted in order to complete this building within the next eighteen months. If they should be adopted, then within eighteen months from this date the building will be completed, and 3,000 clerks, or thereabouts, who are now occupying rented buildings in this city, at a cost of about $100,000 per annum, will find quarters there. In addition to that, we are paying quite a large sum for the rent of a post-office for this city.

I state this latter amount subject to correction; but, at all events, the present post-office is now a rented building, and the post-office, of course, will be removed when the new building shall have been completed, so that there will be at least a saving absolutely to the Government by the completion of the building within the eighteen months not less than $100,000 a year. If the amendment should not be adopted, the building will not be completed and will come to a standstill, and the Government must continue paying rent at the same rate it pays the owners of houses now being used until work shall be resumed and the building completed.

I understood the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN], who is chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to say on yesterday that this building is an exception and that these amendments ought to be adopted. With this statement, Mr. Speaker, I leave the matter to the House.

Mr. PICKLER. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas a question. Will this finish the building; and if so, when?

Mr. SAYERS. My understanding is that it will finish the building ready for occupancy in eighteen months.

Mr. DAYTON. Will this be sufficient to provide the steps and approaches to the building, so that we can get inside of it when it is completed? [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. There will be no difficulty, I can assure the gentleman, in getting access to it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I did say on yesterday that I looked on this as an exceptional case. This provides for the completion of an almost completed building, and until it is completed I suppose it can not be occupied at all; and in view of the fact that it will provide accommodation for a large number of the employees of the Government and save such a large rental, it is an exceptional case, and one that the House should act upon and act promptly.

It is a case, too, which can not be pointed out to any member of Congress, when he may go home, by the people of his district, when he has failed to get his public building for his district, as militating against him or his efforts in that direction.

I will say, further than that, Mr. Speaker, that I feel a little pride myself in this building. I think, indeed, I have a right to do so. I worked for seven years on the Public Building and Grounds Committee of this House, together, let me say, with Mr. Dibble, of South Carolina, not now in Congress, but to whose active work and efficiency in this direction I desire to testify. For seven years we worked to get this building established here.

We had an old post-office building in this city in which I suppose you might have kept a cow without tying her, but you could not have kept a dog, for he could have run out through the cracks. [Laughter.] And in view of the difficulties that to-day face us in getting the establishment of a Printing Office and other necessary public buildings here, I feel some pride in the fact that although we kept working at this for nearly seven years, we finally succeeded and gained the victory, notwithstanding the efforts of a great many individuals who wanted to get their fingers into the pie. We succeeded also in establishing the building at a point where I think it ought to be established. I think it is the concurrent testimony of the people in this city, as well as the members of Congress themselves, that the building is well located.

Now it is nearly finished. Its construction has proceeded so slowly that the newspapers and the people have manifested impatience at the delay. If this provision in this bill will achieve its completion in the course of a few months, so that we can see it occupied—if the city of Washington, the national capital, which is entitled to have good public buildings, can rejoice in a post-office building belonging to the Government and worthy of the Government, and such as the public service requires—I shall be glad to see it done. I shall make no objection.

Mr. DAYTON. Why did you not report it long ago?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have answered that question so many times that if the gentleman has as much intelligence as his face indicates he certainly must know what the answer is without asking any further question.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ABBOTT].

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the House that I am not so much opposed to these particular provisions as I am to the method in which these amendments have been offered to this bill. The House in its organization created a Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, upon which was conferred certain jurisdiction. These questions relating to public buildings have been presented to that committee, and in many cases that committee have acted favorably. Now, we have, as I understand, through the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, sought opportunities to present to this House the bills which have been considered and favorably passed upon. We have not been accorded that privilege. We have not been allowed, as it were, to present our bills. Of course the committee can present them, but we do not choose to do so until such time as we believe we can get consideration at the hands of the Speaker and the House.

Now, it is not so much that I oppose these appropriations as the manner in which they are brought into this House. If we are going to permit the Senate of the United States, upon appropriation bills, to bring amendments here authorizing the building of new buildings or the continuation of new buildings already under construction, why not do away with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds altogether? Why have a committee here whose duty it is to inquire into and consider the merits of these respective measures, when at the same time you permit the Senate to come here and tack numerous bills upon an appropriation bill without any reports at all? Who knows in regard to this post-office here in the city of Washington? Who knows what the estimates are? Has anybody presented any statement that we should increase the limit of construction?

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to my friend that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury recommends it.

Mr. ABBOTT. Perhaps the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended it. I did not know that fact to be true; but, nevertheless, I do not think it right and proper for this House to become a mere tool of the Senate of the United States and to allow that body to dictate to us what we shall do. Why do they not bring up their bills separately and pass them on their respective merits instead of tacking them upon an appropriation bill? There are numbers of gentlemen on this floor who have been before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds insisting upon the passage of their respective bills. Many of these bills are meritorious. There are several States in the Union which have not any public buildings. There are many places where the Federal courts are held where the Government of the United States has no house in which to hold them. These cases are just as meritorious as the bill under consideration.

Why should the people of the several States of this American Union be deprived of the privilege of having buildings where their courts may be held and where their post-office business may be transacted? Why should we make a special exception of the city of Washington or any other city? Why not let them come in and stand upon their own merits? I believe in no such policy as this. I believe it is wrong for bills of this character to be ingrafted upon appropriation bills.

Now, gentlemen, the House in the preparation of this bill provided for an appropriation of $275,000 to be expended for the continuation of the post-office in the city of Washington. Why should we increase it $100,000? I have been looking at that building for the last six or seven years, nearly. The work has been going on very slowly. Comparatively few laborers are employed upon it. It appears to me so, at least. Why should we, at the suggestion of the Senate, add $100,000 to the $275,000 which the House had agreed to?

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding and concurring.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House receded from its disagreement, and concurred in the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will present the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Treasury building at Washington, D. C.: For repairs to Treasury, Butler, and Winder buildings, $12,000.

Mr. CANNON. That amendment and the next one have already been disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment No. 22.

The Clerk read as follows:

For making certain proposed alterations in the post-office building in New York City, and for improving, arranging, and furnishing certain rooms therein in accordance with plans prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, to be done under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, the sum of $60,000, such sum to be immediately available.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS].

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, the object of this amendment to the bill has been to make certain alterations and changes in the court rooms in the post-office building in the city of New York. When the building was erected, these rooms were constructed of the height of two stories. Since that time Congress has provided for the circuit court of appeals, requiring more room than these two rooms and the district court room can afford. It has been proposed, therefore, to construct a floor midway between the upper and lower floors of the room, making four rooms out of two and two out of another, so as to accommodate these courts in the transaction of their business. They are now much restricted. All the business done by the United States is done by those courts. They are United States court rooms, and for the purpose of facilitating and increasing the means of doing that business this appropriation has been asked for. It stands upon a different principle from many of those which have been considered and disposed of by the House, for a bill was introduced into the Senate to make this appropriation and allowing these alterations, and the Senate bill was passed and came to the House. About a month or two months ago it was sent to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House. One member of that committee, who was recently in the city of New York, went into the building for the purpose of seeing whether in point of fact these alterations were required, and upon his return he stated to me that he was satisfied the alterations ought to be provided for, and ought to be immediately made; but no report has been made by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds upon that bill, and the result of this delay of the House committee has been the insertion of this amendment in the bill by the Senate.

I have letters of the judges of the circuit court of appeals, Judges Wallace, Lacombe, and Shipman, stating these changes are necessary. The judges state:

As you are aware, two of these court rooms extend upward through two stories of the building. If they were floored over at the level of the first story the capacity of these rooms would be doubled.

I have also a letter of Justice Brown, of the district court, saying the same thing in reference to his room, and showing the necessity for this work being done, and done immediately. Now, it will be borne in mind, in connection with the proposal to do this work, that the revenues received by the Government from the post-office in the city of New York amount to millions more than those of any other post-office in the country. The postmaster himself has concurred also in the request that this work shall be done. So has the district attorney, and so has Mr. Choate, the president of the law institute, which has a large library, perhaps the largest library in the city of New York, of law books, which is used by the judges of this court. Unless this work is done, this library must be taken out of the building, because the accumulation has been such and so great that they have not room for the library; while if this work is authorized this room will be extended, by which the library can overflow into other parts of the building and afford additional accommodations to the judges for the examination of their cases and the investigation of the questions brought before the court, and at the same time afford them room to transact their business.

Now, the simple question here in reference to this amendment is whether the United States, for the purpose of transacting its business, its legal business, in the city of New York and affording the courts reasonable room for the dispatch of their business, will sanction this amendment. If Congress will not, then, of course, they must be put to inconvenience and have the business itself postponed or not done at all. If the amendment is permitted, by simply taking a small amount—and it will only take a small amount—of the surplus revenues of this post-office, it will afford these additional facilities for the transaction of the business of the court as well as furnish more room for the library that they have to use in the dispatch and consideration of their business.

I submit to the House, therefore, under these circumstances that this case is distinguishable from those which have been disposed of here, and that it requires that this appropriation should be sanctioned, particularly when, as they are made in the ordinary course of things and carried through a bill—the Senate has passed a bill for the appropriation of this money and the sanctioning of these improvements—through the failure of the committee of this House to act upon it, the House itself must dispose of the matter. This reads:

For making certain proposed alterations in the post-office building in New York City, and for improving, arranging, and furnishing certain rooms therein in accordance with plans prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

Mr. DANIELS. That is it.

Mr. CANNON. It is not for a new building, nor for additions to the building, but to make changes so as to give double the present court room, by laying an additional floor, and is therefore like unto the Los Angeles case.

Mr. DANIELS. It will make six court rooms out of three.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, this change in the post-office building must be made now, or it will be futile. Unless the change is made now, the best law library in the city of New York will be removed from the Federal Building and the judges will be compelled to go outside to consult their law books. The Government of the United States will then be asked to furnish them a law library and, at the same time, to make the alterations in the building that are now called for in these specifications. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the proposition ought to commend itself to the House without argument. It is virtually a proposition to save the Government of the United States $50,000.

Mr. LOW. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I stand corrected by my colleague. It is virtually a proposition to save the Government of the United States $100,000. All the Federal courts of that circuit are held in the post-office building. Without a law library at hand they are crippled. I need not call the attention of gentlemen here who are lawyers to the fact that some of them may later on have a personal interest in this item, for if they practice in the Federal courts in New York, and if we make this appropriation, they will have law books right at hand; but if the library has to be removed from this building they will be correspondingly hampered in their practice. I know that my friend from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] is a good lawyer. I do not know but what, at times, he may be so unfortunate as to practice in the Federal courts in the city of New York, and I would really like to see him helped as much as possible by the passage of this appropriation. [Laughter.] I know that the removal of the law library would affect his practice unfavorably as well as that of any other gentleman here who might happen to be called upon to appear in those courts.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I have been thoroughly entertained and greatly gratified by hearing how much money the Government of the United States is making by the passage of these appropriations. [Laughter.] My genial friend from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], for whom I have as much admiration as I have for any man in this House or out of it, told us that we should save $50,000 by this appropriation, and his colleague [Mr. LOW] raised it to $100,000. I do not know how great the amount of our saving might be if the gentleman should consult all of his 33 colleagues on this floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Do you think we had better "call" him?

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman is using language peculiar to a certain pursuit that I am not so familiar with as he is, and therefore I can not respond intelligently to his question. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to discuss the merits of this case, but it does seem to me that there is no special exigency requiring this appropriation, and I can not see why it does not come under the same rule as the other cases in which we have instructed our conferees to insist upon our disagreement to the Senate amendments.

Mr. DANIELS. I will say to the gentleman that the business of the courts is constantly increasing, and this additional room is required to transact their business satisfactorily.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The question being taken, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 47.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused; the motion to recede and concur was rejected, and the House insisted upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Public Printer, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to purchase two lots of land immediately adjoining the site of the Government Printing Office on the west, said lots running north and south from H street to Jackson alley, and containing 8,412 square feet, more or less; and to purchase in addition a site in the vicinity of the Government Printing Office, within that part of square 624 bounded on the south by G street NW., on the east by North Capitol street, and on the north by Jackson alley, and containing 8,412 square feet, more or less, and to erect thereon a boiler house and coal sheds; and for the purchase and erection of two 300-horsepower steel steam boilers, with all necessary fittings and connections to connect said boilers to the Government Printing Office, $100,000, to be immediately available.

If from any cause the Public Printer, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be unable to purchase said land at a satisfactory price from the owners, he is hereby directed and empowered, within thirty days after the passage of this act, to secure the same by condemnation proceedings, as provided in the act approved June 25, 1890, entitled "An act to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square No. 323 of the city of Washington, to provide an eligible site for a city post-office," and the amendment to said act contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes," approved August 30, 1890.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the amendment just read. In support of the motion I ask to have read from the RECORD of yesterday a letter of the Public Printer, which explains the situation and the necessity for this appropriation. If gentlemen can afford to vote against the motion after they shall have heard the letter read they must bear the responsibility.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., April 30, 1892.

DEAR SIR: I esteem it my duty to write you in connection with the item inserted in the sundry civil bill in the Senate, providing for the erection of additional boiler plant at this office and for the purchase of land, which item is now under consideration in conference with your committee.

This work is the outgrowth of work undertaken a year ago, at the instance of the Joint Committee on Printing, in securing the erection of the new west building, now nearing completion at this office; in fact, this plant is a part of the work contemplated in such erection, inasmuch as it was intended, in connection with the erection of the new building on the lot line of adjoining owners, that the purchase of the adjoining land was to be made and the buildings removed, that light might be admitted into the two lower stories of the new building. As it is now, many of the windows are completely darkened by the adjoining building.

It was also understood and stated by me that the present boiler plant would not be sufficient and could not be enlarged to furnish heat for the winter for the new west building. The erection of five additional rooms to the office, under the appropriation of $75,000 in 1894, caused me to utilize every resource of the present boiler plant, that the present power and heating demands of the office might be met, and which is inadequately met during the severity of winter.

There is no margin either in power or heat in our present plant to furnish heating facilities for the new building to be occupied in June. Such occupancy will be followed by vacating the building in November next unless heat is provided. No addition can be made to the present steam plant of the office except by purchase of land for the erection of the new plant.

All other dangers attending life and property in this office lessen before the danger incident to the tremendous steam energy concentrated within the group of buildings here, and which must be operated days, nights, and Sundays, with scarcely ordinary opportunities for withdrawing the fire and cleaning the boilers.

The demands on the steam service are now greater than ever, and the danger greater. I have mentioned this danger in public reports and verbal statements. If the new boiler plant is erected, I will use it entirely for power purposes, and use the old boilers within the office exclusively for heating purposes, removing in a large degree the great pressure of steam, thus lessening the danger to life and property.

The presentation of this matter to the Senate Appropriation Committee was in line of suggestions as made by members of the Committee on Printing, and not with a view of leaving your committee uninformed in the matter on my part.

Most truly, yours,

TH. E. BENEDICT,
Public Printer.

Hon. J. G. CANNON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what is set forth by the Public Printer as to the necessity for this expenditure.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Is this merely for room for a boiler plant?

Mr. SAYERS. Additional room is needed in order to use a boiler plant.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Eight thousand square feet for a boiler plant?

Mr. SAYERS. I do not know how much will be used for that specific purpose.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, there is no man in this House who has any greater desire, or who has struggled any harder than I have done in several Congresses, to give to the Government a Printing Office adequate to do the work well and economically, and with due regard to the health and comfort of the officials and employees there. The Senate, which has seen fit to put this item into an appropriation bill, has, as old members of the House well know, stood in the door for three Congresses past and said to us, as the highwayman says, "Either take a certain lot or nothing." And for the last six years that has prevented the purchase of an eligible site where there would be light and ventilation and good drainage, where we could erect a Printing Office with modern improvements and facilities for doing the work satisfactorily. Even when the Public Printer has said to the committee, and when the fact has been brought to the attention of the Senate and of the House, that we are paying $30,000 a year rental for conveniences outside of the existing building—that it was costing the Government nearly twice as much to do the work in that old rat trap of a building, which was never built for a Public Printing Office and is not fit for one and never can be made fit—even when that fact has been brought to our knowledge the same difficulty has continued.

Now, here comes a proposition upon this appropriation bill, a proposition which has never been submitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to purchase 16,000 square feet of land, more than a quarter as much as the entire Printing Office now covers, in order to facilitate the erection of a boiler plant. I should like to have the gentleman who has spoken in favor of this amendment [Mr. SAYERS], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, inform the House why it is necessary to buy one-fourth and more than one-fourth as much land as the Public Printing Office now covers, in order to erect a boiler house and a coal shed.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to say to the gentleman——

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not want this interruption to come out of my time.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman can get more time. I wish to say that I know nothing about the matter except what is stated in the letter just read.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Exactly.

Mr. SAYERS. But let me say to the gentleman from Maine there are 2,500 or 3,000 people engaged from day to day in the building——

Mr. MILLIKEN. I know it.

Mr. SAYERS. And if any accident should happen to the building—if a fire should break out or if the building should fall—the responsibility must rest upon the shoulders of the gentleman from Maine and those who vote against this amendment. It will not rest on mine.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, we shall see.

Mr. SAYERS. No, it will not. You can not by anything you may say or do put the responsibility on me. All I ask members of the House to do is to read the letter most carefully——

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have read the letter.

Mr. SAYERS. And if they should then choose to vote down the amendment, the responsibility is with them.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman says there are 2,500 people at work in the Government Printing Office. Yes; there are 3,000 persons at work there. Last summer there were 3,500 people working there. And that building has been twice condemned by the grand jury. It has been stated by experts that we are liable to have the Ford's Theater disaster quintupled there at any time. The Public Printer himself has stated personally to me and to my committee that when he goes into the north wing of that building he does not feel safe until he gets out of it. He stated that the operatives are working there under fear all the time that the building may tumble down upon them. Yet instead of having from the Senate such a proposition as the case demands, we have this amendment. If they choose to put aside the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds in both Houses and legislate directly upon public buildings, why have they not sent here a proposition to erect a new Printing Office, so that we may have one that will be safe?

Mr. SAYERS. Let me say——

Mr. MILLIKEN. One moment. I believe I have the floor at present.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the gentleman tell me, and I will wait for him to reply, how building a new boiler house is going to prevent that old building from tumbling down any day. It might possibly prevent a fire there, but the same might be true of almost any other public building. Fires are liable to break out in one public building as well as another. But all that is proposed in this amendment, for which there is a proposition to buy 16,000 square feet of ground——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I want gentlemen to understand this proposition, and to realize that it does nothing at all to promote the safety of that building, which has been twice condemned by a grand jury.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman in charge of the bill allow me three or four minutes?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman says that the Senate ought to have proposed to the House a measure for the selection of a piece of ground upon which to construct a new building for the Government Printing Office.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I want to correct the gentleman. I do not say that. I do not say the Senate should have done anything of the kind. But if they were going to do anything at all, they should have done it right.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman acknowledges that the present building is in a dangerous condition.

Mr. MILLIKEN. That is true.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, the gentleman has not reported and put on the Calendar of the House any bill looking to the purchase of ground and the construction of a new building, has he? I pause for an answer.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will say to the gentleman that we tried that in three Congresses——

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, yes; we know all about that.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have already answered half a dozen times in this House the question why the Public Buildings Committee has made no reports; and I know the gentleman is bright enough to understand my answer.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, I understand the gentleman's answer.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman asks this question not because he does not know my answer, but simply for another purpose.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to show the gentleman's attitude before the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN. "The gentleman" can show his own attitude without the help of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, we find the gentleman from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, claiming jurisdiction over every public building and the purchase of every plot of ground for use by the Government, standing in his place and saying that this building, the Public Printing Office, occupied by 3,000 persons, is in an extremely dangerous condition; yet he and his committee have not submitted to the House a proposition for the purchase of ground and for erecting a new building. But he stands here to-day like a dog in the manger; he will not do anything himself, nor will he permit anybody else to act. That is the position that the gentleman and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds take.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Oh, no; that is not the position. "The gentleman" will permit anybody else to do right—not to do wrong. I do not intend to be misrepresented by the gentleman.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not wish to misrepresent my friend. I know I am getting him into a hard position and I feel for him. [Laughter].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, the gentleman may feel so, but the "gentleman from Maine" does not.

Mr. SAYERS. That is the condition, Mr. Speaker, into which the gentleman has put himself. He says, I repeat, that this is an exceedingly dangerous structure, accommodating some 3,000 occupants, liable to be burned or to fall down at any time, and yet the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are taking no step and have done nothing to provide against a possible disaster. Now, what has the Committee on Appropriations done?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Very little that it ought to have done. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS (continuing). The proposition before us is to purchase a lot of ground and to provide as much as possible for the safety of the occupants of the building until a new site can be selected and a new building constructed. If Congress were to pass an act authorizing the purchase of a particular piece of ground and making an appropriation to construct the building to-day it would be three or four years before it could be constructed and ready for occupancy.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman really believe that it requires 16,000 square feet of ground for a boiler house?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, we find the gentleman in charge of this building telling us that the adoption of this amendment is necessary. He says that he needs it. The Committee on Printing—the joint committee of the two Houses having charge of the repairs of the building—say so also; and in the absence of any testimony to the contrary I am bound to believe it to be a proper amendment to be adopted.

But, Mr. Speaker, rather than take any risk as to fire, or as to a collapse of the building, or as to an explosion which may occur from the old boilers, I am willing to go to the expense of purchasing this additional ground and expending the additional $100,000 as provided in the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. You believe in resolving all doubts in favor of human life.

Mr. SAYERS. I do.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am glad to hear the gentleman from Texas say that. We shall call upon him to exhibit his faith by his work by and by.

Mr. SAYERS. I am ready to act on that principle at any time.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman from Illinois will pardon me for a moment, there are one or two questions I would like to ask. This is an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of procuring more land, for the purpose of erecting a boiler house, and for putting in new boilers at the Government Printing Office?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has it any connection with a policy of retaining the present site, or is it simply a temporary arrangement?

Mr. CANNON. It does not solve that question at all.

Mr. DINGLEY. Because two years ago we appropriated, I think, $75,000——

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, seventy-five thousand.

Mr. DINGLEY (continuing). For the purpose of making some repairs of the old building at the present site. This would make $175,000; and it seems that we are making quite large expenditures there——

Mr. HICKS. And not improving the building either.

Mr. DINGLEY (continuing). If the site is to be a temporary one; and also acquiring more ground than would seem to be necessary.

Now, it seems to me that we ought to adopt the policy, one way or the other, of repairing the present buildings, enlarging or rebuilding them to meet the wants of the service, and acquiring such land as may be necessary, or of not spending so much money upon them, and start out on the policy of erecting a new structure elsewhere. But of course I speak only tentatively regarding the amendment of the Senate. If the policy is to continue the Government Printing Office on the present site, then of course the amount of land that we purchase is a matter of no particular consequence. But here are 16,000 feet proposed to be purchased by this amendment. Now, do we require so much land as that, unless we are to continue the Government Printing Office at the present location? I would like to know the facts as to that.

Mr. CANNON. I think I can answer the gentleman, when he concludes his question, to his satisfaction.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask the question for information.

Mr. CANNON. I can not give the answer except in two or three minutes.

Mr. DINGLEY. I shall be glad to have the gentleman give it.

Mr. CANNON. In the Fiftieth or the Fifty-first Congress, I am not sure which, there was an appropriation of $275,000 to acquire a site for a new Printing Office, to be made immediately available. A commission was authorized for the purpose of selecting the site, and the commission proceeded with its work. It resulted in nothing——

Mr. DOCKERY. The real estate ring proceeded to get in its work also.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). Contentions between different Departments, different interests throughout the city, differences between the House and the Senate, and various other reasons combined rendered that work fruitless, and that appropriation has never been utilized. Later on various bills in the House and Senate have been presented to buy a site for the new Printing Office. It is a matter that comes up every session of Congress, except at this one. Under peculiar conditions, it has not come up at this session.

Now, there is a lapse of seven years, in which we have been trying to get ground and build a new Printing Office. In my judgment it will be seven years more before we do it. In the meantime, what is it good business to do? To use that we are compelled to use—where the office now is, with as great efficiency to the Government as possible, with as little cost as possible, having efficiency in view, and with great care that it is done with safety to human life. Now, a year ago Congress, realizing this condition, appropriated $100,000 and over to build an addition to the Government Printing Office. Gentlemen who are familiar with it know that that addition approaches completion. It is just to the west of the main office, a very creditable building, by the way. I believe it is five or six stories high. It looms up above all the buildings in that part of the city. It is to be completed on the 1st day of July and ready for occupancy.

Now, the Public Printer writes a letter in reference to this amendment, which is for $100,000, to purchase this ground and build a boiler plant for heating and power. That letter is in the RECORD. I have it before me. He says that the present boiler plant is old and condemned, and can not be used with safety. He says that if it was new it would no more than heat the present building, without reference to the new addition, which is to be occupied by the 1st of July. He says, further, that unless some provision for heating it is made, the new building can not be occupied after the 1st of November. He says, further, that that building runs right out to the property line, and that the first two stories of it are substantially dark; that the adjoining low buildings are not expensive, that the land ought to be bought and the buildings moved away for the purpose of affording light. If gentlemen will look and see what fire traps those buildings are, they will consider it necessary, from the standpoint of safety as well, to remove them. Now, whether this ground is a little too much or not enough I do not know. To buy the 16,000 feet of ground, remove the old buildings standing upon it, and erect a new plant for heating and power will cost $100,000.

I want to say that so far as I am personally concerned I have always favored a new Government Printing Office away from there, a plant that would answer the purpose for half a century or a century to come; but I have no hope of such a plant being completed in the next seven or ten years. It would take many, many years to build it, if we should commence to-day. In the meantime the sun comes up and the sun goes down, Congress meets and goes, and the Printing Office has got to be run, with its 3,000 employees. Without any reference to a new Government Printing Office, it is sound business and simple safety and common prudence and an absolute necessity, in my judgment, to make this appropriation.

Mr. PAYNE. Has it not always been the policy of the Government, in erecting public buildings, to have at least 50 feet of open space between a Government building and any other adjoining building?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; that is the policy.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman know of any other public building except the Public Printing Office which does not have this open space for safety, in case of fire, in the adjoining buildings?

Mr. CANNON. I do not think of any other now.

Mr. PAYNE. Is not the Printing Office the most inflammable of all the public buildings that the Government owns?

Mr. CANNON. I think so.

Mr. HICKS. I desire to say a word on this matter.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, if this amendment prevails, my judgment is that it will practically settle the Printing-Office site for all time to come. As the chairman of the committee [Mr. CANNON] has properly stated, this matter has been talked about and talked about and talked about, and we have been unable to come to any agreement about the proper place to build a new Printing Office, until within the last six weeks, I think, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have agreed upon a site. But in view of what we know about the present Printing Office, and in view of what the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have been informed and have long known concerning its very dangerous and unsafe condition, I am inclined to the belief that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have almost been criminally negligent—at least have been grossly negligent—in not long ago reporting a suitable place for the erection of such a building as will meet the requirements necessary for a public printing office. I believe, sir, that if this amendment prevails it will settle that vexatious question forever; and had we not better, in view of the fact that the Government owns so much ground in this locality and have valuable and costly buildings thereon, adopt this amendment and stop all discussion and differences as to the question of location?

Mr. CANNON. I do not think it will settle it forever.

Mr. HICKS. As a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I am in favor of this amendment, and trust it will prevail, and let us settle now once and forever where the Printing Office shall be. The Public Printer appeared in person before our committee and urged the necessity of prompt action, and fully acquainted the committee with the dangerous condition of the present structure and the risk attending those who work now in the building. We owe it to ourselves, to the employees of that department of the public service, and to the country to aid in securing the safety of the 3,000 Government employees who daily work in the present building, to make it as safe as we can. I long since made up my mind at the first opportunity I had I would, if in my power, avoid any further responsibility in a matter of such vital importance to so many people. I most earnestly desire that the House will recede from its position and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say that I am glad the gentleman favors the amendment. I do not accept his conclusion, but I can not quarrel with anybody——

Mr. STEELE. Who agrees with you?

Mr. CANNON. Who agrees with me on any standpoint? In my judgment, it does not settle the question finally. That is not the purpose, in my judgment, but it is the best thing that can be done now; and then let the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds settle the other matter later on.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This ground can then be sold.

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding from the disagreement of the House and concurring in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House receded from its disagreement and concurred in the Senate amendment.

On motion of Mr. SAYERS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the House agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced the appointment of the following conferees on the sundry civil appropriation bill: Mr. CANNON, Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, and Mr. SAYERS.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report.

The report of the committee of conference was read.

[For conference report, see Senate proceedings of May 22.]

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the report, and I desire to send up a statement to have read.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The amendment for deep-water harbor at Santa Monica or San Pedro provides for a cash appropriation of $50,000 to defray the expenses of the board for examining the projects and making plans and estimates for the improvement, and after their decision the Secretary of War is authorized to enter into contract for the completion of the project at a cost not to exceed $2,000,000. The amendment relative to the inner harbor at Wilmington provides that in the event the board shall decide to locate the outer harbor at Santa Monica, then the Secretary of War is authorized to contract for the completion of the inner harbor at Wilmington at a cost not to exceed $392,000, and in the event that the board decide to locate the outer harbor at San Pedro this contract for Wilmington shall not be entered into.

Total cash appropriations carried by bill	$12,852,235.00

W. B. HOOKER,
BINGER HERMANN,
T. C. CATCHINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent——

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, this matter has been fully discussed in the Senate for four days. The report of the committee of conference was printed in the RECORD this morning, and every fact in connection with it is stated in detail in the report which has just been read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask unanimous consent to submit some observations on this bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I did not understand the request of the gentleman.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent to print some remarks on this report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to print some remarks upon the pending measure.

Mr. KEM. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM].

Mr. HOOKER. I demand the previous question.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. HOOKER. I demand the previous question.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if this matter affecting the Santa Monica Harbor has been changed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas is not in order.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question about that matter.

Mr. HOOKER. I will answer the question.

Mr. TERRY. Is it not in order to find out something about this matter on which we are to vote?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demanded the previous question at the time the Chair said that the gentleman was not in order; but he seems to have changed his mind, and proposes to answer, and the gentleman from Arkansas is now in order.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to ask the gentleman what change is made in this conference from the action of the Senate on this Santa Monica matter?

Mr. HOOKER. The report which was read states just what change was made.

Mr. TERRY. Can not the gentleman state briefly, so that the House can understand?

Mr. HOOKER. The provision is simply that in case this board shall determine to locate the harbor at Santa Monica there is a provision in it with reference to the use of tracks to the wharf, owned by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and upon what terms other railroad companies may use them, and if they can not agree between themselves it is to be regulated and decided by the Secretary of War. Another provision has reference to the freight rate which will be charged by the Southern Pacific Railroad in case the rock is transported over the lines of the Southern Pacific Railroad. It is to be fixed by the Secretary of War and the agreement filed. Another provision is that in case the outer harbor is located at San Pedro, then in that event the inner harbor, or what is known as Wilmington Harbor, shall not be constructed, or, rather, that the Secretary of War shall not enter into contract for the completion of the inner harbor.

Mr. TERRY. These are all the changes the Senate made about the action of this board of officers?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

JNO. E. McCALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

S. M. CULLOM,
H. M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to certain amendments of the Senate to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill (H. R. 6248) for the fiscal year 1897, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On amendments numbered 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, and 19: Increases the pay of certain committee clerks of the Senate from $1,440 to $1,800 each; provides for 10 additional messengers at $1,440 each, in lieu of 10 skilled laborers at $1,000 each; increases the pay of 3 laborers from $720 to $840 each, and increases the pay of annual clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees from $1,200 to $1,500 per annum each, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments numbered 22, 23, 108, and 109, relating to the Capitol police force: Provides for 5 additional privates at $1,100 each and for 7 privates at $960 each, in lieu of 7 watchmen at $840 each, heretofore under the Architect of the Capitol, and requires that all of the Capitol police force shall police the Capitol building and the Capitol Grounds.

On amendments numbered 36, 37, and 38: Provides for 12 clerks at $900 each, instead of 8, as proposed by the House, on account of the copyright work in the Library of Congress, and strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate for appointment of register of copyrights.

assembly of the Territory of New Mexico on the third Monday of January, instead of the first Monday in May, as proposed by the House.

On amendment numbered 142: Strikes out the appropriation of $2,000 proposed by the Senate for distributing the opinions of the Supreme Court to circuit and district judges.

On amendments numbered 305, 306, 307, and 308, relating to the appointment of United States commissioners and regulating who may hold the office of such commissioners, prescribing the fees that may be charged by commissioners, and requiring the Attorney-General to investigate and report at the next session of Congress as respects the compensation of clerks of United States courts, the agreement of the conference committee is fully set forth in the conference report.

On amendments numbered 310, 313, and 314: Corrects the numbering of sections and provides that the provisions of the act relating to the compensation of United States attorneys shall not apply to the attorney for the District of Columbia.

The bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $21,520,822.61, being $370,895.47 less than the law for the current year, $844,228.39 less than the estimates submitted, $140,057.10 more than as it passed the House, and $106,972.10 less than as it passed the Senate.

HENRY H. BINGHAM,
JNO. E. McCALL,
ALEX. M. DOCKERY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, if the House has heard the detailed statement as submitted in the conference report as well as in the formal statement of your committee, I am of opinion that but little inquiry will be made in connection with the submission and the request for the acceptance of this conference report, the final report upon the bill. It is but fair, however, that the House should know, as stated in the concluding paragraph of the statement of your conferees, that the bill appropriates $21,520,822.61; being $370,895.47 less than the law for the current year, $844,228.39 less than the estimates submitted, $140,057.10 more than the bill as it passed the House, and $106,972.10 less than as it passed the Senate. In the body of the reduction of the total sum added to the bill by the Senate, $347,029.20, the House having agreed to $140,057.10, it is proper to state that $79,520 is for salaries of employees of the Senate. Therefore, in the contention between the two Houses on all the items increasing the paragraphs of the House bill but a very limited amount was conceded to the Senate, and, upon final conclusion, yielded to their recommendation; the bulk of the addition pertaining to the salaries of their own subordinate force.

It is unnecessary for me to state that these paragraphs of the bill were held in controversy between the two Houses until the House itself had declared by legislation that the House, and it alone, had the right to determine what increase, if any, should be made in its subordinate force and in the compensation of that force. Until that action by the House these paragraphs, I say, were held in contention, but when the House came to that determination, your committee felt that they had no ground to stand upon, and therefore conceded to the Senate what that body had proposed in the bill as to its subordinate force and their compensation.

Mr. HULICK. Did the Senate make any increase in the salaries of the secretaries for Senators?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; from $1,200 to $1,500, your committee conceding that, as the House had determined for itself without concert of action with the Senate what its subordinate force should be and what should be their compensation, the same right should be accorded to the Senate to determine all questions as to its employees and their compensation.

Mr. HULICK. Could they give any good reason why their secretaries should have $1,500 a year and ours $1,200?

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman must understand that the reason of a Senator is, "I wish it so;" and if the Senate agrees with him, that settles it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULICK. And the House submits quietly.

Mr. BINGHAM. We had agreed upon this conference report several days ago, and it was submitted first to the Senate for action. There was a disagreement on the part of the Senate to three paragraphs, and the bill was sent back to conference by the action of the Senate. One of those paragraphs related to the register of copyrights. The House, by its subcommittee on appropriations, had considered the whole subject pertaining to library reorganization, and after hearing from Mr. Spofford, the Librarian, and others in connection with the question of library reorganization, they concluded not to make any report in their bill. The Senate, however, determined to insert a paragraph with reference to copyright clerks. The House approved that paragraph, but when the bill went back to the Senate for confirmation the Senate rejected from the bill their own proposition. As that proposition had not originated in the House, and as the judgment of your committee was that the question was such that it should not be acted upon at this time, they saw no objection to accepting the action of the Senate in determining that their own proposition upon that subject should go out of the bill. In the discussion a constitutional question arose as to whether the Joint Committee on the Library of the House and the Senate should determine how this alleged officer should be selected. The provision, however, has been stricken from the bill, and as the House had not considered it, your committee deemed it good judgment to accept the action of the Senate and eliminate the proposition.

The question of New Mexico came up in the House—not reported from your subcommittee—the question as to the date of the convening of the State legislature. It became the subject of a point of order, and the withdrawal of the point of order. Finally, in a qualified form, it became a part of the bill. It went to the Senate, and the Senate took exception to that legislation, claiming that it was political, and in the discussion between the two Houses, the conclusion of the committee is the recommendation that the legislature should meet on the third Monday of January. We agreed three days ago that that clause should read "the third Monday in February," our conclusion being based upon a recommendation of the gentleman representing New Mexico in this House, he having submitted in detail that which he felt they could fairly stand upon. His recommendation was embraced in the following letter from the Delegate from New Mexico, Mr. CATRON:

To the Committee of Conference on Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation Bill:

The Senate having struck out the provision in regard to the time of the meeting of the legislature and employment of employees of New Mexico, I wish to say that if there should be any contest over it, the Democrats in the Senate stated they would agree to an amendment fixing the time of such meeting of the legislature in either January, February, or March, so as to deprive it of any political character. I did not intend the amendment to be political or to operate politically. I only sought to give sufficient time to prepare, get at issue, and take evidence in contested-election cases, so they could be promptly and intelligently considered.

Under the law of New Mexico the election returns have to be made fifteen days after the election to the secretary, and within thirty days thereafter the notice of contest must be served; but the contestant need not wait so long. He can serve it immediately, but probably would need five days in any event to do so. The contestee has eight days to answer. Thirty days are given in which to commence taking evidence and sixty days in which to take evidence. But the diligent contestant can shorten this up, as follows:

15 days for returns to reach secretary.
7 days to give notice of contest, if he is diligent.
8 days to answer.
10 days, say, to give notice of commencing the taking of evidence.
60 days to complete the evidence.

100 days in all.
5 days to have contest papers filed in the legislature.

105
10 days to meet all other contingencies.

115

The next election will be held on November 3; this will give—

27 days of November,
31 days of December,
31 days of January,
26 days of February.

115 days to February 26, 1897.

As no change can be made in the office of governor before March 19, at the earliest date, it will give the governor nearly a full month in which to make his appointments and have them confirmed.

I am willing to consent to a change to the fourth Monday in February, 1897, if insisted on.

The report which we had agreed upon three days ago was in accordance with this communication. Yesterday the Senate rejected that date, and the committee of conference has now agreed upon the third Monday of January, believing that to be the best conclusion we could reach on this question. I shall a little later in the discussion yield a few moments to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McCALL], a member of the committee, who is familiar with this matter and who desires to make a brief statement on the question.

The main contention, however, between the two Houses has been upon the paragraph pertaining to United States commissioners. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in submitting what is known as the urgent deficiency bill early in this session of Congress, called the attention of the House to the rapid growth of applied-for appropriations and expenditures in connection with the Department of Justice and the United States courts. In his report upon the first deficiency bill he made this statement:

The committee desire to call attention to the very large sum—$3,242,582.19—appropriated in the bill for expenses of United States courts, $3,006,000 of which sum is on account of the current fiscal year. They append herewith a statement showing the regular appropriations and the deficiencies made for the expenses of United States courts for the fiscal years 1885 to 1896, inclusive.

This exhibit shows, for the period named, a growth in the expenses of this branch of the public service of more than 100 per cent. The expenses for fees of United States commissioners have grown from $127,150 for the fiscal year 1889 to $340,000 for the current year; and the fees of witnesses have increased from $900,000 in 1889 to $1,500,000 for the current year.

That these expenditures are abnormal, and that some reform in the law should be instituted, the committee are well satisfied; but under the rules of the House they have no power in the premises other than to recommend the appropriations which are necessary to meet the demands of this branch of the public service as they arise under existing law, and to express the earnest hope and recommendation that the proper committee or committees of the House will take up the matter without delay during this session, with a view to the enactment of proper legislation.

It would seem that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in this suggestion was in touch with the House. He undoubtedly impressed the House with the necessity of some change in connection with these growing expenses connected with the judicial administration of this Government. After deliberation, the House, in this bill providing for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, accepted the recommendation of the Judiciary Committee of the House. Under the leadership of the chairman of that committee [Mr. HENDERSON], the House incorporated in this bill what has been known as the Updegraff bill, making detailed provisions with reference to compensation of United States marshals, United States district attorneys, and United States commissioners. We thus ingrafted upon our legislative bill a positive line of reform in connection with all the expenditures pertaining to this great division of one of the Departments of the Government.

As the Senate in the first instance rejected all of these provisions, it has been, ever since the first conference with the Senate, a question how we could best maintain these provisions of our legislation. It is a matter of satisfaction that in this report in almost every instance the legislation recommended by the House has been finally approved. In this connection I give the best estimate we have been able to obtain as to the saving which this legislation will effect if it should become a law:

Saving—
On marshals' salaries, annual	$103,007
On district attorneys' salaries, annual	58,000
On commissioners' fees, annual	125,000
On mileage of district attorneys and marshals	125,000
By reduction of frivolous prosecutions	750,000
By diminished mileage of witnesses, to be worked by properly locating commissioners	100,000
On assistant attorneys and deputy marshals by being placed under control of Department of Justice	100,000
Total	1,361,007

In other words, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF], of the Judiciary Committee, having examined the details of the legislation which we propose and hope to see enacted into law, claims that, taking the estimates of the present system for the next year, as against the amounts which will be paid under these fixed salaries and compensations provided for the future in this bill, the annual saving by this legislation will be $1,361,007 each year. If that is so, the House is certainly to be congratulated, first, upon the wisdom of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in calling attention to these excessive expenditures and, secondly, upon the wisdom of the Judiciary Committee in suggesting such legislation which to-day, so far as the conference report is concerned, has been accepted by both sides of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. I should like to ask the gentleman one question. He estimates that the saving under this new method of compensation will amount in round numbers to $1,300,000. One item of that computation, if I understood him correctly, is $750,000 which is expected to be saved by doing away with "frivolous prosecutions." Upon what does he base that estimate? What facts can he refer to tending to show the amount which will be saved in that way?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will leave that to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF], who has gone closely into the details and has furnished information of great value to the committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. I simply call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this is merely guesswork, and in the end I think time will clearly demonstrate that my fears are well founded. My opinion is that you will lose some as to marshals, in the difference in paying salaries and mileage, in some of the States. The amount you claim to save by making this change will, I fear, be more than made up in mileage paid marshals under the new law.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, the gentleman has made his criticism, and I have no answer to make to that, except that I think there is of necessity some guesswork about it.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Tennessee is mistaken. They are paid mileage under the old law.

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. But that is on a different basis altogether. They were and are paid mileage, but there was a limit fixed by the old law on the amount of salary receivable.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is no difference on that score, I will state to the gentleman.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am not in error, I repeat, Mr. Speaker; and say that this is wholly guesswork, as to the $750,000 from minor prosecutions.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then I assume the gentleman regards his own statement as something else than guesswork. What is it? He makes the bold charge that the gentleman who had this matter under his control, who has examined it thoroughly, who has gone carefully through every detail of it and made a critical examination and presents a statement—that in the end it is mere "guesswork." Now, let the gentleman give his statement based on anything else than guesswork, and we will know how to appreciate its value.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will give my statement and let you figure it out for yourself. I say that there is not a fact presented in that statement on which you can base an accurate opinion as to the saving of the $750,000 that you claim is to be saved in frivolous prosecutions.

Mr. BINGHAM. Now, I am going to meet the gentleman's proposition in arithmetic and present him some conundrums in figuring out the appropriations for the past ten years on this very subject. We find that there are reductions that should follow in expenses of the United States court because of placing attorneys and marshals on the salaried list in every item of appropriation. We find, for instance, that as to the fees of United States commissioners the expenses have been trebled within the last ten years. The gentleman answers my question by an assertion. Now he can show, if he can by other than guesswork, why the expenses of United States commissioners should have trebled in ten years in the general business of the courts. For fees of witnesses the expenses have doubled in the past ten years. There is another conundrum for him to answer. For the fees and expenses of United States marshals the expense has doubled in ten years. Juror fees, United States courts, have increased 25 per cent in the past ten years. Fees of clerks have increased about 33 per cent in the past ten years, and for all the expenses of the United States courts the appropriations have been more than doubled since the fiscal year 1885. Under the fee system the attorneys could earn as compensation $425,000. Under this act the salaries amount to $280,500, or a reduction of $139,500 in expenditures per annum. Marshals could earn under the old plan $420,000; under this act their salaries amount to $267,000, or a reduction of $153,000 per annum.

That is a critical examination and the result of a careful and painstaking investigation of the details of this matter, showing the increase of expenses within the last ten years, and what we know to be the reductions under the terms of the new arrangement.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman has not yet given one solitary item to base any reasonable calculation upon as to the amount saved on the $750,000 item which he claims will be made in the reduction of frivolous prosecutions.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not propose that any statement of the gentleman shall stand unchallenged in this House that would even by deduction or inference take from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations the credit to which he is entitled in calling the attention of this House to this growth of expenditures in this division of the Government, and the earnest, careful action of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House in suggesting and submitting this plan as a remedy.

Mr. McMILLIN. And I am not going to be put in a false attitude by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I have not denied, and do not deny, that there are reductions of expenditures in some of the items he has mentioned. Nor do I take from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, General HENDERSON, any of the credit to which he is entitled; because for him no man has a higher regard than I. But when the gentleman in charge of this measure undertakes to figure out that under this one item there is a saving of $750,000, and he can not give a single reasonable foundation for the calculation, I claim that it is mere guesswork; and that is the matter I have challenged; and I will not let him switch me off into a controversy with somebody else.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me a moment?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. Much of the calculation of Judge UPDEGRAFF is demonstrable——

Mr. McMILLIN. That is true.

Mr. HENDERSON (continuing). And a part of it is merely speculative——

Mr. McMILLIN. Now we agree as to that.

Mr. HENDERSON (continuing). But I believe the speculations and deductions made by him—and I regret that he is not present just at this time—will be more than sustained by experience in the administration of the new law. But whatever is in the womb of the future there is no man to determine, and there is no use in getting into a controversy about it. The data upon which this figuring has been done were largely derived from a careful statement prepared by the Department of Justice, and in conference with them officers of long service in the Department of Justice being at work with the subcommittee when that was done. One thing is certain, we are about to pass into law a great and needed reform.

That brings me to a point which I can not allow to pass. The suggestions of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], always so thoughtful and kind, would make it appear to the House and country that this legislation was at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON]. I can not allow that to pass without in a degree challenging it. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the last Congress, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], I myself in a former Congress when upon the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], and many other members of the Committee on Appropriations have again and again pointed out this evil, and when I came to the chairmanship of the Committee on the Judiciary it was one of the first things to which I addressed my attention, putting it into the hands of a strong subcommittee, with Judge UPDEGRAFF as chairman and Judge BURTON of Missouri and Judge CULBERSON of Texas as his associates.

Bills had been introduced, investigations were had, and work was being done before the suggestion came from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON]. When he did call attention to it, at the time referred to by my friend [Mr. BINGHAM], I happened to come upon the floor of the House and rose in my place and told him we were looking after that matter in the Committee on the Judiciary. Suggestions for years have been prolific from the press and the people in regard to this matter, and I congratulate this House on having put its shoulder to the wheel with us to work this reform. I want above all to personally thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] and his associates on the subcommittee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McCALL], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], for their loyalty to the House in standing by this proposition and helping to sustain the doctrine laid down, and giving us, after long conference, substantially the bill passed by this House. I make this statement in justice to the House, in justice to my own committee, I deserving least of all and the members of my subcommittee the most. And I also want to publicly acknowledge the valuable aid rendered the committee by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TRACEY]. I deemed it to be my duty to make these statements in connection with that made by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. One question. Did not the President of the United States in his message call special attention to this subject?

Mr. HENDERSON. I regret to say that I did not make a special study of that, as my mind was made up anyhow; but the leader on the Democratic side of the House is an authority on all these great questions. Behold the man! [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. The President did call attention to that in one of his first messages to Congress.

Mr. BINGHAM. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. HENDERSON] well knows that I would not, either in thought or word, detract from any of the active interest or efforts on the part either of preceding Appropriation Committees or on the part of his own committee in their earnest labor to secure this legislation. I simply quoted, having it before me, the report of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] in connection with the urgent deficiency bill. The language was so pronounced and pointed, that I thought it was fair to adorn my statement with his utterances.

Right in that connection I have a letter from the district attorney of the eastern district of Pennsylvania, Mr. James M. Beck, appointed about six weeks ago under the present Administration, and therefore just going into office, his predecessor having held for four years. His statement is so honorable and so worthy of public notoriety, that I wish to read the letter to the House, that it may form a part of the record of the proceedings in connection with marshals and United States district attorneys. His letter is as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, April 25, 1896.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your telegram of the 25th, and am obliged to you for your courtesy in sending me this early information as to the action of the conference committee. I confess to some disappointment at the result, chiefly because I can not but feel that any salary less than $5,000 lessens the dignity of the office. It is unquestionably the second most important office in this country in the importance of the cases which it handles, but it is given a smaller salary than districts of much less importance. Pecuniarily it is about one-half what the office has been worth in the last four years, but it is fair to add that the work will be in some respects lessened, and the discharge of the district attorney's duties will be more pleasant under the salary than the fee system. I am so persuaded as to the viciousness of the latter that, irrespective of the amount of the salary, I am glad that Congress has changed it. Any system that puts a pecuniary premium upon convictions and a discount on acquittals is wrong.

I take this occasion to thank you very heartily for your kind interest in the matter.

Yours, very truly, JAMES M. BECK.

Hon. HENRY H. BINGHAM,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Now, if there are no questions which gentlemen desire to submit in connection with the conference report, I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McCALL], a member of the committee of conference.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I did not understand from the reading of the report, and I ask the gentleman now, how the section relating to commissioners is left, compared with what it was when first reported?

Mr. BINGHAM. With reference to the going out of the present commissioners, the date is changed from June 30, 1896, to June 30, 1897, extending the time one year. The committee believed it was not fair to turn out this vast body, a thousand of the subordinate force of the Government, within a month after the passage of the legislation.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. But otherwise it is the House bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. Otherwise, save changes which the gentlemen of the Judiciary Committees of the two Houses have accepted, it is the bill of the House. Now, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McCALL].

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I agree largely with the statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] in regard to the work done upon the legislative bill, and especially do I indorse what he said when he prophesied great good to the country in the saving of money and expense under this new reform in our judicial system. I do not care to discuss that branch of the work, but to call the attention of the House especially to what is now known as the New Mexico amendment, offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON]. I only do so for the purpose of correcting a statement that has been made elsewhere, and in another forum, as to how that amendment became a part of this bill. It will be remembered that after this bill left the House it was said of it by a very distinguished gentleman, in a discussion of this portion of the bill, that the New Mexico amendment was a political amendment and had been "sneaked" into the bill.

Now, for the protection of the subcommittee and the House, and myself largely, because I had the honor of being in charge of the legislative bill when pending before the House, I wish to state how that amendment came into the bill, to disabuse the minds of gentlemen of the House and the country of the fact that we "sneaked" a political amendment into the legislative appropriation bill. What are the facts? When we reached Territories, and that of New Mexico, the Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] offered an amendment, which finally became a portion of the bill. To that amendment I reserved the point of order. That amendment proposed to change the time of holding the legislature in New Mexico from the fourth Monday in December to the first Monday in May. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], my colleague upon the subcommittee, one of the leaders of the Democratic side of the House, stated that he wished time to look into this matter, and asked that that section be passed until we had finished the bill, and that we could return to it. He asked that to give him an opportunity to examine the amendment. That was agreed to, as the RECORD shows. On the following day, when he had time, as he says in his remarks, to consult with the Committee on Territories, and having slept over night with this political amendment that was "sneaked" into the bill, he stated, after certain modifications had been made by him, that there was no objection to it. Thereupon I withdrew my point of order. He renewed it for the purpose of making a statement, which appears here in the RECORD, and this is what he says:

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to return now to the amendment offered on Saturday last by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose on last Saturday it was with the understanding that to-day we should recur to the section relative to the Territory of New Mexico, for the purpose of considering the amendment offered by the Delegate from that Territory. The point of order which I then reserved I now withdraw.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to renew the point of order as to a part of the amendment. After consultation with the minority members of the Committee on Territories, I make a point of order upon all of this amendment except the first and last paragraphs.

After the gentleman from Missouri prepared that amendment, as I have shown, it was agreed to. That was done after he had consulted with the minority of the Committee on Territories, who were Democrats. This amendment, which is denounced in other quarters as a political amendment, "sneaked" into the bill, came into it in the light of day, after ample investigation by one of the leading Democratic members on the floor, and after consultation with his Democratic colleagues of the minority of the Committee on Territories. They found no fault with it, and allowed it to come into the bill. I felt that I ought to make that statement, in justice to the Republican members of the subcommittee and the Republican members of the House, that the country may know that the gentleman who has largely based his opposition to this bill upon that question in another place, and denounced it as a "sneak," has to thank the minority, the Democratic members of this House and the Democratic members of the subcommittee, for agreeing that it should become a part of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I differ from my colleague in one respect. I do not think the country is very much agitated in respect to the history of this amendment. The gentleman from Tennessee has substantially stated the facts in relation to the matter. It was not "sneaked in." Of course if we were again at the starting point I should insist upon the point of order, and the amendment would have no standing in this bill. I do not propose to plead the "baby act," however, here or elsewhere. That amendment was submitted to the minority members of the Committee on Territories, and while we thought for a time that it was political, it appeared to be so "innocent" that it was allowed to go into the bill. I could not say as much for it now; but I can not say that anyone misrepresented that amendment. No one on this floor did misrepresent it. It seemed to be a very "innocent" affair after the paragraph to which I objected was stricken out. It was, perhaps, not as "innocent" as it seemed to be; but the fault, if any, was my own and the minority of the Committee on Territories.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. I quite agree, Mr. Speaker, with what has been said about the importance of the legislation put into this bill with respect to the officers of the Federal courts. Of course it is largely experimental, as it necessarily must be. It is legislation, undoubtedly, however, upon a correct theory; and if anything in detail be found wrong or ineffectual, the principle, I am satisfied, will be so well vindicated by a trial that whatever of imperfections may be found can be easily corrected.

There has been a great deal said, Mr. Speaker, in regard to appropriations and revenues. There has been much talk, first and last, in this House and in the other, as to the insufficiency of the revenues of the Government to meet the expenditures of the Government.

Now, there are two ways in which the Government can equalise these matters. By either any trouble that may at present exist or that may arise in the future with respect to income and expenditure might be met. One is to increase the revenues; the other is to lessen expenditures. To increase the revenue is to increase the burdens upon the people; to levy upon and collect from them a larger amount of taxes. To decrease the expenditures is to keep the balance account of the Government just as correctly, to preserve it just as neatly, without burdening the people, but with relief to them.

Now, it does seem to me that it is quite possible, with the huge income the Government has—not so huge, however, as its appropriations—by reducing expenditures, to keep the balance upon the right side. And if we were to start in earnestly upon the work of reducing expenditures and keeping the outlay within the limits of the income, we would naturally, I think, be expected to commence with ourselves.

There is in this bill, by action of the Senate, an item to which I wish to direct attention, not by way of criticising our committee of conference, which, under the circumstances, has, I think, done exceedingly well in having preserved in this bill very important items of legislation against serious difficulties encountered at the other end of the building. The particular matter that I refer to is the increase of expenditures with reference to the employees of the Senate. A number of individual clerks to Senators who heretofore have received $1,200 per year are now to be paid $1,500 per year. A number of committee clerks of the Senate who have received $1,440 per year are now to be given $1,800 per year. Then, too, the number of employees of the Senate is increased to some extent.

I think that if our brethren at the other end of the Capitol had wrestled very earnestly with this branch of the question of bringing the expenditures and the income of the Government to a "parity" (to use a very much-abused word) they would not have gone into the business of increasing the number or pay of employees of their own body. What reason is there why each of these clerks of individual Senators should be paid $1,500 per year instead of $1,200 per year? Is it because in the past years they have been underpaid? No. Or is it because their employers are expecting to exact a greater or more skillful service, or longer or harder hours of work, or to exchange their present employees for others more costly and more efficient? No.

The same questions arise with reference to the committee clerks. Fourteen hundred and forty dollars per year is a tolerably liberal compensation for an average Senate committee clerk. Why raise it $360 per year, making it $1,800? It is certainly not done in the interest of the general public. It is certainly not done because there is any necessity for doing it. With equal certainty it is done in order that these gentlemen, who enjoy the favor of the Senators who select them, shall receive a larger amount of compensation than they have heretofore received, without doing more work, and without any public necessity for the increase.

This "contingent fund" idea has been greatly enlarged and expanded of late. Formerly a contingent fund was understood to be a somewhat extraordinary fund, for purposes which could not well be specified in advance, which could not well be provided for, item by item. Such funds ordinarily, when they are confined to their legitimate use, are small funds. The idea, however, has been propagated and has grown that each branch of Congress ought to have just as much of a contingent fund as its members may conclude they should have, and that each body, out of its contingent fund, ought to be privileged to make just such expenditures as its members may see fit to make. So it is said: "We do not care about controlling your contingent fund; why should you control ours? Let us control our expenditures and you control yours."

Now, Mr. Speaker, that sounds very well, if we do not stop to inquire where these contingent funds come from. But who contribute to make up these contingent funds? They come out of the public Treasury. They are made up of the people's money, gathered by the Government from the people. The proposition of the Senate is, "Make your contingent fund as large as you please and do what you please with it, and let us make our contingent fund as large as we please and do what we please with it." In other words, "If you allow us to take as much money as we please from the public Treasury we will extend to you the same privilege." Out of this abuse, as I view it, have grown a good many extravagant expenditures. Out of this abuse has grown this particular increase of expenditure proposed by the Senate. The Senators, as I understand, say in substance: "We have a right to control our own expenditures; these employees serve us in our lofty legislative capacity. What difference is it to you what we pay them? We must determine that for ourselves." And in this body I think you have taken up the same idea. Upon that same idea the House the other day provided for supplying its members with clerks during vacation. I will not now go into a discussion of that proceeding.

My views upon it are very well understood, and have been heretofore expressed to the House. I think it an unnecessary expenditure. I think it is particularly objectionable, because it is made to apply immediately, and, in effect, amounts to this House legislating to each individual member who chooses to take the sum that may thus be drawn in vacation, a considerable sum of money over and above the amount for which he agreed to serve his constituents, when he offered himself as a candidate for election in 1894. This tendency to pay out of the contingent fund on all sorts of accounts is constantly growing. This tendency to allow each body to control its own expenditures is constantly growing. And the constant effect of it is to make expenditures larger than they otherwise would be; larger than they need be.

To sum up, it seems to me Congress has not been directing efforts sufficiently to that part of public policy which consists in keeping expenditures within the limits of income. It is not a matter of course that the Government income ought to be increased. The income of the Government now is very great—too great, not too small.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like about one minute more.

Mr. BINGHAM. Go ahead.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, when people talk about there being a "deficit" in the Treasury they do not mean that there is no money in the Treasury; for there is a large quantity there. It has been acquired in a way which I do not approve and do not excuse; there is, however, a large amount of money in the Treasury. When people talk about deficits they mean that the daily, monthly, or yearly income does not meet the daily, monthly, or yearly expenditures.

Such deficit—it is a misnomer, however—may be met either by increasing the amount of receipts or by decreasing the volume of appropriations, so as to keep the expenditures within the income. It seems to me that the latter is the safer and better way. It is a way to afford relief to the people. It is a way to cut off extravagant appropriations. It is a method of reform which carries the reformation to those who most need it. Meanwhile, even if these expenditures ought to be made, if they are necessary and not unnecessary, as I believe, and if for the time being the revenues of the Government are insufficient to meet them, there is, it seems to me, no reason for keeping piled up in the Treasury large sums of money, acquired by the unnecessary and, I think, the vicious sale of bonds, while the people are overtaxed and burdened, and looking in all directions for relief and ready to try almost any expedient in the hope of securing it, and thus far finding their troubles multiply rather than grow less.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I did not wish that what I said a few moments ago should be taken—and it would not be taken by anyone here who knows my action in this House—as implying opposition to the efforts we are making here to check expenditures and to change the method of the administration of justice in the Federal courts. It is known to gentlemen around me that I favored that measure and still favor it. What I desired to call attention to, and all I desired to bring to the attention of the House by my question of the gentleman [Mr. BINGHAM] was that the item of $750,000 which it is claimed will be saved by doing away with frivolous prosecutions is an amount which it would be impossible to reach by any figuring based upon actual facts. Secondly, I expressed a fear, which I entertain yet, that the seeming saving in marshals' fees would probably be more apparent than real by reason of the fact that we have changed the compensation that may be given to marshals as mileage, so that our mileage account may overbalance the saving expected from the reform which we have inaugurated in the other direction.

But this work is important. There has been hardship for years past in the method in which petty prosecutions have been instituted and carried on in our Federal courts. On that subject I think this House has acted none too soon; and if in any respect we have made an error, we may be able to correct it later. I will ask permission to incorporate in my remarks, without taking the time to read it, an extract from President Cleveland's message, giving the President's recommendations to Congress on this subject. It will be seen that we are but following his recommendation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to incorporate in his remarks the matter he has indicated.

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM]. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Then as this is important, and therefore I do not like to be foiled in such a matter by a single objection, I will ask the Clerk to read the passage to which I desired to call attention in my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objecting has a right to hear it. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> I can not too heartily indorse the proposition that the fee system as applicable to the compensation of United States attorneys, marshals, clerks of Federal courts, and United States commissioners should be abolished with as little delay as possible. It is clearly in the interest of the community that the business of the courts, both civil and criminal, shall be as small and as inexpensively transacted as the ends of justice will allow.
> The system is therefore thoroughly vicious which makes the compensation of court officials depend upon the volume of such business, and thus creates a conflict between a proper execution of the law and private gain, which can not fail to be dangerous to the rights and freedom of the citizen and an irresistible temptation to the unjustifiable expenditure of public funds. If in addition to this reform another was inaugurated which would give to United States commissioners the final disposition of petty offenses within the grade of misdemeanors, especially those coming under the internal-revenue laws, a great advance would be made toward a more decent administration of the criminal law.
> In my first message to Congress, dated December 8, 1885, I strongly recommended these changes and referred somewhat at length to the evils of the present system. Since that time the criminal business of the Federal courts and the expense attending it have enormously increased. The number of criminal prosecutions pending in the circuit and district courts of the United States on the 1st day of July, 1885, was 3,808, of which 1,684 were for violations of the internal-revenue laws, while the number of such prosecutions pending on the 1st day of July, 1893, was 9,500, of which 4,200 were for violations of the internal-revenue laws. The expense of the United States courts, exclusive of judges' salaries, for the year ending July 1, 1885, was $2,874,733.11, and for the year ending July 1, 1893, $4,528,676.87.
> It is therefore apparent that the reasons given in 1885 for a change in the manner of enforcing the Federal criminal law have gained cogency and strength by lapse of time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have a clear recollection of the recommendation of the President as just read; but I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether that recommendation was not sent in at the second session of the Fifty-third Congress?

Mr. McMILLIN. It is embraced in the President's annual message of December 4, 1893.

Mr. BINGHAM. That was the second session of the Fifty-third Congress. I merely wanted that fact to appear as part of the record.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say one word.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield, of course.

Mr. DOCKERY. I simply desire to say that in my judgment the replacement of the fee system by fixed compensation for marshals and attorneys, together with the revision of the fees of commissioners and the abrogation of their life tenure, will, in my opinion, effect a great reform in the administration of justice.

Something has been said as to the credit due for the reforms that have already been effected and those to be effected if this conference report is agreed to.

All of the gentlemen already mentioned are fully entitled to the distinction of assisting in effecting these very important reforms. The Attorney-General, the Judiciary Committee, one and all, have labored faithfully and zealously, and also the Committee on Appropriations, as well as other gentlemen not connected with either committee, notably my colleague from Missouri [Mr. TRACEY]. I notice, however, that some gentlemen have not been mentioned in connection with these reforms who are entitled to special distinction. I refer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] and my colleague from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND]. I think this much should be said in their honor and supplementary of the just tributes already paid to other members of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman from Arkansas wants a few minutes, and I yield to him.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I indorse the principle embodied in this legislation of changing from the fee to the salary system, and advocated it not only on the floor of the House when the matter was under discussion but have favored it for years past; but I do not indorse the large salaries and some other provisions in the bill. I shall not now undertake to criticise the provisions of the bill. I did that when the matter was pending before the House for our consideration. But, Mr. Speaker, let it not be understood as admitted that the measure is by any means a perfect one. It is to be hoped, however, that it will result in some good.

I have taken the floor at this time for the purpose of expressing my opinion and belief that the bill will not result in the saving of any money to the National Treasury. If it does it will be because of the very great reduction in the number of criminal prosecutions under it. It is to be hoped that such will be the result. That hope certainly induced many members on this side of the House as well as on the other to support it. If the number of criminal prosecutions is not reduced the aggregate sum required to administer the Department of Justice will largely increase, because the salaries, many of them, carried by the new law are larger than they were before. The number of deputies provided for is indefinite and is left solely in the discretion of the Attorney-General and the judge. So no man can tell with accuracy what will be the relative cost unless he can know in advance what will be the action of the gentleman who presides over the Department of Justice in the matter of allowing deputies to district attorneys and marshals. I do not believe we will save any money with the bill in its present shape, but we will remove the temptation from marshals and attorneys to engage in the contemptible practice of "working up business" and will relieve the people from many frivolous, groundless, and vexatious prosecutions.

While the bill is better than no bill, yet there are many amendments or modifications that ought to be adopted before this bill passes. I hope we will be able in the course of a short time, in the light of experience, to take the step I attempted to point out when the bill was under consideration. If some changes are not made in the provisions you are about to adopt, you will find that the commissioners and deputy marshals will give you just about as much trouble on the question of expense as you had before. I fear that while you have stopped one leak you have made another almost as dangerous.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, there having been fair and ample debate on this subject, I now move the adoption of the conference report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and also move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker, I rose to raise the question of no quorum.

Mr. BINGHAM and others. Too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not too late. The gentleman is entitled to make the point if he rose, as he states, for that purpose.

The SPEAKER, having counted the House, announced the presence of 186 members—more than a quorum.

So the report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

VETO MESSAGE—FEES OF OFFICIALS, PUBLIC LAND OFFICES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return, without approval, House bill No. 4804, entitled "An act to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

The subdivision of the section of the law proposed to be amended by this bill has reference to the fees allowed receivers and registers at public land offices. This subdivision now reads as follows:

"Tenth. Registers and receivers are allowed jointly, at the rate of 15 cents per hundred words, for testimony reduced by them to writing for claimants, in establishing preemption and homestead rights."

The bill under consideration so amends this subdivision that in the first clause a compensation of 10 cents per hundred words is allowed to the registers and receivers for reducing to writing the testimony of claimants "in all cases," instead of 15 cents per hundred words for reducing to writing testimony "in establishing preemption and homestead rights," as provided in the old law.

Whether this reduction of fees preserves an adequate and just compensation to the offices affected I suppose has been duly considered by the Congress.

The bill, however, after providing for this change in compensation, contains the following words: "And in all cases where they (the registers and receivers) can secure a competent person to reduce the testimony to writing for a sum less per folio than the sum herein prescribed, it shall be their duty to do so."

By the addition of these words the bill seems to give certain fees by way of official compensation to the officers named for certain services to be performed by them, and at the same time to provide that if they can secure other persons willing to perform these services for a less sum than the amount allowed to them, they shall forego their fees in favor of such persons.

It is very important that the fees and perquisites of public officers should be definitely and clearly fixed, so that the official may know precisely the items of his lawful compensation and the people be protected from extortion and imposition.

A public officer ought not to be expected to search very industriously for a person to underbid him for official work; and if such a person appeared, the temptation to combination and conspiracy would in many cases lead to abuse.

It will be observed that the officers are not given, by this amendment, the option to do this work themselves at 10 cents per folio, or secure a competent person to do it at a less rate; nor, if they desire, are they allowed to compete with those willing to accept a less compensation. They may charge a fixed rate for the service if performed by them, but in any event, if they can procure another party to perform the services for a less sum, they must do so.

I am convinced that this bill in its present form, perhaps through unfortunate phraseology, if it became a law, would lead to confusion and uncertainty, and would invite practices against which the public service ought to be carefully guarded.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 23, 1896.

Mr. LACEY. I move to refer the message to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The report was read at length. [For text of the conference report see Senate proceedings of Thursday, May 21, 1896.]

The statement of the conferees on the part of the House was read, as follows:

Statement to accompany conference report No. 3 on Indian appropriation bill.

Senate amendment 33 is agreed to with an amendment. As passed by the Senate it provided for an appropriation of $5,000 to purchase seed and for subsistence of the Ponca Indians. The committee being informed that seed for this spring's planting had already been furnished these Indians on credit, the wording of the amendment is changed so as to make the appropriation available for the payment therefor.

Senate amendments 46, 47, 48, 49, and 51 are consolidated in one amendment, providing that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to appoint a commission to consist of three persons, not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party and not more than one of whom shall be resident of any State, to make all the negotiations provided for by all of said amendments, and appropriates $10,000 for the purpose of paying the expense thereof. This reduces the appropriation $14,000.

Amendment 52, providing for determining and locating the boundary line of the Klamath Reservation, is accepted, amended to provide that two of the commissioners shall be practical surveyors. This amendment also provides for the employment of a special attorney, at a compensation of $1,000, to care for interests of the Mission Indians in California.

The Senate recedes from amendment 56.

Amendment 68 is agreed to with an amendment. This is the appropriation for day and industrial schools. The bill as it came to us from the Senate increased the appropriation $2,000,000. This was an error, the intention being to increase the amount two hundred thousand. As agreed to, the amount is $1,235,000.

Amendment 71 increases the appropriation for purchase, lease, and repair of school building and purchase of school sites $100,000. This amendment is agreed to.

Amendment 76, appropriating $50,300 to increase the capacity of the school at Flandreau, is agreed to, it appearing that the present accommodations are wholly inadequate.

Amendments 77 and 78 are both agreed to, with amendments providing the amounts appropriated shall be accepted in full of all demand.

Amendments 86 and 87, increasing by $3,000 the appropriation for the Shoshone Reservation school, is agreed to.

Amendment 94, providing that the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to issue a patent in fee to Benjamin J. Clardy for all the land heretofore allotted to him in the Territory of Oklahoma, as a citizen Pottawatomie Indian, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said and is hereby removed, is agreed to.

Amendments 83, 84, and 85 are amended in phraseology, not in amount of appropriation, and with a provision that Indian children shall not be taken from school in one State or Territory to another against their will or the consent of their parents.

Upon amendments 37, Dawes Commission; 64, the so-called Old Settlers' claims; 66, providing for the disposition of the Cherokee Outlet money; and 69 and 70, the so-called sectarian-schools provision, no agreement has been reached, and as to them a further conference is desired.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, this report is not a final report, as is shown by the statement. It covers all questions in the bill except the question of the continuance of the Dawes Commission, the distribution of the Cherokee Outlet money, the payment of the so-called Old Settlers' claims, and the question of the support of the sectarian schools.

If this report be adopted, Mr. Speaker, it is my intention hereafter to ask the House for instructions in reference to the question of sectarian schools, about which the conferees have been unable to agree.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. What has been done with the proposition for the distribution of lands in severalty among the civilized tribes?

Mr. SHERMAN. Nothing has been done in this bill. There was no provision in reference to that in the bill as it passed the House or as it came to us from the Senate. That question is covered by a separate bill, which has been favorably reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs; but it is not in this bill, and could not come up except upon the question of the continuance of the Dawes Commission, I imagine.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs one question. Does he propose to ask for instructions as to the distribution of the funds for the Old Settlers?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not propose to ask for instructions, but we are perfectly willing to be instructed by the House on that question, if the House so desires. The intention simply was to ask for instructions in reference to sectarian schools. That of course we should not do until after this report is adopted, because that matter is not covered by this report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If this report is accepted, then, when the question comes up on the matter of instructions, will debate be allowed?

Mr. SHERMAN. We shall have to dispose of that matter when that question arises. It can not be determined now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make that point for the reason that I should like to express some views on that matter. I should like to do it now, if debate is not going to be allowed when the matter comes up.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not covered by this report. I think it is a matter we shall have to take care of when we reach it and not now. I move, Mr. Speaker, that this report be adopted, and that the matters not covered by it be the subject of further conference.

Mr. McRAE. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if the amendment No. 57 is included in the agreement?

Mr. SHERMAN. Amendment No. 57 was included in a former conference report which has been adopted by the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move, in reference to the other matters, the House insist on its disagreement, and that a further conference be ordered. Pending that, I move that the House conferees be directed to recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendments 69 and 70, and accept the same.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the question of the sectarian schools, and I desire to explain that matter briefly to the House. In the first place, the bill as it came from the committee to the House, as the House will recollect, contained the declaration that it was the purpose of the Government at the earliest practical moment to dispense with sectarian schools, and provided that the Secretary should not contract during the next fiscal year to an extent larger than 60 per cent of the amount contracted for in the last fiscal year. That proposition was stricken out by the House, and in lieu thereof there was inserted this proposition:

And it is hereby declared that it is the intention of this act that no money herein appropriated shall be paid for education in sectarian schools, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby charged with the duty of so using and administering said appropriation as to carry out said object, and he is hereby authorized and required to make all needful rules and regulations necessary to prevent the use of any part of said fund for education in sectarian schools.

That section the Senate has stricken out, and in lieu thereof has inserted the following:

And it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to make no appropriation whatever for the education of Indian children in any sectarian school, just as soon as it is possible for provision to be made for their education otherwise; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make such provision at the earliest practicable day, not later than July 1, 1898: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with present contract schools for the education of Indian pupils during fiscal year 1897, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children and to an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1895.

So that, Mr. Speaker, it appears that whichever section is adopted the Government declares it to be its settled policy that we will not maintain sectarian schools any longer than is absolutely necessary. By the bill as it passed the House the proposition was to stop short now. By the Senate amendment the proposition is to cut off sectarian schools, not in a moment, but at the end of two years, allowing the Secretary or the Commissioner in the meantime an opportunity to provide means for the education of these children in place of the sectarian schools which are done away with. In my judgment this is wise. In all fairness, if we are to do away with these schools, let us do so gradually, so that other provision may be made for the education of the children, and that those persons, whether religious bodies or individuals, who have invested in these schools may withdraw with the least loss from a legitimate business in which they entered in good faith and with philanthropic purpose.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman from New York permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MORSE. Does the gentleman think the present Congress, either House or Senate, can bind its successors to any policy such as he has indicated? Will not they be a law unto themselves?

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course, there is no question about that. We can not enact anything that future Congresses can not undo.

Mr. MORSE. So that, as it stands, it will be a mere sentiment or expression of opinion on the part of the present Congress, and nothing to bind our successors.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is true, of course. Yet let me say that the last Congress, in the Indian appropriation bill, declared that it was the policy of the Government to do away with these schools at the earliest practicable moment; and the Commissioner or Secretary stating that this could be properly done in four or five years, a reduction of 20 per cent in the amount expended in this branch of educational work among the Indians was provided in last year's bill. The Committee on Indian Affairs of this House, accepting that declared policy of the Government, as stated in the last Indian appropriation bill, reported a bill to this House following it out to the letter; and I have no doubt that if either section is accepted here, in the future the action of the committee would be the same. Of course there is no question of the absolute right of a future Congress to do as it pleases. About that the gentleman and I will not differ.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not desire to yield the floor. I want to move the previous question.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Then I will make a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the proper motion to make at this time that the House insist on its disagreement and ask for a further conference, instead of the motion that has been made to agree?

The SPEAKER. The motion to concur has precedence.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I take it it is a question of which side votes "yea" and which side "nay."

The SPEAKER. One moment. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York to say that he moved to insist on the disagreement, and then proposed to move to instruct the conferees to agree. The Chair thinks that is not the usual proceeding; and that it should be a motion to bring before the House the question of concurring in the Senate amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. I intended, pending my motion to disagree, to move that the House conferees be instructed to recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendments numbered 69 and 70, and agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. It would seem as if that should be determined by the House itself on a motion to concur in the Senate amendments, which motion could be made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well, Mr. Speaker; let it be that way. It seems to be a matter of no consequence which way the motion is put. I made the motion in conformity with my individual wish, but if the other is the better parliamentary procedure I am perfectly willing to make the motion that way. I understood that it was the purpose of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to move an amendment in that form.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from New York would take precedence of the other, even if the other motion had been made first.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I understand the rule to be that the motion to insist has precedence.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not desire to make the motion in that form, because I should vote against it, and I did not wish to submit a motion against which I should vote. If the gentleman from Kansas amends my motion, I do not see why it does not attain the same end.

Mr. McRAE. Can not the gentleman from New York attain the same object by withholding his motion to recede until after the other motion is passed upon? Or, if he does not desire to take that course, let the gentleman from Kansas move to insist.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist and ask for a further conference upon amendments 69 and 70.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I wish at the proper time to present a resolution instructing the House conferees to insist on the House disagreement to the specific amendment numbered 69. I will send up the resolution and have it read for information. I think this resolution will put the matter in a form so as to be easily understood and passed upon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that the gentleman's resolution be read; and if it makes the matter any clearer to the House, the vote might be taken in that way.

The resolution proposed by Mr. HAINER of Nebraska was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the House conferees on House bill 6249, "A bill making appropriation for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department," etc., be, and they are hereby, instructed to insist upon the following provision in said bill as it passed this House, to wit:

(69) And it is hereby declared that it is the intention of this act that no money herein appropriated shall be paid for education in sectarian schools; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby charged with the duty of so using and administering said appropriation as to carry out said object; and he is hereby authorized and required to make all needful rules and regulations necessary to prevent the use of any part of said fund for education in sectarian schools.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. The gentleman from New York will observe that I have set out in the resolution the exact language of the provision in the House bill. It will, therefore, be easily and clearly understood; and if he will allow me, unless he desires debate, I will move the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point that the resolution of the gentleman from Nebraska is not in order at this time. A conference report is before the House, and no resolution such as the gentleman offers is in order.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I have not offered it yet. It has simply been read for information.

The SPEAKER. There is no conference report before the House. That has been accepted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is, I understand, a conference report on the matter under discussion.

The SPEAKER. The bill is before the House for action by the House on a motion for another conference, and the question is as to the way in which the result shall be arrived at. A motion to recede and concur would take precedence of the other motion, but as the vote one way or the other will be just as effective, the Chair supposes that can be easily arranged.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see, Mr. Speaker, why we should not take the vote on my motion rather than upon the resolution of the gentleman from Nebraska. The one is simply the reverse of the other.

The SPEAKER. After the vote is taken a proposition for instructions can be received.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I offer the resolution which has just been read, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the orderly method would be to have a vote on the question of receding or concurring, and when that is decided, then, if instructions to the conferees are found necessary, a proposition for instructions can be offered and acted upon. That is the regular way of proceeding.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I understand the statement of the Chair, my motion is first to be voted on.

The SPEAKER. The motion to recede and concur is the one to be first voted on.

Mr SHERMAN. On that I ask the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in Senate amendments numbered 69 and 70. If no separate vote be called for, the question will be put on both amendments together.

The question being put, it was (on a division called for by Mr. SHERMAN) decided in the negative—ayes 34, noes 99.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I now move the adoption of the resolution which was read a moment ago, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska to give way for a few moments, that I may say something on this question. It seems to me unfair that after other reports, dealing with minor matters, have been discussed all day, a matter involving a great issue like this should be put through without debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I appeal in all decency and fairness for the right of debate. This question has not been fairly met and properly discussed.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of ordering the previous question——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is.

The question was put on ordering the previous question; and it was ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there no debate allowed on this question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The whole question has been debated and passed upon once or twice by the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the Chair will pardon me, I do not think the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Nebraska has ever been debated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that no debate is in order on this proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I doubt the vote on the question of ordering the previous question, and call for a division. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The SPEAKER. It is too late to call for a division.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to do that, because the result was announced by the Chair, and another question has arisen.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the question has been put to the House and passed?

The SPEAKER. The question was put to the House, and decided in the affirmative.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When I doubt the vote upon the previous question, can not my point be entertained after the vote is announced by the Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Not after the transaction of other business; not after other matters have been entered upon.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I appeal in all fairness to the judgment of the House. I was interrupted by gentlemen conversing about me and making suggestions, and I did not hear the announcement at the time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be very glad to entertain the gentleman's point; but the matter has been disposed of. He did not even rise at the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want an opportunity to speak upon this proposition—an opportunity which has been denied me on this floor. I think this proceeding is unfair; and I enter my protest in behalf of the people of my district, because I have been denied the opportunity to voice their sentiments in fair discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think I am always in order when I am undertaking to voice the principles of the people whom I represent.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the gentleman from Nebraska. [The question was put.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 115, noes 25.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 31 voting in favor thereof—more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HENDRICK. Mr. Speaker, we should like to understand the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again read the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The resolution of Mr. HAINER of Nebraska was again read.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I desire to make an inquiry. As we understood the reading of these proposed instructions, a part of the language was "the sectarian Secretary of the Interior." It seems to me there must be something wrong in the wording of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the gentleman is mistaken. The language of the resolution is "the Secretary of the Interior." The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. McCULLOCH. I want to understand this resolution. As I understood the reading, it spoke of "the sectarian Secretary."

The SPEAKER. As the Chair has just stated, the resolution does not contain that language.

Mr. MORSE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, my colleague [Mr. FITZGERALD] was promised some time to speak on this proposition. Is it in order now to ask unanimous consent that he have permission to print his remarks in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would not be a good precedent to submit such a request after the roll call has been ordered. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 22, recorded "present" 12, not voting 167; as follows:

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, General NEILL, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "aye" on this proposition.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I notice that I am mentioned as being paired with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. The intention was that this pair should begin after to-day.

Mr. DOCKERY. In respect to that pair, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the gentleman from Texas, now absent on a conference committee, sent me word to pair him; and upon inquiry of the gentleman in charge of the pairs I was informed that Mr. SAYERS was paired with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TRACEY], and so took no further steps in the matter, supposing that it was a pair for this day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the correction to be made.

Mr. TRACEY. Well, let the matter stand as it is. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that if Mr. SAYERS were present and voting, I should have voted "aye." I therefore withdraw my vote, having voted in the affirmative.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. DINSMORE, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. JENKINS. My colleague, Mr. BARNEY, is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 154, nays 22; and in addition the following gentlemen are present and not voting: Mr. COBB, Mr. UPDEGRAFF, Mr. CATCHINGS, Mr. TRACEY, Mr. WOODARD, Mr. SCRANTON, Mr. KYLE, Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. MCMILLIN, and Mr. DOCKERY.

Mr. BLUE (having been recorded as present and not voting). Mr. Speaker, I was not here at the time my name was called. I was paired with Mr. COBB——

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman was present since the question was put to the House.

Mr. BLUE. After the second roll call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to a vote if he desires.

Mr. BLUE. Then I will vote in the affirmative.

[Mr. BLUE's name is recorded as above.]

Mr. TRACEY. My name was read as not voting. That is incorrect; I did vote, but withdrew it.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD will show that fact. The gentleman is recorded as present, his vote having been withdrawn.

Mr. GAMBLE. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that at the request of Mr. BARNEY I paired with him, which accounts for my not voting on this proposition, although I was present.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCRANTON], but desire to be recorded as present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be so recorded.

On this question the yeas are 154, nays 22, and a sufficient number of gentlemen being present and not voting to constitute a quorum, the ayes have it, and the instructions are agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the House now insist on its disagreement to the other amendments and ask a further conference thereon.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have conferred with the chairman of the committee and desire to have specific instructions given for one amendment. Will the chairman yield to me?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs moves to insist upon the other disagreements.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is correct; and order a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I desire to move, Mr. Speaker, that the House conferees be especially instructed to insist on their disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 64.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman put his motion in writing?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have not the amendment here. I ask the Clerk to report Senate amendment numbered 64.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the following persons, and not to their assignees, immediately upon the passage of this act, out of the balance remaining of the 35 per cent reserved for payment of legal services rendered and expenses incurred, under contracts entered into by the Old Settlers or Western Cherokee Indians through their authorized commissioners, in the prosecution of their claim appropriated for by act of Congress approved August 23, 1894 (28 Stat. L., page 451), entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes," namely:

To William S. Peabody, $29,000.
To Charles A. Webb, administrator of the estate of C. M. McLoud, $5,050.
To Marcus Erwin, administrator of the estate of Marcus Erwin, deceased, $5,050.
To Theodore H. N. McPherson, $5,050.
To Mary E. Carey, executrix of the estate of James J. Newell, deceased, $3,000.
To John A. Sibbald, $1,000.
To Samuel W. Peel, $5,000.
To Reese H. Voorhees and John Paul Jones, $7,003.86.
To David A. McKnight, $1,000.
To C. M. Carter, $333.
To Belva A. Lockwood, $1,000.
To Joel L. Baugh, $5,000.
To Stephen W. Parker, $5,000.
To Joel M. Bryan, the remainder of said sum of money after paying the foregoing specific sums, be the same more or less: Provided, That every person receiving the sums herein stated shall receipt in full for all claims upon the aforesaid fund.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I shall only occupy a few minutes stating my reasons for the motion.

In the general deficiency act of 1894, chapter 307, passed on the 23d of August, an appropriation was made under judgments of the Court of Claims amounting to some $803,000 to the Old Settlers or Western Cherokee Indians, by their commissioners, naming the three commissioners; and it was provided that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs should reserve only such sum as should be necessary to pay the necessary expenses and the claims for legal services rendered. The wording of the act is:

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is directed to withhold from distribution among said Indians only so much of that part of the said judgment set apart, etc., as is necessary for him to pay the expenses and for legal services justly and equitably payable on account of such prosecution.

Now, you must bear in mind that these Indians are not a body politic or a body incorporate, and so they are peculiarly subject to our jurisdiction as our wards. This sum so provided for in the general deficiency act of 1894 was paid over; that is, the sum of $803,000, and of that sum about 35 per cent was set apart to meet these claims, amounting to $280,000 in round numbers. The sum of $193,000, or 25 per cent, has been already paid over by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Now, the Senate, by this amendment, proposes to come in and dispose of the balance, some $86,000. It is conceded by the Indians, or by their committee, that the sum of $7,000 is due to Messrs. Voorhees and Jones. That would leave a balance of $79,000, and the Senate propose to dispose of this money, which really belongs per capita to these Indians, in this way. They propose to give $40,000, I believe, to claims which have already been specifically rejected by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in whom is vested the sole power of determining the justice and equity of the claims presented against this fund. They decide, without giving the Indians any hearing or any opportunity to present their side of the case, that the judgment of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is wrong. Then they give $20,000 to claims which have never been passed upon; that is, $40,000 to rejected claims and $20,000 to claims never determined, never adjusted, never even presented to the proper authority for adjustment. Then the balance of $19,000 they give to a man who seems to have had a good deal to do with the case, but who has already been paid some $52,000 in full. So of these funds, which belong to these Indians, amounting to $79,000, which they claim, this amendment proposes to give $40,000 to men whose claims have been rejected, $20,000 to men whose claims have never been presented, and $19,000 to a man who has already been paid in full.

I say, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, under this state of affairs it is our duty to protest specifically against any such amendment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Does not your motion provide for excluding the claim of Voorhees and Jones, which claim is contained in a bill which has already passed this House, a bill carrying $8,000? That is my recollection.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. According to my view of the law the only person who has the right to determine the justice of these claims is the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Under the act which made the award of $803,000, under the finding of the Court of Claims, it is provided that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall reserve the amount. Now, it is not for us to determine that question; it is for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Suppose your motion prevails, will it not result in the nonpayment of this claim which I have mentioned?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Well, I imagine not, because it is conceded that that claim is due, and I presume the Commissioner of Indian Affairs can dispose of that; but this is not the proper way. It is neither for the Senate nor the House to determine the parties who should share in that fund or to whom that fund should be paid.

Mr. HULICK. Was there any evidence before the committee in the Senate as to the propriety or justice of these claims, and has any report been made by a Senate committee upon their validity or justice?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I am informed by these pamphlets, which have been sent to me by one of the gentlemen connected with Indian affairs, and one of the most able and intelligent gentlemen in the city, that these facts were before the committee, and have been printed as a Senate document. Reference is made to that document in the paper which I now hold in my hand. Of course it is impossible, in view of the rapidity with which these matters come up for consideration, for a man to possess himself of all the knowledge which might be desirable.

Mr. HULICK. Did the committee take proof and evidence to sustain the claim, and upon that evidence render judgment in favor of the report they have made?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have a brief here which contains a statement of fact in reference to each claim. For instance, the claim of William S. Peabody. It appears that this claim was rejected, and it is set forth in detail. That claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior paid Mr. Peabody $8,000. Now, after that payment by the Secretary of the Interior of $8,000, presumably in full for his services, an additional award to him is made here of $29,000. I claim that it is not within the power of the conferees of the House, when an appropriation is made, and power is given in the language of the appropriation to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to be the judge of the justice of these claims—it is not within our power to come in and vote that money without a hearing. I yield to the chairman of the committee. I should like to hear his view.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not differ with my colleague from New York in reference to the injustice of allowing these claims. In my judgment none of them should be paid; but I desire the House to know that the Senate conferees are most strenuous in insisting that this amendment shall go into the bill; and it has been intimated that unless the various claims go in or that the claims shall in some manner be provided for, no agreement can ever be reached by the conferees.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Now, how can that be said of the Jones and Vorhees claim, or of the claim of Colonel Peel. Those claims were presented to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and we unanimously reported favorably bills providing for the payment of those claimants. And the bill for the payment of the Vorhees and Jones claim passed this House, carrying an appropriation of something more than $8,000. Now, this was for services rendered by this firm and Colonel Peel to the Indians in the preservation of this very money allowed to them as against the supposedly fraudulent claims or unjust claims of a great number of outside attorneys; and they certainly rendered very valuable and most efficient services to these Indians in the protection of this fund against the claims of other lawyers all over this country.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Most assuredly.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Is the gentleman aware that on February 4, 1895, the firm of Jones, Vorhees & Boudinot received $32,015.45 under this act of 1894 for services rendered?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I know they received a sum of money. I know that their services covered a very long period of time. I know the services of these men resulted in saving to these Indians a very large amount of money that was in this sum allowed to them, and it has been known to every man who has examined these claims and the claim of Colonel Peel that they earned every dollar that they are entitled to under the contract. They are asking for nothing more than they are entitled to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me say to my friend when I made the statement I did not mean to include the claims for services of those who opposed before the Secretary the payment of these claimants, which the Secretary rejected.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That is the motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. SHERMAN. The absurdity of this item is shown by the fact that in the same item is included the payment of ten or twelve different persons or firms for services to the Indians, and in the very same item is included payment to another attorney for successfully opposing the payment of those other claimants. That is the absurdity of the item, but that is the shape it is in.

The only thing I have to suggest to my colleague from New York, and which I did not suggest to him in the brief conversation I had with him over here a moment ago, is that it would be well not to have a specific instruction. We might come to some agreement with the conferees on the part of the Senate by which these items were not paid and yet in some way be disposed of. For instance, it might be agreed to refer the whole matter to the Court of Claims, or to have it settled in some such way. If we are specifically instructed to insist upon this amendment going out of the bill, then I suppose we will not have the power to agree upon any sort of compromise in reference to it, so that specific instructions to the conferees might result in our not disposing of it in any way whatever; whereas, if we were not instructed specifically on this item, we might eventually reach some conclusion with the Senate conferees by referring the matter to the Court of Claims or something of that kind, which would be satisfactory to the House.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Let me suggest to the gentleman that there is some legal doubt about the right to do that. Having voted in the year 1894 some $803,000 to this body of Indians with a certain condition, namely, that such an amount should be reserved as, in the judgment of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, should be necessary to pay certain claims, that transaction would seem to be ended. I do not believe that in 1896 we can come in and say to these Indians: "This reserve fund is no longer subject to the judgment and discretion of the officer to whom we intrusted it in 1894, but we will now relegate the matter to the Court of Claims for adjudication."

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Secretary of the Interior takes the same view of the matter that my colleague takes. That is my understanding. I am not opposed to special instructions. I only suggest that it is possible that such instructions might retard an agreement of some sort that might otherwise be reached.

Mr. HULICK. Have these claims all been presented to the Secretary of the Interior and by him passed upon?

Mr. SHERMAN. Most of them have been presented to him, have been argued before him pro and con, and have been rejected. Others have not been presented at all and, as my colleague from Washington [Mr. DOOLITTLE] suggests, one or two items here are payments to attorneys for opposing these very claims before the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HULICK. Then why would it not be equitable and proper to have those claims as to the justice of which there is no controversy incorporated in the conference report and the others rejected? I will ask the gentleman another question: How did these claims get into the jurisdiction of the Senate committee after having been rejected by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman will have to go to the Senate for that information.

Mr. HULICK. I supposed that the conferees on the part of the House would know something about it, and that is why I asked the gentleman that question. Did you, as one of the conferees, ascertain how those claims came to be taken up and incorporated in this bill after having been rejected by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SHERMAN. They were taken up, I suppose, because the Senate, in their wisdom, believed that the Secretary of the Interior was in error or did an injustice in disallowing the claims, and thought they would right that wrong.

Mr. HULICK. Was there any evidence before the conferees or before the Senate as to the justice of these claims, or was any additional evidence taken?

Mr. SHERMAN. The conferees have taken no evidence. Whether the Senate took any or not I do not know. Certain briefs were presented in regard to some of the claims. Members of the conference committee have been visited many times by parties pressing these claims and have listened to their statements, nearly every one saying that the claim which he favored was that of the person who had rendered the only valuable services, and that everybody else's claim was without merit.

Mr. HULICK. Then would it not be within the jurisdiction of the conferees, and within their duty, to ascertain whether there is any justice in these claims, or whether any additional evidence can be submitted in their favor; and if they find that the claims are not supported by additional evidence, or are not just, then would it not be their duty to insist on the disagreement?

Mr. SHERMAN. From all the light the House conferees had I believe I am authorized in saying that they unanimously thought that most of these claims ought not to be allowed.

Mr. HULICK. Then we should insist that they be not paid, should we not?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; and yet the Senate may be so insistent that it might be imperative to find some middle ground whereby these claims might be referred to some judicial tribunal, if that is possible under the law (and my colleague from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] thinks it is not), to dispose of. That might perhaps be a wise solution of the problem. Where an intimation is given that this item must be settled in some way in order to have an Indian appropriation bill passed at all, it becomes somewhat serious, and we desire, if we can, to get upon some middle ground on which all can agree.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, in addition to what has been said with regard to this matter I desire to make a brief statement in regard to the claim of Colonel Peel and also the Voorhees claim. This fund was assaulted by these various claimants, and these two particular attorneys were employed for the purpose of defending the fund. They did defend it successfully against nearly every one of the claims mentioned in this bill. Amongst others is the Peabody claim for $29,000. Now, there is no contest whatever on the part of the Indians against either the Voorhees or the Peel claim, as I understand. Both those claims have gone through the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House and have met the approbation of the committee and of the House.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that those claims, both of them, were most thoroughly investigated and that they met with the unanimous approval of the committee, and bills for the payment of both have passed this House.

Mr. LITTLE. So I understand. No one who has investigated the services of these gentlemen or the fruits of their services can doubt the propriety of the payment of their claims. There are, however, several other claims to the payment of which the House ought not to consent, and among them this claim for $29,000, which, as I understand, was adjusted and $8,000 paid in final settlement of it. And so with many of the others. But I am inclined to agree with the chairman of the committee that while the conferees might very properly be instructed to resist these matters, they should at the same time be left some degree of discretion.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made by the chairman of the committee that if my motion should be insisted upon it might tend to embarrass the conferees, and in view of the fact that I think I have drawn the attention of the conferees sufficiently to the invalidity of this legislation, I withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from New York is withdrawn. The Chair appoints as conferees the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PENDLETON].

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION AND THE RIGHT OF DEBATE.

The SPEAKER. In regard to the suggestion or inquiry which was made a while ago by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] in regard to the right to speak after the ordering of the previous question, on the ground that there has been no debate upon the pending proposition, the Chair desires to state that this question was raised on the 5th of February last by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], and the Chair had occasion then to consider the right of debate under such circumstances. Under the rules, the right of debate for a limited time is given after the ordering of the previous question wherever the proposition has not been debated. Of course, if that word "proposition" referred to all motions or to any action of the House whatever, debate would have to be granted upon every motion on which the House might be called upon to act, so that it would be impossible to escape a great amount of debate.

The object of the previous question is to bring the House to a vote without debate or without further debate whenever the House sees fit to insist upon a vote. But of course it was very undesirable that any proposition should be sprung upon the House, and, without a word of explanation, forced through under the previous question. Hence an ameliorating clause was introduced into the rule providing that no proposition should go entirely undebated; that is, if it were a new proposition which had not been debated, that it should have the benefit of the provision for limited debate after the ordering of the previous question. But that word "proposition" as embodied in the rule means the main question, as members of the House will see upon examining the language and reflecting upon what the practical working of the rule has always been. For example, debate in Committee of the Whole has always been held to satisfy this clause. So, also, wherever a question has been debated in the slightest manner—where merely a sentence or two have been uttered by the mover explanatory of the measure—such limited debate has been held to satisfy the requirement of the rule.

Now, propositions which come up in the House in connection with the reports of conference committees are all of them propositions which have been debated, and it does not matter that any particular item of the main question or proposition submitted to the House has not been debated. If the subject has had debate and thereby the House has had some information upon it, the rule allowing debate after the ordering of the previous question does not operate. The Chair thinks the matter is very clear, but as some gentlemen seem to have had some doubt about it, although the question has arisen more than once heretofore, the Chair thought he ought to make this statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, just a single statement. My object in asking recognition at the time I did was to say a few words on the proposition submitted to this House in the amendment of the Senate, which, as I considered, was an entirely new proposition, and it was for that reason I thought debate should have been had. I recognize the fair spirit always maintained by the Chair in these matters; but inasmuch as on other conference reports propositions which had been debated for days and days in this House had been recognized as open to debate to-day, I thought that on a question involving, as the then pending proposition did, the justice and right of appropriations for sectarian institutions, those members who favored the proposition submitted by the Senate ought to have been heard. And I still contend, Mr. Speaker, that gentlemen who shut off debate and refused to those of us who believed the Senate had sent to us a fair proposition the right to express our opinions were not dealing fairly and honestly with the representatives of the people.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's remarks are a criticism of the House of Representatives—not an exposition of the rules as administered by the Chair.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Some days ago I submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by me to Senate joint resolution 124, which, doubtless by a mistake of mine, was erroneously printed. I now submit the amendment in a corrected form, and ask that it be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr PEFFER, it was Ordered, That James L. White be permitted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers pertaining to Senate bill No. 886, to provide a home for aged and infirm colored people, there having been no adverse report thereon, subject to the rules of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate as part of the morning business a resolution which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon to amend Senate Rules Nos. XXV and XXXIII, relating to standing committees and the privileges of the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have an explanation of the proposed amendments.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Oregon let the resolution go over for to-day?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It went over for one day.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it a report from the committee?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The resolution is reported from the Committee on Rules. Notice was given on Saturday. It went over one day.

Mr. HALE. As there is a desire on the part of some Senators to debate the resolution, will not the Senator from Oregon consent that it may go over for another day, in order that I may get up the deficiency appropriation bill?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. If there is not any special hurry, I suggest that the resolution go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There is no special hurry, except that the new Manual is about ready to go to press, and it is important to have these amendments disposed of as soon as possible. I will let the resolution go over, however, until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will go over.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Maine will pardon me, I will state that several Senators desire to speak to-day on the bond bill, and I am very anxious to get through with that measure to-day and reach a final vote. If we wait until 2 o'clock, when that bill comes up as the unfinished business, it may be difficult to get a vote to-day.

Mr. LINDSAY. We do not hear a word on this side.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is unable to hear the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to get through with the bond bill to-day. There are several Senators who wish to speak upon it. If that bill is not taken up until 2 o'clock, it will be late this evening before we can get a vote, and possibly we may not reach a vote this afternoon. Therefore I suggest to the Senator from Maine that it would be better to take up the bond bill now and proceed with the discussion, as several Senators are ready to speak, instead of taking up the appropriation bill now and having to lay it aside at 2 o'clock to proceed with the consideration of the bond bill. I ask the Senator from Maine to let us take the day, beginning now, if the morning business is through, so as to conclude the consideration of the bond bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state that it will be impossible to get a vote on the bond bill to-day, even if the Senator from Maine yields. There are more Senators than the Senator from North Carolina knows of who intend to speak on the subject, and I will say to the Senator from Maine and the Senator from North Carolina it will not be possible under any circumstances to get through with the bond bill to-day.

Mr. HALE. The measure is not, I understand, in such a condition that there has been an hour fixed for the final vote. There was an attempt made the other day, but I think that attempt did not succeed.

Mr. BUTLER. No; there was no arrangement made.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, we can not hear a word on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. HALE. Under the circumstances, with the importance of getting the deficiency appropriation bill out of the way, so that the Committee on Appropriations will not then be in the way of any other measures except as to conference reports, I think it incumbent upon me to ask the Senate to take up the deficiency appropriation bill now and go on, and at 2 o'clock I will confer with the Senator about the further order of business.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no objection, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall feel compelled to ask the Senate at 2 o'clock to take up the bond bill, and if consent is not given I shall ask the Senate to determine by vote which measure is to be proceeded with.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The bond bill is the unfinished business and comes up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly; but the suggestion I make is that we take it up now to expedite matters, instead of devoting an hour to the consideration of the appropriation bill and then laying it aside for the bond bill.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from North Carolina sees that there are objections on the part of other Senators to that course, and they want to go on with the appropriation bill; so that it is not in my power to make such an arrangement.

Mr. BUTLER. The sooner we proceed with the bond bill the better.

Mr. CHANDLER. The worse to take up the bill, because it ought not to pass at all, while it is necessary that the appropriation bill shall go through.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the view of the Senator from New Hampshire, who is in favor of the continued issuance of bonds; but certainly it is not the opinion of those who are opposed to bond issues.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. Debate is not in order except by unanimous consent. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to proceed to the consideration of House bill 8293.

Mr. BUTLER. At the suggestion of several Senators I shall not insist on the bond bill coming up now, but at 2 o'clock, when it comes up of course as the unfinished business, I shall insist that it be proceeded with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes; further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 37, 64, 66, 69, and 70 to the bill, agreed to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, and Mr. PENDLETON managers of the conference on the part of the House.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8293) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the committee be considered as they are reached.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 2, to increase the appropriation for stationery, furniture, fixtures, and repairs, and for the purchase of passport paper for the State Department from $500 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 18, before the word "cents," to strike out "two thousand one hundred and seventy dollars and sixty-two" and insert "one thousand six hundred and ninety-seven dollars and ninety-nine"; so as to make the clause read:

Reimbursement of A. Watt and E. A. Mitchell: To reimburse A. Watt and E. A. Mitchell, of Newcastle, New South Wales, for losses sustained by each through the payment of certain drafts illegally drawn on the Secretary of State and Secretary of the Treasury by George T. Baggs, late United States commercial agent at Newcastle, New South Wales, and purporting to be on account of the business of the United States Government, aggregating $1,697.99, together with interest thereon to date of final settlement of the claims by the Treasury Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 20, to increase the appropriation for loss by exchange, diplomatic service, from $966.37 to $1,057.32.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 8, to insert:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation for "Contingent expenses, United States consulates," for the fiscal year 1895, $799.82.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 19, to insert:

Payment to Eliza Jaqua Gray: To pay Mrs. Eliza Jaqua Gray, widow of Isaac P. Gray, late United States minister to the Republic of Mexico, $8,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 6, to insert:

Transporting remains of diplomatic officers, consuls, and consular clerks: To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation for "Transporting the remains of diplomatic officers, consuls, and consular clerks to their homes for interment," $730.76.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," on page 6, after line 14, to insert:

That the proceeds of sales old material, condemned stores, supplies, or other public property of any kind, before being deposited into the Treasury, either as miscellaneous receipts on account of "proceeds of Government property" or to the credit of the appropriations to which such proceeds are by law authorized to be made, there may be paid the expenses of such sales, as approved by the accounting officers of the Treasury, so as to require only the net proceeds of such sales to be deposited into the Treasury, either as miscellaneous receipts or to the credit of such appropriations, as the case may be.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 7, to insert:

Office of the Treasurer: For the purchase of one press and one separating machine for use in sealing and separating securities, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 3, to insert:

For salaries of one pressman, at $1,200; one feeder, at $660; one separator, at $660; one receiver, at $660; and one counter, at $660, in all $3,840, to be available during and until the close of the fiscal year 1897.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 24, under the head of "Treasury Department," to increase the appropriation to pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation for "Fuel, lights, and water for public buildings" for the fiscal year 1895, from $159.85 to $190.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 4, to increase the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes from $5,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 15, to insert:

To enable Thomas W. Palmer, president of the World's Columbian Commission, to make payment in full for all claims now outstanding against said Commission, $6,517.67.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the rather loose language used here, "to make payment in full for all claims." It ought to read, "adjudicated claims." The word "claims" would extend to just and unjust claims, to rejected claims. Some word should be inserted to indicate the character of the claims.

Mr. HALE. These claims are not adjudicated. They are claims precisely like those that we allowed to Commissioner Davis in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. They do not go to court at all. They are claims some of which the commissioner has paid out and some of which he is obligated to pay by contracts he has made. If we should insert the word "adjudicated" every one of them would have to go to court. They are not judgments.

Mr. SHERMAN. But it says "claims now outstanding." To provide for the payment of claims against the commissioner outstanding would include all sorts of claims.

Mr. HALE. I suggest that we insert the words "due and"; so as to read, "claims due and outstanding." That will include only those that are actually due. The commissioner has to settle that himself.

Mr. SHERMAN. Even that is not very clear. I think the language ought to be carefully guarded.

Mr. HALE. Let the words be inserted so as to read, "due and outstanding."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amend the committee amendment in line 18, after the word "now," by inserting the words "due and"; so as to read:

To enable Thomas W. Palmer, president of the World's Columbian Commission, to make payment in full for all claims now due and outstanding against said Commission, $6,517.67.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I suggest further, for ample precaution, in line 17, to strike out the words "in full" and at the end of the amendment to add "which shall be in full for all such claims."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 11, line 11, to increase the appropriation for customs service from $850,000 to $1,150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 11, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to expend, from the appropriation for collecting the revenue from customs, to provide for the purchase of the necessary land, and for the construction and equipment of sampling works thereon, or for the leasing of suitable buildings and equipment for the sampling and assaying of imported silver ores and other ores containing lead at ports of entry which he may designate, the sum of $45,000, to be available for the fiscal year 1897: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in case of importation of said ores at ports at which no facilities are provided, to send a portion thereof to any port having said facilities, at which port said portion may be sampled and assayed. The collector at the port of importation shall thereupon liquidate the entry upon said assay. In no instance, however, shall a less portion than one-fifth of any importation of ores be sampled and assayed.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask that this provision of the committee, commencing at line 12, on page 11, and ending at line 3, on page 12, be passed over.

Mr. HALE. That may be reserved, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 12, after line 3, to insert:

Refund to S. R. Fowle & Son: That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to refund to S. R. Fowle & Son, Washington, N. C., the sum of $187.08, to reimburse them for tariff exacted and collected from them February 6, 1895, by A. Mayo, deputy collector of customs, Washington, N. C., on cargo of salt imported in schooner Cora from St. Kitts, West Indies, to Washington, N. C.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 12, to insert:

Newspapers and books: To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation for "Contingent expenses, Treasury Department: Newspapers and books," $21.33.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 17, to insert:

Assay office at Helena, Mont.: For wages of workmen, $750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 19, to insert:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation for "Contingent expenses, assay office at Helena," for the fiscal year 1895, $1.59.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 23, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 11, to insert:

Payment to owners of steamer Peter Jebsen: To compensate the owners of the Norwegian steamer Peter Jebsen for damages sustained by said steamer in consequence of a collision with the United States revenue steamer Rush in San Francisco Harbor, March 2, 1896, $2,566.70.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 11, to insert:

Payment to Southern Pacific Company: To pay the claims of the Southern Pacific Company, its branches and leased lines, certified in Senate Document No. 236, this session, $1,542,979.44.

Mr. THURSTON. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if any portion of this amount allowed to the Southern Pacific Company covers any service performed on any railroad or any part of any railroad that is aided by the bonds of the Government.

Mr. HALE. I might answer, and say nothing further, that no part of it is covered. They are simply the claims that have been audited, and such as are put in by the Senate always. They have been thoroughly examined. None of the claims to which the Senator from Nebraska alludes are included.

Mr. THURSTON. I merely ask for information, because the matter has not come to my attention before. Of course all the transportation claims of the Southern Pacific Company, except those for Government transportation on the lines of the Central Pacific or other bond-aided lines which are audited, should be paid.

Mr. HALE. They are all audited.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, after line 2, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to W. L. Hall, for money expended by him in the discharge of his duty as deputy United States internal revenue collector during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, $178.

Should any of the persons hereinbefore mentioned die before payment to the parties herein named, then, and in that event, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the personal representatives of the persons so dying the amount allowed under the provisions of this act.

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed, before paying over to the parties entitled to the same the amount allowed under the provisions of this act, to require them, in consideration of the amount allowed, to release, discharge, and free the United States from all claim, demand, or damage by reason of any injuries received or losses sustained in the Ford's Theater disaster, which occurred on the 9th day of June, 1893: Provided, That the provision of the sundry civil appropriation act, approved August 18, 1894, appointing a joint commission, consisting of five Senators, appointed by the President of the Senate, and five members of the House of Representatives, appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to investigate and report upon the Ford's Theater disaster, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. PLATT. I do not quite know what the words "personal representatives" mean in the amendment. The provision is that in case any one of these parties dies before the payment of the award, the payment shall be made "to the personal representatives of the persons so dying." I suggest that this had better be looked into in conference.

Mr. FAULKNER. The provision means that in case any of these parties dies before the payment for which this award is made by Congress, qualified personal representative of any of these deceased parties will be entitled to receive the amount.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know whether "personal representatives" mean the same thing as "legal representatives." I do not know whether the words mean heirs, legatees, or what.

Mr. FAULKNER. "Personal representatives," as there used, mean the same as administrators. There is no difference between the term used and administrator. Anyone who by the law of the place in which that qualification is made is entitled to receive the personal assets is the personal representative.

Mr. HALE. The legal representative.

Mr. FAULKNER. The personal or legal representative.

Mr. PLATT. The provision does not use the words "legal representatives," and therefore I supposed it meant something different from a legal representative. I simply want the chairman of the committee to look into it when the matter is in conference, and see that that is the proper phrase to be used.

Mr. HALE. We shall look into that.

Mr. FAULKNER. All right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead of "Engraving and printing," on page 26, line 23, before the word "days," to strike out "working"; and on page 27, line 5, after the word "Printing," to insert:

REGULATION OF BOND ISSUES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HALE. I merely rose on the matter of the order of business, not to take the Senator from North Carolina from the floor.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I yield to the Senator from Maine for that purpose.

Mr. HALE. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], who is, I know, very desirous of continuing the consideration of the bill in his charge. While I am opposed to the bill, I am not in favor of any tactics to delay a vote upon it, for I have no doubt it will be voted upon in the Senate at some near point in the future; but being so near finishing the appropriation bill, I ask the Senator to consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, so that the Senate may go on with the appropriation bill. I have no doubt that the appropriation bill will be finished in the course of an hour and a half or two hours. Then it will be entirely out of his way, and I shall not be obliged to test the sense of the Senate by a motion to take up the appropriation bill. I would rather not pursue that course.

Mr. BUTLER. This is the last appropriation bill?

Mr. HALE. It is the last appropriation bill.

Mr. CULLOM. There is nothing additional except conference reports which will be coming in from the Committee on Appropriations. There is one now lying on the table. It will take probably not over ten or fifteen minutes to dispose of that report.

Mr. ALLISON. Conference reports do not displace the regular business.

Mr. CULLOM. They do not displace the regular business at all.

Mr. BUTLER. I would readily yield to the Senator from Maine to continue with the appropriation bill were it not that there seems to be a disposition to filibuster against the bond bill. I ought to say to the Senator from Maine that he has not shown a disposition to do so, but there seems to be such a disposition on the part of some Senators, as we may judge from the newspaper reports, and the newspapers must have gotten their information from Senators. I saw in quite a number of newspapers that there is to be some filibustering tactics to prevent a vote on the bond bill, and the notice the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] served on the Senate means, I suppose, that there will be filibustering; at any rate, it is notice that there will be very lengthy debate and probably numerous amendments, which proceeding would amount to filibustering. I have no desire to delay the appropriation bill or interfere with it; but in the face of what has been said on the floor of the Senate and the reports in various newspapers, which must come from Senators, I would not be doing my duty and would be placed in an awkward light before the country if I agreed that anything should put the bond bill in a position where it could be filibustered to death.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I did not yield the floor for the purpose of taking up any measure. I simply yielded to the Senator from Maine to make a statement, and with that understanding.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HALE. I had not given up the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. STEWART (to Mr. PRITCHARD). Allow me to make a suggestion.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. Inasmuch as everyone is in favor of facilitating business, I suggest that we have an hour fixed on some convenient day when a vote may be taken upon the bond bill; and then, all anxiety as to a vote being reached having been removed, the business of the Senate can accommodate itself accordingly, and the Senators who desire to speak on the bond bill can be heard. I suggest that we agree to take the vote on Wednesday, at 5 o'clock. That would be far enough off to give all Senators who desire to be heard an opportunity to speak.

Mr. HALE. That is, that all debate shall cease at that time and a vote be taken on the bill and any amendments.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; that all debate shall cease at that time and the vote be taken upon any amendments; that amendments shall be put in before that time.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator had better say "the final vote."

Mr. STEWART. Yes; that the final vote be taken at 5 o'clock on Wednesday.

Several SENATORS. Say 4 o'clock.

Mr. STEWART. I will say 4 o'clock on Wednesday. That will give time enough.

Mr. PEFFER. What does the Senator propose shall be discussed in the meantime?

Mr. STEWART. The discussion is to go on.

Mr. TELLER. With other business intervening.

Mr. PEFFER. What other business?

Mr. STEWART. Any other business that may come up.

Mr. HALE. If that is agreed upon, then we will go on with the appropriation bill and finish it.

Mr. STEWART. We will finish that up. Senators will have time enough to make speeches afterwards.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I yielded the floor with the understanding that there was to be no motion made which would take me from the floor. I prefer to make my speech now.

Mr. HALE. I do not know just what took place, but in matters of this kind where a measure is pending and the unfinished business is laid before the Senate ordinarily the Senator in charge of the bill which was pending has the floor. I supposed that I had the floor.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I will state to the Senator from Maine that I had the floor upon the adjournment of the Senate Saturday afternoon and gave notice that I would speak to-day.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly; but that does not give the Senator the floor until this order of business is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit to the Senate the request of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] for unanimous consent, which does not involve the question suggested by the Senator from Maine or the Senator from North Carolina. It is that the final vote be taken upon the unfinished business which has been laid before the Senate, including all amendments of which notice has been given, at 4 o'clock on Wednesday evening.

Mr. PEFFER. Until we may know something further I shall interpose an objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas objects.

Mr. HALE. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that he ask for an hour to be fixed for taking the vote on the bond bill. I understand the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] would prefer to speak now, but it would be vastly better to have some hour fixed when we can vote on this measure. Will the Senator from Maine make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. HALE. Then, in view of what the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Kansas have said, I will make the same suggestion.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from North Carolina feels that it is more important than anything else that he shall go on with his speech now instead of an hour or two from this time, I do not feel that the appropriation bill——

Mr. PRITCHARD. I do not mean any such thing; but I do not want to lose my right to the floor.

Mr. HALE. Of course, if we come to an agreement for a vote, whenever the unfinished business comes up, which will be, if we do make an arrangement, within a few hours, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] will have the floor.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I have no disposition whatever to block legislation.

Mr. HALE. I did not suppose the Senator had. The Senator does not lose his right to the floor. I will make the same suggestion heretofore made, incorporating with it what I understand will be agreed to, if that is agreed to, that at 4 o'clock on Wednesday a vote be taken on the unfinished business in charge of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. A final vote.

Mr. HALE. A final vote upon that measure and all amendments that have been offered or of which notice has been given. If that agreement is made, then I should expect the Senator from North Carolina to consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside in order to finish the deficiency appropriation bill, the understanding being that his measure shall come up immediately after that is finished.

Mr. BUTLER. That includes all amendments of which notice has been given or which may be given.

Mr. HALE. That at 4 o'clock on Wednesday the Senate shall vote on all amendments that have been offered, or of which notice has been given.

Mr. BUTLER. Or which may be offered.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Or which may be pending at that time.

Mr. HALE. All amendments that may be pending. That includes all, of course. That gives ample time.

Mr. PALMER. It is impossible, in my judgment, that any unanimous consent can be obtained for the disposition of the measure under the control of the Senator from North Carolina. I think I ought to say emphatically that an agreement at this time is absolutely impossible. I object to it myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois objects.

Mr. HALE. Then I will test the sense of the Senate on proceeding with the appropriation bill now. I will take no further time, but will call for the yeas and nays upon the motion. The Senate must settle it. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to inquire whether the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senate, in reply to the Senator from Alabama, that the unfinished business having been laid before the Senate, the Chair recognized the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] as entitled to the floor, as he obtained it at the close of the last day's session. Then the Senator from North Carolina yielded to the Senator from Maine, and of course the Senator from Maine is entitled to the floor in his right by reason of the yielding of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HALE. I do not occupy the floor, and would not under the circumstances, except to make the motion and let the Senate settle it. That will be satisfactory to the Senator?

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a point of order. I make the point of order that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] did not yield for anything that would take him off the floor. I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that when a Senator is on the floor for a purpose and yields it must be decided by the judgment of the Senate as to that matter. It is impossible for the Chair to determine the extent of his yielding.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I distinctly stated to the Senator from Maine that I would not yield for a motion that would take me off the floor. I made up my mind that if the Senate should by unanimous consent fix a time for the vote I would yield for the present and let it go on and consider the appropriation bill, but inasmuch as there is objection, I insist upon my right to the floor and that I am entitled to proceed.

Mr. BUTLER. My colleague would have yielded if a unanimous-consent agreement had been reached?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir; if objection were not made to an agreement I would be perfectly willing to yield.

Mr. HALE. I will only say that I was entirely willing, without taking further time, that the Senate should settle the order of precedence, bearing in mind that taking up the appropriation bill will not seriously interfere with the bond bill. The appropriation bill is almost finished. There are only a few pages yet to be read. The bond bill will then come up. I should like to have the Senate settle whether it will go on with the appropriation bill, but I am not going to raise a question with any Senator here about his being unfairly treated by my taking the floor. I will not raise that question with either of the Senators from North Carolina, and if they prefer to go on under these circumstances, rather than to raise that question I will state here and now, in the presence of a very full Senate, that to-morrow morning after the routine morning business I shall move if I can get the floor, and I give notice to that effect, to take up the deficiency appropriation bill; and if it is not finished at 2 o'clock I shall then move that the Senate proceed further with its consideration and finish it; so the Senate will then be put face to face with the proposition whether for the remnant of finishing up an important appropriation bill it will vote it out for any other cause whatever. I shall ask the Senate then to do that, and I will make no further issue with either of the Senators from North Carolina.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I wish to be distinctly understood in this matter. I am now willing to yield, if there is no objection to the unanimous-consent agreement, in order that the appropriation bill may be taken up and concluded. But if there is to be objection, as there is, then I shall insist on my right to proceed with my speech.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose as a matter of fact there would be no objection to allowing the Senator from North Carolina to speak immediately after the appropriation bill is concluded this afternoon.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I so understand.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not understand that the Senator objects to the consideration of the appropriation bill now, provided he may have the floor immediately after it is finished. Am I right in that supposition?

Mr. PRITCHARD. That is satisfactory to me; but I suggest that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] objected to a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CULLOM. The objection by my colleague was made to fixing an hour to vote upon the bond bill, not to laying it aside for the time being. [To Mr. HALE.] I think you had better ask whether that arrangement can not be made, and get the appropriation bill out of the way.

Mr. HALE. At the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois, I will ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I shall ask leave to submit my remarks after that bill is concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. Immediately afterwards.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves——

Mr. HALE. No; I do not make a motion. I do not want to displace the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of finishing the appropriation bill which has been before the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the appropriation bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. ELKINS. I wish to present a substitute for the bond bill, so as to have it before the Senate when the bill comes up. It is just five lines long.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. ELKINS. I merely want to put it before the Senate. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That hereafter, in any sale or disposition of United States bonds, the same shall be first offered to the public for a period of not less than thirty days, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be sold to the highest bidder in case such bids, or any of them, are satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia desire to have the amendment printed?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes; let it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed.

The next amendment was, on page 101, line 15, to increase the appropriation for miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees from $10,000 to $13,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are a number of Senate amendments relating to matters concerning the other House as to which I should like to have the Senator from Maine in charge of the bill make some explanation as to why the committee reported to place them in the bill.

Mr. HALE. I was just ready to say that the rule is always observed between the two Houses that the examination in reference to items touching the employment of the force of the two Houses and as to elections and contests and all that is attended to by each House, neither interfering with the other. In some cases it happens after a bill has passed the House of Representatives, and there has been no opportunity to examine certain matters, there are items which need to be put in the appropriation bills here touching House matters. The Senate Committee on Appropriations has always observed this rule, that it does not take jurisdiction or cognizance of such subjects, unless the proper committee deal with them in the House and request the Senate to insert the items; and there are items of that kind in this bill. In no other case have we interfered with the appropriations for the other House.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 101, after line 16, to insert:

To enable the Clerk, pursuant to the resolution of the House of Representatives adopted May 8, 1896, to pay to each Member and Delegate who is not chairman of a committee entitled to an annual clerk, for clerk hire from the date of the adjournment of the present session of Congress to and including December 6, 1896, an amount not exceeding $100 per month, to be certified by him on the first day of each calendar month in the manner provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893, $176,134.23, together with any unexpended balance, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the appropriation made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1896 to pay Members and Delegates the amount which they certify they have paid or agreed to pay for clerk hire necessarily employed by them in the discharge of their official and representative duties, which unexpended balance is hereby reappropriated and made available for expenditure under the said resolution of the House of Representatives adopted May 8, 1896.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add to the items for allowance to contestants and contestees audited and recommended by the Committees on Elections of the House of Representatives for expenses incurred by them in contested-election cases, beginning in line 1, on page 105, the following:

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HALE. As the reading of the bill has been concluded, I now ask to go back to an unimportant amendment on page 101. I ask that the amendment of the committee in line 6, on that page, be reconsidered and disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 101, line 6, after the word "all," strike out "three hundred and seventy-five," and insert "one thousand one hundred and twenty-five"; so as to make the clause read:

For postage stamps for the Clerk, $300; for the postmaster, $50, and for the doorkeeper $25; in all, $1,125.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote by which this amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered in the absence of objection. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. On the same page, line 10, I offer, as a committee amendment, to strike out "three hundred and seventy-five" and insert "one thousand one hundred and twenty-five."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 101, line 10, after the date "1896," it is proposed to strike out "three hundred and seventy-five" and insert "one thousand one hundred and twenty-five"; so as to make the clause read:

For fiscal year 1896, $1,125.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I have an amendment which has been sent over from the other House by the Committee on Appropriations. I move to insert it on page 101, after line 3.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

For assistant stenographer to committees during the fiscal year 1897, to be appointed by the Speaker, $1,200.

Mr. HALE. On page 99, line 21, I move to strike out the word "six," so as to read, "Hammett S. Delaplane, $60."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 98, after line 21, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

To reimburse the clerk of the Senate Committee on Pensions for money actually paid out by him during the first, second, and third sessions of the Fifty-third Congress and the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress for stenographer and clerk hire, twenty-two months, $770.

Mr. HALE. On page 82, after line 17, I move to insert:

For miscellaneous expenses, including telegraphing, fuel, light, foreign postage, labor, repair of building, care of grounds, and other necessaries, $1,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 58, line 15, I move to change the total from $19,080.16 to $19,338.28.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 11, beginning with line 12, there is an amendment which was reserved at the request of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, in line 18, page 11, the words "ports of entry which he may designate" and insert:

El Paso, Tex.; Northport, Wash., and Bonners Ferry, Idaho, and at such other ports as, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, the interests of the revenue demand.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 6, line 15, after the word "That," I move to insert the word "from," and in the same line, after the word "sales," I move to insert the word "of"; so as to read:

That from the proceeds of sales of old material, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now let us go to page 21. The amendment there was reserved because it is necessary that several corrections should be made.

Mr. HARRIS. There are various amendments which are simply corrections of names to which I will call the attention of the Senate.

In the provision for "Ford's Theater disaster payments," on page 23, line 15, where occurs the name "George G. Garnett," I move to strike out "G" and insert "R," so as to read "George R. Garnett"; in line 19, I move to strike out the initial "A" in the name "James A. Howard" and insert "H," so as to read "James H. Howard"; in line 20, "Samuel U. Hilton," I move to strike out "U" and insert "N," so as to read "Samuel N. Hilton"; in line 25, in the name "Ferman Housel," I move to strike out "e" and insert "i," so as to read "Firman Housel"; in line 4, page 23, "William B. Linden"; in line 10, "Daniel P. McCormack," I move to strike out the "m" in the name "McCormack" and insert "n," so as to read "Daniel P. McCornack"; in line 16, "George N. McLaughlin," I move to strike out the letter "a" after the capital "L" and insert "o," so as to read "George N. McLoughlin"; and in line 22, "Charles R. Owen," I move to strike out "Charles" and insert "Chambers," so as to read "Chambers R. Owen."

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. In line 19, page 24, there appears an appropriation for the relief of Francis W. Test, $2,500. On the 11th of this month Francis W. Test died. I hold in my hand the affidavit of four physicians who made a post-mortem examination, and they attest the fact that his death was the result of the Ford's Theater disaster. In view of that fact I move to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$5,000," the amount allowed in every death case which has resulted from that disaster, and to make the appropriation payable to Julia E. Test, widow of Francis W. Test.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 19, page 24, it is proposed to insert "Julia E. Test, widow of"; and after the name "Test" to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand"; so as to read:

Julia E. Test, widow of Francis W. Test, $5,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I return to page 21. In line 16 I move to strike out the word "three" and insert "four." The word "three" refers to three death cases reported in the bill, and the amendment which has just been adopted makes it four.

The SECRETARY. In line 16, page 21, it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "four"; so as to read:

To provide for the payment of employees of the Government for injuries received and losses sustained, and for four death cases at the Ford's Theater disaster, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. In line 19, page 21, I move to strike out the word "fifty-nine" and insert the word "sixty-two," and after the word "thousand" to strike out "eight" and insert "three."

The SECRETARY. In line 19, page 21, it is proposed to strike out "fifty-nine" and insert in lieu thereof "sixty-two"; and after the word "thousand," in the same line, to strike out "eight" and insert "three"; so as to read "$162,300."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. On this Commission there are two members who have continued to serve on the Commission since their terms as members of the House of Representatives expired. The Commission directs me to offer the amendment which I send to the desk in respect to those two cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

For compensation to E. V. Brookshire as a member of the Ford Theater Commission for twenty-one days subsequent to the expiration of his term in the House of Representatives, at $10 per day, $210.

For compensation to J. P. Pigott as a member of the Ford Theater Commission for nine days subsequent to the expiration of his term in the House of Representatives, at $10 per day, $90.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer an amendment to be inserted on page 98, after line 21.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

To pay Francis M. Cox for work and expenses incurred in preparing for the printer and supervising the publication of the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statues of John Stark and Daniel Webster, under the direction of the Committee on Printing, as provided by resolution of the Senate adopted December 22, 1894, $100.

Mr. HALE. I have an amendment which comes from the naval appropriation bill and was dropped out there, being a deficiency. I move to insert it on page 55, after line 24.

The SECRETARY. After line 24, on page 55, it is proposed to insert:

Naval station, Key West, Fla.: For additional amount for coaling shed, $4,000. And the appropriation of $10,000 for this object made by the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1895 is hereby continued available for the same purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. I desire to offer an amendment to be inserted on page 111, after line 4. I wish to state that the foundation for it is seen in Senate Document 249 of this session. I think there is no objection to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After line 4, on page 111, it is proposed to insert:

For payment of the judgment rendered by the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Wisconsin in favor of James Lucy against the United States, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. After line 19, on page 113, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 113, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay to the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians of South Dakota all interest money due them up to July 1, 1895, and that thereafter all interest money as it shall accrue shall be paid on the 1st day of November annually.

Mr. PLATT. That is not the right place for the amendment.

Mr. HALE. This opens such a wide field, that I shall have to make the point of order against the amendment that it is not estimated for.

Mr. KYLE. It involves no appropriation at all. I believe the interest money is made payable to the Indians by act of Congress or by the President. They are badly in need of money, owing to putting in their spring crops. Many of them are very badly off, not having food and clothing. A certain amount of money is due them, according to the statement sent to us by the Secretary of the Interior. It is subject to our order, and it should be paid.

Mr. HALE. The trouble is that the Senate knows nothing about this matter. The Committee on Indian Affairs ought to have considered it, passed upon it, and reported it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Those Indians made a treaty with the United States in 1889 by which they sold a large quantity of land, and the money was to be deposited in the Treasury and 5 per cent paid to them upon the order of Congress. No money has been paid to them for over a year. They are in a destitute condition. The money is due them. It requires no appropriation, but it needs an order of Congress in order to pay it out. So the amendment is entirely proper, and it ought to be inserted somewhere, so that the Indians can get the money. They are living now upon credit, which will soon be exhausted, and many of them will suffer.

Mr. KYLE. I have a number of letters from merchants in that region who are carrying these Indians and trusting them to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine insist upon his point of order in view of the remarks of the Senators from South Dakota?

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read again, so as to see if it carries any appropriation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It does not.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I shall not object. I withdraw the point of order. The amendment should be put in where Indian matters occur. Let it come in on page 74, at the end of line 19.

Mr. KYLE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRITCHARD. On page 27, after line 8, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

For the purpose of purchasing or erecting a building to be used by the society known as the Washington Institute, $7,000. Said institution is nonsectarian in character and is to be conducted for the education, industrial and domestic training of colored men and women.

Mr. HALE. Is the amendment reported by any standing committee?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I will say to the Senator from Maine that the amendment was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia the other day, but we have not had a meeting since that time to consider the question one way or the other. I will state, however, that several members of the committee are favorably disposed to it.

Mr. HALE. I must ask that the committee examine into the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. PUGH. On page 23, line 23, before the word "five," I move to insert "twenty." I support that amendment by the report of the pension examining board, which I send to the Secretary to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the name "Pennington," in line 22, page 23, it is proposed to insert the word "twenty"; so as read:

Polk K. Pennington, $2,500.

Mr. HALE. Is the amendment reported by the Commission?

Mr. PUGH. No, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] knows about this matter.

Mr. HARRIS. The Ford Theater Commission called every claimant before it and examined him personally as to the character, extent, and probable duration of his injury. In addition to that examination we examined many witnesses, two or three or four, as the claimant chose to bring before the Commission, to state what they knew of the claimant's condition at the time of and subsequent to the Ford Theater disaster. Immediately after the raising of the select committee, which was the beginning of this investigation, I addressed notes to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Treasury, asking each Secretary to detail an officer from the medical staff of those three Departments to constitute an examining medical board. When the Commission had developed all the facts that laymen would probably thoroughly comprehend and understand, we administered an oath to the attending physician of each claimant as a witness and sent the claimant and his attending physician before the medical board—the claimant for physical examination, if the board chose to subject him to physical examination, and the attending physician for examination by the medical board as a witness.

Now, each and every one of the cases reported by the Commission has passed that ordeal; and while the Commission was perhaps not unanimous in respect to any single allowance that appears in the report, differing in opinion as eight or ten gentlemen naturally would upon such a subject, the report is the result of a majority vote of the Commission. That we have not done full and exact justice in every case I am free to grant; but if we undertake to reopen and in the hurry of a session of the Senate to reexamine upon ex parte statement any one of these cases, and I believe there are one hundred and ten or one hundred and fifteen of them, I think we will have a job on our hands which will take us until about the 4th of July to get over this particular point in the bill.

The Commission had various applications to reopen cases after we had reported the measure for the relief of these persons, and, as a member of the Commission, I voted against reopening any case. I shall vote here against reopening or changing the report of the Commission in respect to any single item in the bill.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, I have no doubt the Commission devoted all the time and attention to the matter mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I have no doubt they gave the most thorough and patient examination to each case, and made just such an allowance as they decided upon the facts before them was right and proper. I am aware of the difficulty in undertaking to make any change in the allowance made in any case that has been determined by the committee under the circumstances mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee. But he admits that there may have been errors and mistakes in some cases, and I think I can show that in the case of Mr. Pennington there has been an allowance which, if not increased, would amount to a very great injustice to that sufferer.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me, he states my language a little too strongly when he says I admit there have been mistakes. I made no such admission; but I say that such a thing is possible. That is the statement I made.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator said there may be mistakes. If I am unable to show upon the facts in this case that the Commission made a mistake I expect their allowance to remain as reported. Here is the statement in the report of the Commission upon which this estimate of $500 was made. On page 21 of the report I find the following:

POLK K. PENNINGTON.—Age 31; wife and one child; returned to work September 30; clerk class 1.

Claim.—Doctor's bill, drugs, clothing, etc., $136.

Claim.—Right leg broken; nose broken and cut; wound back of left ear; severe blow in small of back; many smaller bruises and cuts. February, 1894: Nose is permanently disfigured and scarred; partial deafness of injured ear; trouble in back; leg weak; confined to bed five or six weeks. June, 1895: Have been to work regularly ever since; health is good; leg troubles me some yet; back worries me most.

Medical board find no indication of fracture of leg.

Dr. GEORGE B. FADELY. Attended him nine days after accident; had a broken nose and a good many wounds over his body; in one the flesh had been chipped off; complained of his back, but I could not find anything there; on the 1st of September he was in fair condition; wounds all healed; reduced in flesh; seemed to be suffering from shock; he had good union of both the tibia and the nose; did not say anything to me about ear.

Medical board find no permanent disability.

Now, take that description of the amount of suffering of Mr. Pennington, that caused him to be confined to his bed five or six weeks, under medical treatment nine days. One hundred and thirty-six dollars of the $500 goes out of it for doctors' bills, drugs, clothing, etc., leaving him about $360. With nose permanently disfigured, leg disabled, back disabled, lying in his bed suffering from these injuries five or six weeks, with his whole nervous system shocked through that perilous trial, he is allowed $360. He is a young man, in the prime of life, with a wife and child. The statement made by the Commission, it seems to me, is conclusive that this allowance is wholly inadequate.

I desire to have read the examination of the board of pension examiners, a board made up of three physicians whose examination was made of these sufferers in several instances after the examination of the medical board which the Senator says was appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. After their examination and report the sufferers were examined by these same physicians, who made reports upon which the allowance was increased in several cases by the Commission. I ask the Secretary to read what these doctors say, under oath, is his present condition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read the paper.

Mr. HALE. Will not the Senator consent that the paper be inserted in the RECORD without further reading?

Mr. PUGH. I just wish the Senate to understand that these three physicians, after examining this sufferer, pronounced his physical capacity to make a living as diminished one-half. They swore, on a thorough examination of his preseht condition, his capacity to make a living for himself and his family is diminished one-half.

Mr. HALE. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

The paper is as follows:

606 F STREET NORTHWEST, Washington, D. C., May 13, 1896.

Examination of Polk K. Pennington for injuries received in wreck of Ford's Theater building, this city, June 9, 1893.

History (as given by claimant).—Was on second floor of building; was carried through that floor and floors beneath to basement; was carried first to Emergency Hospital and thence home, where he was confined to bed for about ten weeks, and was on crutches for about two additional weeks. Injuries consisted of scalp wounds, compound fracture of nose, injury to small of back, and fracture of right leg.

Small of back and right leg are now weak, and small of back and right hip are painful after exertion. Is nervous and easily startled.

Present condition.—We find as follows:

Pulse rate, sitting, 72; standing, 78.

Respiration, 18 per minute.

Temperature, normal.

Weight, 120 pounds, stripped.

Height, 5 feet 11 inches.

Apparent age, 32 years.

Injury to back.—Deep pressure over lumbar region is moderately sensitive. The muscular strength of small of back is moderately diminished. Sensibility of both lower extremities is impaired to considerable degree, and the patella reflex of either side is diminished. No rectal or vesical symptoms.

Fracture of right leg.—Over anterior aspect of middle third of leg is a movable cicatrix one-half by two and one-half inches, beneath which there is moderate thickening of the tibia. There appears to have been a compound fracture of the tibia, which has, to a slight extent, weakened the limb. We do not doubt that the limb is weak, as alleged, after prolonged exertion.

Injury to nose.—Extending downward from one-half inch below mid point of forehead over nose is an irregular, moderately sensitive cicatrix 2½ inches long, terminating about the inferior border of right nasal bone. There was evidently a compound fracture of nasal bones, which has resulted in considerable deformity of nose. The capacity of the right nostril is perceptibly diminished, and the character of the voice is nasal.

Scalp injuries.—(a) Over right half of frontal bone, just in front of coronal suture, is a cicatrix, movable and painless, about 1 inch long.

(b) In position on left side, corresponding very nearly to (a) is a similar cicatrix three-fourths of an inch long.

(c) In roots of hair, immediately above posterior aspect of neck, left side, is an adherent cicatrix about three-fourths by three-fourths of an inch. No depressions of bone.

Claimant is nervous and very easily startled. He is neurasthenic to moderate degree. State of nutrition is poor. He is incapacitated, say, one-half for performance of manual labor, in addition to disfigurement of nose noted and mental anxiety which his nervous condition of necessity excites.

STERLING RUFFIN, M. D.
A. BALL, M. D.
C. V. BOARMAN, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 13th day of May, A. D. 1896.
[SEAL.] BERTHA L. DANA,
Notary Public.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. What is the date of that examination? How long was it made after the injury?

Mr. PUGH. It was made the other day.

Mr. FAULKNER. Three years afterwards.

Mr. GEORGE. Three years after the injury?

Mr. PUGH. Yes; and it shows that the disability is permanent; it has not disappeared by time. This is the same board that examined many cases where allowances have been made by the Commission, and in several cases, which you will find in the report of the Commission, they have upset the report of the board of medical examiners appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and on an examination by this same board and on this same evidence they have increased the allowances. It seems to me that the Commission itself will see that in this case there has been an insufficient allowance.

Mr. GEORGE. My object in making the inquiry was because the report which was partially read speaks of the present condition of the parties, and I wanted to know how long that was after the injury and whether the injury inflicted was likely to continue.

Mr. PUGH. The Secretary can state the date of the examination, or the Senator from Mississippi can examine it.

The SECRETARY. May 13, 1896.

Mr. GEORGE. When did the accident occur?

Mr. FAULKNER. The 9th of June, 1893.

Mr. GEORGE. Then three years had elapsed?

Mr. FAULKNER. I think before the Senate proceeds to reverse the action of the Commission, Senators should understand thoroughly how very careful the Commission, was in the examination of these parties. In the first place, as stated by the Senator from Tennessee, the evidence was examined as to all of the parties injured by the entire Commission. They had the parties before them. The parties had their witnesses before them, and they had their attending physicians before them. After that examination was completed the parties were then sent before a medical board of three surgeons appointed by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Treasury; also, the evidence of the attending physicians and all the statements before the medical board were taken down in shorthand. The medical board then proceeded to examine the physical condition of the parties and all the claims as to physical disability originating from this cause in the light of the evidence furnished by the surgeon in charge of the case. They made their report in writing to the Commission. Then the Commission appointed a subcommittee to analyze all of the evidence and condense it in the form shown in the report. Not satisfied with that, the Commission were then convened, and each individual case was taken up and the evidence in the case read to the entire Commission; and after that was done the Commission as a whole voted upon the amount that should be allowed.

Now, Mr. President, I will give an illustration that will show conclusively that you can not rely upon these ex parte statements. A gentleman came to me the other day after the report of the Commission had been made and said: "You all have done great injustice in my case." "Why," said he, "my medical bills were $400 and I have received by your allowance only $200. I am permanently disabled physically by that accident." I said: "Sir, if that is true the Commission have made a mistake and I will see it remedied and rectified; but," said I, "I should like first to examine the evidence of the Commission." I examined the evidence and there was a sworn statement by the man himself in his application to the Commission that the entire cost of his medical bill for surgery and medicine was $13.50; and there was the testimony of his own physician, who had attended him prior and subsequent to the accident, to the effect that this person was suffering from a constitutional disease and that that is the difficulty under which he is laboring at the present time. In addition to that was the testimony of the medical board that there was no injury whatever resulting to him by reason of the accident, but that it was the result of a constitutional affliction which he had prior to the accident, and the allowance was very liberal.

The statement made by this claimant, as certified by the physicians, is that he was confined to his bed for ten weeks.

Mr. PUGH. No.

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes; that is in the certificate of the physicians you have filed here, and yet the testimony before the Commission was that he was confined to his bed not longer than five or six weeks, and that was the evidence not only of himself, but the evidence of the physician who attended him at that time, showing that you can not rely upon the ex parte statements of these parties. Although there might be, perhaps, some discrepancies in the adjudications of the Commission, taking and analyzing the evidence in each particular case, I am satisfied that as a whole it is a fair adjudication of the claims of the parties.

Now, let me call the attention of the Senate to another fact. We passed a law in the last Congress by which we provided that there should be no deduction in the salaries of any of the parties during the time they were kept from earning a livelihood by reason of the disaster. Consequently all of these men, no matter how long they have been kept from the performance of their clerical service to the Government, have been paid in full as though they were at their desks every day during that time. Here is the evidence of his own physician:

DR. GEORGE B. FADELY. Attended him nine days after accident; had a broken nose and a good many wounds over his body; in one the flesh had been chipped off; complained of his back, but I could not find anything there; on the 1st of September he was in fair condition; wounds all healed; reduced in flesh; seemed to be suffering from shock; he had good union of both the tibia and the nose; did not say anything to me about ear.

It was stated before the Commission that there was some trouble there about his hearing, and yet his own physician states that during his entire examination of his case while he had it under his control there was no allusion whatever made to the condition of his ear or as to its being affected in any way.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me to ask him if this man is still in the employ of the Government?

Mr. PUGH. Certainly he is.

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes, sir; he is still in the employment of the Government, as shown by the report, and drawing a salary as a first-class clerk. His salary has not been reduced by reason of any disability resulting from this accident. In two or three cases there has been a reduction by reason of the inefficiency of the parties subsequent to the accident, but in this case, although a first-class clerk, he is still, under the rules of the Department, because of his efficiency retaining that position.

Mr. PLATT. There have been cases where the clerk has been obliged to surrender his position by reason of disability from this cause.

Mr. FAULKNER. Oh, yes; there are cases, of course, in which clerks have been required by reason of their disability to resign their positions, but that does not apply to this case. This gentleman is receiving a salary as a first-class clerk. Under these circumstances I hope the report of the Commission will not be amended.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, a word further. The report of the Commission as a whole I have no doubt is just and fair and as good as could have been made under the circumstances, but each individual sufferer was entitled to have justice done him. It is not a case of average correctness in the allowance. It is not a case where as a whole the report of the Commission is correct. Each one of the sufferers as an individual had a right to have his case examined and allowance made upon a full knowledge of all the facts relating to his condition. I undertake to say that in the case of Mr. Pennington the Commission were not in possession of all the facts upon which to make a just and proper estimate on account of his suffering and disability caused by the disaster. It seems to me that the report of the Commission itself shows on its face that it was a very low estimate to make of the amount that they say he ought to have upon the facts that they report themselves as having been shown to exist in his case.

Doctor's bill, $136.

One hundred and thirty-six dollars for medical attention in his case when his sufferings entitle him to only $360!

Right leg broken—

Who would have his right leg broken and lie in bed with it five or six weeks for $360?—

nose broken and cut; wound back of left ear; severe blow in small of back; many smaller bruises and cuts. February, 1894: Nose is permanently disfigured and scarred.

What young man 31 or 32 years old, or of any age, would like to have his nose broken and permanently disfigured for a dollar and a half? I suppose that is about the estimate made of it when you strike the average to get at the amount of $360.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator a question if he will allow me. What is the condition of the man's nose three years after the accident?

Mr. PUGH. It is permanently disfigured, these doctors say, and they examined him on the 13th of the present month.

Mr. FAULKNER. I did not understand that to be the case from the report. I understand that he is in perfect condition, that it has knit perfectly, and there is no disfigurement whatever.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to make profert of him here in order to settle that fact, and let the Senate see whether his nose is broken and permanently disfigured or not.

Mr. BATE. Can not we have that part of the report read?

Mr. PUGH. That part of the report can be read again.

Mr. HALE. I hope Senators will not call for the reading of that again.

Mr. PUGH. I do not call for the reading, but the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] wanted to know if Mr. Pennington's nose showed that it was permanently disfigured.

Mr. HALE. That has already been brought out in the report.

Mr. PUGH. But the Senator from West Virginia disputes that.

Mr. BATE. There seems to be a difference between the Senators as to the facts in the case, and so I think that the portion of the report referring to this case had better be read. It is but a short sentence.

Mr. HALE. I hope we shall have this little matter brought to a head as soon as possible.

Mr. PUGH. This man has a "nasal twang." I do not suppose that anybody would like to have that disability attendant upon a broken nose for $340, and then it is stated that he has a partial deafness in one of his ears.

These are the facts, not dependent upon the statement of this sufferer, Pennington. The Senator from West Virginia says they are the ex parte statements of a man who is to receive this amount of money. There is not a single statement upon which this estimate is predicated which has been made by this sufferer. They are the statements of physicians, which are matters of record, made by them under oath as to this man's present condition. What are the facts upon which the physicians say this man is disabled to the extent of one-half in his capacity to make a living?

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, I will suggest to him that with an impartial official board, created for the express purpose of examining each and every one of these cases, this gentleman chooses to select a tribunal for himself, and in the nature of an appeal from this official board; he selects a tribunal for himself and goes before it, without authority or suggestion of the Commission, and brings to it the paper that the Senator presents here.

Mr. PUGH. But the report of the Commission shows that that was done in several instances in these examinations.

Mr. HARRIS. Where that and other testimony was satisfactory to the Commission, the Commission has acted upon it; but we have not discredited the official board that we had created to sit in judgment upon these cases upon the report of any pension board or any other board.

Mr. PUGH. This official board, upon which the Commission states that it acted, as I have no doubt that it did, made reports of no disability in some cases, and the pension board, made up of the same physicians in these very identical cases, reported a permanent disability, and then the Commission reported an increase on the report of this identical board which examined Pennington.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama in what case that was done? I was on that Commission, and do not know of such an instance.

Mr. HARRIS. There are one or two instances where the pension board had examined, but where additional testimony was considered by the Commission and the results changed——

Mr. FAULKNER. That is not the statement of the Senator from Alabama. Of course all the evidence before the Commission was considered; and I assert here that there was no case that I can remember in which there was a decision changed by reason of any evidence being brought in there from the pension board. It was considered, if presented there, just like all the other evidence before us; but there was no adjudication and then a subsequent change to a different amount by reason of a certificate from the pension board.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course there have never been any changes, because our original findings are those that appear here. We have never changed any conclusion that the Commission had come to by reason of any evidence before the pension board.

Mr. PUGH. All I insist upon is that the facts as reported by the pension board of examiners under oath only a few days ago, upon an examination of Mr. Pennington, are that they found the injuries to which they testify, and they state the effect produced by those injuries which were occasioned by this disaster. How can there be any mistake as to the facts? There can be none whatever.

Then I submit to the Senate whether, on these indisputable facts as to the amount of suffering endured by Mr. Pennington in consequence of that disaster, he shall be sent off by this great Government with $340 in his pocket simply because we do not want to disturb the harmony of the report of the Commission. I submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if these allowances are to be increased, I shall move to increase the allowance to Frank J. Metcalf, the case stated on page 16 of the report.

Mr. PUGH. I want some action on my amendment. Do I understand that it has been agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama is pending, and the Chair understood that the Senator from Massachusetts addressed the Chair in relation to it.

Mr. LODGE. I am not offering an amendment; I was merely going to state this case. I propose, if the Senator's amendment shall be agreed to, to move an amendment in favor of another of the claimants.

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand that the amendment of the Senator from Alabama has been disposed of?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been disposed of. The Chair supposed the Senator from Massachusetts was addressing himself to the pending amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I am going to speak on the pending amendment when I get the opportunity. I was going to say that if this report is to be subject to amendment, I have a case which I think quite as strong as that of the Senator from Alabama, in which I propose to move an increase. It seems to me perfectly clear, on the statement of the Commission, that the claimant is in no wise adequately compensated for the injury to which he has been subjected. I do not suppose there is any one of us who would care to fall through from the second story of old Ford's Theater into the cellar, in company with beams, mortar, and brick, and so forth, for $500 or $1,000, or $5,000, and I do not suppose there is a single one of the claimants adequately compensated.

If we are to accept the report of the Commission and make no additions to what they have found after careful and special investigation of what they think on the whole is all that ought to be awarded, I for one shall submit to that decision, although I think it very hard on many of the claimants; but if we are to open it to other claimants, then I think I have a case, and I have no doubt other Senators have cases, as meritorious as that suggested by the Senator from Alabama. I merely wish to give notice that I shall move my amendment after the question has been taken on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, if it be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. FAULKNER. The findings of the pension board and the remarks of the Senator from Alabama are based almost exclusively upon the statement of the claimant. He asserts in his statement, and he swears to it, that he has a broken leg, and yet his own physician has never heard of that broken leg; and after a thorough examination by the medical board they certify that they can find no indications whatever of a fracture of that leg. That shows how much weight should be given to this ex parte testimony.

Mr. PUGH. The facts are before the Senate. Let us have a vote.

Mr. FAULKNER. And yet there is the statement of the claimant to that effect, and that is relied upon by the Senator in his remarks.

Mr. PUGH. I relied on the statement of his physician.

Mr. GEORGE. I want to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. Do I understand that the injury to this gentleman's nose is permanent?

Mr. PUGH. I saw his nose, and its condition is described by the report. He seemed to have a little difficulty of hearing, too.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the extent of the injury? Is it permanent?

Mr. PUGH. He is a spare man; rather a weakly man; not a man of physical strength, and I have no doubt that he suffered more than the amount allowed him here by the shock occasioned to his nervous system by that terrible disaster. It is difficult to estimate such injuries in dollars and cents. There can be no doubt of the sufferings this young man endured, and his truth is not to be doubted. The Senator from West Virginia says that Mr. Pennington stated that he was down for eight or ten weeks, when the fact is that he was down for only five or six or seven weeks; that he was not in bed more than six or seven weeks. What a terrible discrepancy that is!

Let us have a vote, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. FAULKNER. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment. There are a great many other cases that will follow this if it be allowed.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. I want to say a word before we take the yea-and-nay vote, and it is simply this: Every man who was injured in that accident, after the Commission was created to investigate the matter with a view of making fair and reasonable allowances, flattered himself with extensive hopes of large appropriations. I think it is safe to say that nine out of every ten of these claimants were disappointed at the allowances made. If a single one of these cases is to be opened and reviewed in the hurry of the session of the Senate, and amounts to be fixed according to ex parte statements, I think it is due to these hundred and odd claimants that they at least have one additional day in court, and I shall ask for another day for the consideration of this bill; and there is not one of them who will not appeal to his Senator to come in and move to enlarge the allowances made by the Commission. I think we ought to deal justly with all of them, as the Commission has honestly and earnestly endeavored to do. If the matter is to be taken out of the hands of the Commission and its findings ignored; if the Senate is going to take charge of it and make such allowances in each individual case as it may feel inclined to upon statements made here, I think that we ought to deal equally just with all of them, and that each man should have his day in court and his opportunity to offer his amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], but in this case I exercise my discretion and vote "yea."

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who, I think, has not voted. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MCMILLAN (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I vote "nay" to make a quorum.

Mr. BACON. On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment to the pending bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 13, on page 47, it is proposed to insert:

To pay Emmart, Dunbar & Co. the amount found due by the auditor of the District of Columbia for work done by said firm in connection with the laying of the 36-inch water main under their contract of September 1, 1871, with said District, to be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia, $14,548.22.

Mr. HALE. I raise the point of order that that is neither an audited claim—the auditor of the District of Columbia not being an auditor of one of the Departments—nor is it estimated for by the head of any Department.

Mr. GALLINGER. On the point of order I desire to submit the observation that this amendment was sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia and reported favorably by that committee, a standing committee of the Senate, and has passed the Senate; and I think, under the rule, it is not susceptible to the point of order.

As to being an audited claim, I submit that Mr. Petty, who signs himself auditor of the District of Columbia—and this is a claim against the District of Columbia—has audited this claim and made his report, as follows:

JANUARY 22, 1896.

In my letter of June 14, 1892, transmitting the report of Mr. Donovan, expert accountant, upon the claim of Emmart, Dunbar & Co. for work done in connection with the laying of the 36-inch water main under their contract of September 21, 1871, and on several occasions since, in response to Congressional inquiries, I had the honor to state that, in my opinion, the finding of Mr. Donovan that $14,548.22 was due to the claimants was "reasonable and just."

The views then expressed I still entertain. * * *

J. T. PETTY,
Auditor District of Columbia.

On the point of order raised by the Senator from Maine I would more particularly place the matter upon the fact that this has received the sanction of a standing committee of this body, and has passed the body.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, there seems to be confusion in the minds of some Senators as to the effect of a bill passing the Senate or being reported by a standing committee. That claim is good under clause 1 of Rule XVI, which says:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, etc.

That is the limitation of authority which is given by the report of a standing committee to the passage of a bill by the Senate; but clause 4 of Rule XVI goes entirely to the bottom of the whole business of private claims, and no matter whether a committee reports a private claim or whether it has passed the Senate, it is not in any way in order, and the language is very clear:

No amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Regular matters which come in the course of business of the Departments and are certified and audited by the Departments under the law as appears by estimates to carry on the Departments and to pay their ordinary expenses, but a private claim, such as this is, can not be put onto any appropriation bill under any rule. It is a private claim, and no matter how many committees have reported it, and even if it has passed the Senate, it is still a private claim, and does not come under the head either of having been audited by one of the great Departments of the Government or of not being a private claim.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would ask the Senator how a claim against the District of Columbia would be audited by any of the Departments? Such a claim is audited by the auditor of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE. Under the general system of auditing, all these matters go through the regular auditing in the Departments. The auditor of the District of Columbia is only an officer of the District to enable District officers to transact their business; but when an amendment comes in upon an appropriation bill it has to pass some authority of the General Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator say that such a claim must be passed upon by the Treasury Department?

Mr. HALE. Yes; it must come through the Secretary of the Treasury. Such claims are reported by the Secretary of the Treasury as estimates; and when they come here they are duly sent to the Appropriations Committee.

I sympathize with the Senator, for I have no doubt this is a good claim; but it does not belong on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator need not sympathize with me at all. Here is a claim which is justly due, as is found by the proper official of the District of Columbia, the auditor of the District of Columbia. He has gone through it carefully and certifies that it is a just claim, and that it ought to have been paid long ago; and yet the Government is refusing to pay it. The Senate of the United States has said it is a just claim and passed a bill to pay it, yet the technical point is raised—I am not quite prepared to say that it is not purely technical—that this has not been sufficiently audited to enable us to place it upon an appropriation bill. I think if we should go through the appropriation bills which have been passed, and possibly the one now under consideration, we could find a great many claims which have not run so severe a gantlet as this claim seems to have done. I am still of opinion that the point of order is not well taken, but of course shall bow to the decision of the Chair, whatever it may be.

Mr. HALE. Let me say here as to the pending bill that I do not think that I have ever seen in my experience a deficiency appropriation bill cleaner from claims than this is, as reported to the Senate.

I have no doubt this is a good claim. The committee was almost overwhelmed by a raft of good claims, which in themselves were correct and true and ought to be paid; but what it endeavored to do was to keep them all off, and I think it has done it. At any rate that has been the intent. I had matters in my own State that were very pushing upon me, exceedingly good claims, with a good many grounds for consideration; but I did not feel at liberty in the committee to ask that they be put on the bill, and they all have been kept off. Of course, if any of these claims go on they all ought to go on.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Auditor for the State and other Departments has control of all accounts of the District of Columbia just as he has of all accounts of the Department of State, the Department of Justice, the Department of Agriculture, the diplomatic and consular service, and the claims or accounts of the District of Columbia must go through his hands to be audited just like any others, and be certified; and that has not been done in this case.

In addition to what the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] said in regard to claims, the Committee on Appropriations determined not to put any claim on this deficiency bill. We have reported it without a solitary claim upon it, anything which was not audited by the proper Department.

As the Senator from Maine has said, so I can say that I had a large number of claims, some allowed by the Court of Claims, and others, that I was anxious to have placed upon the bill; but when we determined to adhere to the rule strictly I had to apply that rule to myself as well as to others.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Does the Senator understand that a claim which has been audited, as he says, by the head of a Department, even in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate or of Congress, but has never been included in an estimate and sent here in the regular way, is one that can have preference over an ordinary private claim?

Mr. COCKRELL. A claim, or what would properly be called an account, which is audited by a Department comes from the Department in the regular way to the Senate or to the House of Representatives; being generally sent to the House, it comes within the rule of the Senate, and is not a claim in the sense of a private claim referred to in the rule. Therefore, those matters which were audited were placed upon this bill, but the others were not.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is the very question I wanted to get at, whether because a claim has been audited, to use the language of the Senator from Missouri, that takes it out of the category of private claims, which can not go on an appropriation bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. If it is a matter that has grown up out of the business of the Government, has gone regularly to the Treasury Department and been audited, and the Treasury Department had authority to audit it, and has reported it to Congress, it is a deficiency.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is all right; but, the Senator will allow me, suppose a claim has been audited, for instance, by the Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. COCKRELL. The Secretary of the Interior has no jurisdiction to audit claims.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Very well. Suppose it has been audited by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of the Navy, if you please, under a direction of Congress, but that the claim has never been before the Treasury Department at all; that it has never received the investigation either of the Secretary of the Treasury or of any Auditor or Comptroller of the Treasury, does the Senator mean to tell me that that is a claim which is taken out of the category of private claims and can properly go into the deficiency appropriation bill?

Mr. HALE. The Senator will allow me. Unless the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of the Navy in terms is directed to audit it——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Why does that make any difference?

Mr. HALE. He has no right to audit a claim unless he is directed to do it. The Senator from Missouri is right about it. The auditing is done in the Treasury Department, and unless the head of another Department is directed to audit, he has no right whatever to do it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the Senator from Maine——

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me we ought to have a real case and not a supposititious one. I think we ought to take this matter as it comes up and not suppose propositions to be decided hereafter or amendments which may be offered later.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Missouri has remarked—and I think the Senator in charge of the bill says the same thing—that the committee have intended to keep this a very clean bill; that is to say, a bill confined purely and exclusively to making appropriations for claims that can properly and rightfully go into an appropriation bill. In other words, they have excluded all private claims. There are in this bill certain claims that have never been passed upon by the Secretary of the Treasury or by the Comptroller of the Treasury or by any Auditor of the Treasury, but were simply audited by the head of some other Department. I make the statement——

Mr. GALLINGER. What about the Ford's Theater Commission claims? They are private claims—every one of them.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I undertake to say that a claim of that kind, although audited by the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Interior, is not taken out of the category of private claims, which ought to be excluded from an appropriation bill on a point of order. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no disposition to delay the decision of the Chair on this question, and I am not conceited enough to suppose that I can give the Chair any additional light on the question. But it is rather amusing to have Senators in charge of an appropriation bill so vehemently inform us from time to time that there is nothing in these bills that is not all right. The Senator from Maine tells us that this bill is free from everything that is obnoxious to that rule. Here is, I do not know how much, a hundred thousand dollars more or less, for gentlemen who lost health and limb and for the families of some of those who lost life in the Ford Theater disaster, and it has been acted upon by a Commission of Congress.

Mr. HALE. That is exactly under clause 4 of Rule XVI. There was a special act providing for the Commission, and that the awards of the Commission should be paid. The committee would not have put it on the bill for a moment unless there had been a special act requiring it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yet the Senator admits that the amendment I have offered comes also under that head, but he cites the other rule that a private claim shall not be put on an appropriation bill; and every one of those is a private claim.

Mr. HALE. No, no; they are not claims.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no escape from it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator's amendment is not like them.

Mr. GALLINGER. It may not be like them, but they are private claims.

I have no disposition to be technical or to delay the decision of this matter, but the rules are very convenient and are always called upon to sustain the position which the Committee on Appropriations may take in matters of this kind. They are always found faulty, however, it seems to me, when an individual Senator proposes an amendment to an appropriation bill. I believe that under a reasonably broad interpretation of the custom of the Senate and of the rules under which we are acting, the amendment I propose is not obnoxious to the rule, and ought not to be ruled out on a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under Rule XVI, the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. TELLER. I have an amendment to send a case to the Court of Claims, which I desire to offer. It is to come in on page 60, after line 9.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

Whereas the Secretary of the Navy, on the 28th day of January, 1893, contracted with Harris P. Hurst for certain rights accruing and arising under three several applications filed by said Hurst in the United States Patent Office for letters patent upon certain improvements, viz: "Cartridges for breech-loading ordnance, filed March 28, 1892, serial No. 426839," "breech-loading ordnance, filed July 28, 1892, serial No. 441433," and "breech-loading ordnance, filed August 17, 1892, serial No. 443329"; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Navy has heretofore decided that said Hurst is not entitled to be paid anything under said contract, nor anything out of the $25,000 appropriated for certain rights under patent No. 533171 in the "Act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas the said Hurst expended the sum of $926.22 at the Washington Navy-Yard in small-bore and small-arm experiments: Now, therefore,

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to said Hurst the said sum of $926.22; and the Court of Claims is hereby directed to advance and adjudicate the claim of said Harris P. Hurst against the United States for all such sums of money as the said Hurst may be entitled to on account of any infringement of his, the said Hurst's, said patents by the United States Government, or on account of said contract of the 28th day of January, 1893, or on account of the provision for the payment of said Hurst of the sum of $25,000, on conditions therein mentioned in the "Act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes." And the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy any judgment the Court of Claims may render in the premises, is hereby appropriated to satisfy the same in part or in full, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HALE. The last clause of the amendment should be stricken out. Otherwise it will be clearly subject to a point of order as making an appropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of order that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill. It is a private claim, and is likewise obnoxious to that rule of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. This is a case where we have appropriated $25,000, and there is no necessity for an appropriation. It has already been made. The amendment was drawn by the Navy Department and sent here. I have no objection to striking out the objectionable words which the Senator from Maine has indicated.

Mr. HALE. Those words make the amendment subject to the point of order.

Mr. TELLER. Then it will not be an appropriation. All I desire in this connection is to secure for this young man an opportunity to go to the Court of Claims and to have his case expedited; that is, the court, instead of taking four years, shall hurry it up. The amendment also provides an appropriation of $926 for money that he has advanced. The Government is now using his device, whatever it may be, and it seems to me it ought to pay the money back.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the young man has advanced money and it is to be reimbursed, it is a private claim. Aside from that, as I have before suggested, it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill. The only way for this young man to prosecute his claim is the only manner left to Dunbar & Co., that is, through the Congress of the United States, and I make the point of order.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to state one fact. I do not know whether it is material or not on the point of order. The amendment was prepared at the office of the Secretary of the Navy. It was approved by the Secretary and sent here by him with his approval.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to inquire about the appropriation of $25,000. It is the first time I have ever heard of an appropriation being made in advance to pay an anticipated judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. TELLER. The appropriation is to be stricken out. There is to be no appropriation. We made an appropriation last year and left it discretionary with the Secretary whether or not he would pay the claim. He has declined to pay the claim. I want to put the case in the Court of Claims, with the provision which is in the amendment that the court shall expedite it. I do not desire any appropriation, but the amendment came from the Navy Department and they put it in, and I did not notice that part of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The difficulty, not that the Chair is under in making the ruling, but which Senators are under, is that they do not know what amendment is before the Senate. The Senator from Colorado moves a very long and unusual amendment——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will have the amendment stated as modified by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas the Secretary of the Navy on the 28th day of January, 1893, contracted with Harris P. Hurst for certain rights accruing and arising under three several applications filed by said Hurst in the United States Patent Office for letters patent upon certain improvements, viz, "Cartridges for breech-loading ordnance, filed March 28, 1892, Serial No. 426839," "Breech-loading ordnance, filed July 28, 1892, Serial No. 441433," and "Breech-loading ordnance, filed August 17, 1892, Serial No. 443329"; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Navy has heretofore decided that said Hurst is not entitled to be paid anything under said contract, nor anything out of the $25,000 appropriated for certain rights under patent No. 533171 in the "act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas the said Hurst expended the sum of $926.22 at the Washington Navy-Yard in small-bore and small-arm experiments: Now, therefore,

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to said Hurst the said sum of $926.22, and the Court of Claims is hereby directed to advance and adjudicate the claim of said Harris P. Hurst against the United States for all such sums of money as the said Hurst may be entitled to on account of any infringement of his (the said Hurst's) said patents by the United States Government, or on account of said contract of the 28th day of January, 1893, or on account of the provision for the payment of said Hurst of the sum of $25,000, on conditions therein mentioned in the "act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes."

Mr. TELLER. The remainder of the amendment has been stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires the attention of the Senator from Colorado. The only modification which the Chair understood is in the clause in regard to the appropriation of $25,000. Is that correct?

Mr. TELLER. It is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a provision in the amendment for the payment of the sum of $926.22.

Mr. TELLER. I will strike out that provision, so that the amendment will carry no appropriation. Then all there will be in it is a reference of the case to the Court of Claims, with a direction to the court to expedite it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado and also the Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], whether it is in order upon the deficiency bill to move to send any private claim to the Court of Claims for adjudication?

Mr. GALLINGER. Especially with a direction that they shall expedite it beyond existing law.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is, as a matter of course, if you admit general legislation, but it is only in order when general legislation is admitted. The amendment proposes general legislation.

Mr. CHANDLER. This is purely and simply a reference of the claim of Mr. Hurst to the Court of Claims for adjudication. It provides for a private claim, and if the Committee on Appropriations, one member of which is the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], will establish that rule, of course we will be content with it. But it should be understood hereafter that any private claim whatever may be especially referred to the Court of Claims upon the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. TELLER. There is no necessity to refer the case to the Court of Claims. Mr. Hurst has a right to go to the Court of Claims under his contract, but his case would not be expedited. I desire to have it hastened.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the proposition of the Senator——

Mr. TELLER. I did not prepare the amendment. It was prepared at the Navy Department and sent here.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is not of half so much importance as it is that the amendment comes from a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TELLER. It does not come from any member of the Committee on Appropriations as such.

Mr. CHANDLER. There would have been no possibility that the amendment would have been entertained for a minute if it had come from any other member of the Senate; but the Committee on Appropriations, immediately after objecting to an absolutely meritorious claim because it is a private claim, now send to the front the Senator from Colorado, who is a member of that committee, to insist upon it that a private claim may be expedited in the Court of Claims by a clause upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from New Hampshire, who is exceedingly critical at least, loses sight of the fact that last year we made an appropriation to pay this claim. It is carrying out existing law, you may say, to submit the question now to the Court of Claims. I do not desire to discuss the question, however.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Colorado does not wish to mislead the Senate, as he is in danger of doing by the last remark. The Secretary of the Navy was to pay this claim if he thought it was a good one. He adjudicated that it was a bad one, and the Senator now gets up and says the amendment is to carry out existing law.

Mr. TELLER. The Secretary of the Navy said that the claimant was not entitled to the money, and he was not inclined to pay it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator argue that it is carrying out existing law to move to pay a claim which the Secretary of the Navy says is a bad one?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Upon reflection the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order upon the amendment even as modified.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. On page 60, after line 9, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

That to carry out the provisions of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884 (22 Statutes, page 477), to pay to the legal representatives of John Roach, deceased, the sum of $28,160.25 for labor and material furnished by the said John Roach in completing the dispatch boat Dolphin under the advice and assistance of the Naval Advisory Board mentioned in said act, which amount is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HALE. It is an ungrateful task to make points of order upon claims that are good. I know this old claim like a brother. It is a good claim. It ought to have been paid years ago. It is invested with peculiar hardship. The Government ought to pay it by a bill which should pass unanimously in the House and in the Senate. That is the way it ought to go. But it is not a claim that is excepted under clause 4 of Rule XVI.

The framing of the amendment attempts to avoid that rule by declaring that it is to carry out the appropriations of a certain year. Those are general appropriations. There is no appropriation in the act of 1884 for any private person who has a claim against the Government through the Navy Department. There was an appropriation in that act for the building of new ships, and in building those new ships this claim came up. It is just; it is a perfectly good claim; but simply referring to that act, the appropriation act which carried expenses for the building of the Navy, to cover the Roach ships, does not, I submit, Mr. President, bring it under the rule, which says that—

No amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim shall be received to a general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation.

I have no doubt that if there had been a special act or a treaty which had recognized this claim and declared that it should be paid, that it should be submitted to the Department and audited, the amendment would be carrying out a special provision in relation to it. But simply referring to an appropriation act which carried a general appropriation for the Navy and for naval ships clearly does not, in my opinion, entitle the amendment to come under clause 4 of Rule XVI. I have nothing more to say about it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Maine, a good lawyer, as he is, evidently realizes the weakness of his point of order, and for that reason he follows up his point with an argument in its favor.

Mr. HALE. I raised the point of order.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly. I insist in all confidence that the amendment is not subject to the point of order, and I will give my reasons very briefly.

Mr. Roach had a contract with the Government of the United States for building this ship at a certain price. After the ship was completed and accepted by the Government, an act of Congress was passed—I care not whether it was a general appropriation act or a special act of Congress; it was an act of Congress—making an appropriation of money to meet this and other like contracts. It was an act which it was intended should provide the money, and it did provide money, to meet this contract.

Now, what followed? A question was raised in the Department to the effect that the vessel was structurally weak, and the Government held back this amount, $28,000, money appropriated by Congress to meet this particular claim.

Mr. HALE. The Secretary of the Navy refused to pay it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. He refused to pay it?

Mr. HALE. He claimed that the appropriation did not cover it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No, the Senator is mistaken about that. That was not the question at all. The position taken by the Secretary of the Navy was that the boat had not been constructed according to the contract, and although the money had been appropriated by Congress and was there ready to be drawn, it was retained by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And a less amount than that called for in the contract was paid. The Senator from Maine says to me that it had not been earned.

Mr. HALE. I do not say that. The Secretary so held.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In view of what the Senator said a moment ago about the justice of the claim, he can not say that.

Mr. HALE. The Secretary held that way. I do not so hold.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is true. The Secretary evidently made a mistake, as the whole history of the Dolphin has abundantly proved. The Secretary of the Navy was under a mistake. He was misled by the reports made to him by certain officers in regard to the character of the construction of the ship. Those reports were to the effect that the vessel was structurally weak, and therefore was not built according to the contract. The Secretary of the Navy—I am finding no fault with him—on those reports held back the amount of money which had been appropriated by an act of Congress to meet this particular case.

Subsequent investigation has demonstrated to everyone who has given the matter any attention that that was a mistake, just as the Senator from Maine says. It is a just claim, and one which ought to pass by the unanimous vote of both Houses of Congress. That is the case. Is not the amendment an appropriation to carry out existing law? That is the rule. What is the existing law? The existing law is a general appropriation act which appropriated $28,000 to meet this claim. It does seem to me that the point is not well taken. I do not think the Senator in charge of the bill ought to make any point of order against this claim under all the circumstances. I insist that the amendment is in order and that the point of order is not well taken. What does the rule say?

No amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim—

I admit it is a private claim—shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless—unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation.

Unless what?—

The existing law said that this money should be paid.

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes, it did. The appropriation was made to cover this particular claim in the whole amount of the contract. The Secretary of the Navy, on an investigation in which I think he was misled, held back $28,000 of it upon the theory for the Government that the vessel was structurally weak and had not been constructed according to the contract. That vessel has been in the Government service now for eleven years. It has voyaged around the world more than once, and it has been demonstrated by actual service that no stancher vessel was ever constructed in any shipyard in America or elsewhere. Now, that is the case, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Oregon please indicate the terms of the existing law to which he refers?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have not the statute before me. It is in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, 22 Statutes, page 477.

Mr. HALE. Of course that is the general appropriation act which provides for the construction of so many ships. It has nothing in reference to this claim. I wish there was. There are cases that come under clause 4 of Rule XVI. For instance, if Congress provides that after the 1st day of July the salary of a certain officer shall be $3,000 instead of $2,500, and that amount is not appropriated for and is not paid, the difference between the $2,500 that he gets and the law that fixes the salary is a subject for an amendment on an appropriation bill, because it is to carry out an existing law appertaining to and applicable to that subject. There are here and there cases of that kind. That is intended to be the scope of clause 4. But to say that a general law providing for the construction of ships and appropriating money for them is intended to cover a particular claim that the then Secretary of the Navy decided was not to be paid and had not been earned is a very strong stretching and violation of the rule.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. This is the statute.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can not point out, as the Chair has asked him to do, anything in the act that relates to this claim.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Oh, yes, I can. The act provides as follows:

For the construction of the steel cruiser of not less than 4,300 tons displacement now specially authorized by law, two steel cruisers of not more than 3,000 nor less than 2,500 tons displacement each, and one dispatch boat, as recommended by the Naval Advisory Board in its report of December 20, 1882, $1,300,000; and for the construction of all which vessels, except their armament, the Secretary of the Navy shall invite proposals from all American shipbuilders whose shipyards are fully equipped for building or repairing iron and steel steamships, and constructors of marine engines, machinery, and boilers; and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to construct said vessels and procure their armament at a total cost for each not exceeding the amounts estimated by the Naval Advisory Board in said report, and in the event that such vessels, or any of them, shall be built by contract, such building shall be under contracts with the lowest and best responsible bidder or bidders, made after at least sixty days' advertisement, published in five of the leading newspapers of the United States, inviting proposals for constructing said vessels, subject to all such rules, regulations, superintendence, and provisions as to bonds and security for the due completion of the work as the Secretary of the Navy shall prescribe; and no such vessel shall be accepted unless completed in strict conformity with the contract, with the advice and assistance of the Naval Advisory Board, and in all respects in accordance with the provisions of the act of August 5, 1882, except as they are hereby modified; and the authority to construct the same shall take effect at once; and the Secretary of the Navy may, in addition to the appropriation hereby made, apply to the constructing and finishing of the vessels in this clause referred to any balance of the appropriation made to the Bureaus of Construction and Repair and Steam Engineering for the current fiscal year or in the present act which may remain available for that purpose: Provided, That he shall utilize the national navy-yards with the machinery, tools, and appliances belonging to the Government there in use in the building of said ships, or any parts thereof, as fully and to as great an extent as the same can be done with advantage to the Government.

It amounts to just this, Mr. President: Here is an act providing for and directing the construction of certain vessels at certain prices, not exceeding a certain cost, and making an appropriation to meet the same. This vessel was constructed, and it is admitted by the Senator in charge of the bill that the money has been unjustly detained. It does seem to me that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. HALE. Under the Senator's construction of the rule, under a general appropriation, no matter what the Secretary of the Navy decided, claims for double the amount of the appropriation might be brought in on the ground that the appropriation had been put upon the ships. The whole clause simply makes a general appropriation for certain ships. It is left to the Secretary. He is to decide whether they are bid for according to contract and whether they are to be accepted or not. The Secretary, I think, made a mistake; but he decided that this item was not due under the contract and refused to pay it, and that is why it is before us now. All the other bills were paid long ago under the appropriation. When a part of the act left it to the Secretary and he decided that this money had not been earned, to claim that simply because of that appropriation it brings it under clause 4 of Rule XVI is certainly a very strained construction; and I have no doubt the Senator himself, who is a good lawyer, sees that. I do not care to take any more time. I want to get the bill through.

Mr. STEWART. I have had occasion to examine this claim in the Committee on Claims. I think that the withholding of this money was about as unjust a thing as has been done in a long time. I hope the Senator from Maine will waive his point of order and let this very just claim go on the bill.

Mr. HALE. I would do that very gladly for one; but if I did so someone else on the committee would make the point of order. There is a certain position under my responsibility as chairman of the subcommittee and in charge of the bill which I must take which I do not like to take. There are half a dozen claims that were presented before the committee by valued constituents of mine that I had to vote against. If this were the only claim, I for one would let it go; but there was no end of claims that have been besetting the Committee on Appropriations this year more than ever. Some of the very best of them are from my State. I voted against them all. I disliked to do it, and I dislike to make a point of order here. If this claim were single and alone I would not make it.

Mr. STEWART. The payment of this claim has been delayed so long, the point of order, I take it, will be overruled in this case. I advise my friend to take an appeal and let us overrule it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am not going to take an appeal until the Chair has decided against the amendment. I am expecting a decision in its favor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The law cited by the Senator from Oregon, the Chair thinks, does not take this case out of the prohibition of the rule. In order to do that the law should be specific and apply to the particular matter included in the amendment. The Chair very reluctantly sustains the point of order. There is no escape from it under the rule.

Mr. DANIEL. I have an amendment to offer to the bill, to come in after line 15, on page 70. It is an amendment reported from the Committee on Claims, with the exception of the proviso which I have added at the end in writing, which I propose to offer as an amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 15, page 70, insert:

Providing the Public Printer is unable to produce without delay, at the Government Printing Office, the work hereinafter named, that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the present contract for producing copies of the drawings of the weekly issues of patents for inventions, trade-mark certificates, drawings for the library editions of patents, for producing exhausted copies and copies of pending applications and of foreign patents or publications, and for producing the photolithographic work for the illustrated pages of the Official Gazette of the Patent Office, to be extended for the term of one year from the 1st day of July, 1896, the provisions of section 3679 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That the contractor will do the work at a figure as low as any other bid that has been made.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the amendment opens a great field. The Committee on Appropriations knows nothing about it. The Senate knows nothing about it. It is put in force by a new law and a new process. I have to make a point of order against the amendment that it is legislation.

Mr. DANIEL. I will state that this matter in a little different form was brought before the Senate on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill and that its entire object is one for the public good. While I believe it to be open to a point of exception, if it is insisted on, it is a matter that has been debated in the Senate and I believe the public interest will be subserved by a hearing and a favorable decision. Of course I can not persist, as the amendment is in the nature of legislation. I hope the Senator from Maine will not urge his point of order, at least until he hears the matter.

Mr. HALE. If I did not, there are other Senators who would make it. I have been requested, being in charge of the bill, to make it, as I have made other points of order. The Senator does not claim that the amendment is not subject to a point of order. I have to make it because it would open large debate. I know certain Senators are very much opposed to it. I am very desirous of getting the bill through to-night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I move to insert, after line 12, page 110:

To pay Henry A. Du Pont in full compensation for all his time and expenses, including printing and counsel fees, in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate of the United States as a Senator from the State of Delaware, $2,500.

To pay James L. Wolcott, John Bassett Moore, and William F. Kurtz, counsel in opposition to the claim of Henry A. Du Pont, the same to embrace all their disbursements and expenses in the prosecution of their case in such opposition, $2,500.

Mr. HALE. That has been fully considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. My impression is that some subcommittee on one of the appropriation bills intended to put on this item.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did we not pass a resolution directing the payment of these two sums out of the contingent fund?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will explain the matter. I was instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report the resolution providing for the payment of these amounts out of the contingent fund of the Senate. The resolution had to go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses and it is lying there yet.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is the proper place for it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. As it was necessary to make the appropriation, I thought it should be put on this bill, as it is the last one.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it had better go on this bill, too, but the resolution ought to be recalled.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly the committee intend in putting the provision on this bill that the resolutions shall be pushed out. It will fall undoubtedly when the appropriation goes through.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I thought it best that the provision should be made here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to give notice that I wish to have the amendment on page 60 considered in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so noted.

Mr. HILL. On page 87, at the end of line 7, I move to insert:

To Elihu Root, ex-United States attorney, southern district of New York, for services rendered as attorney for the defendant in the suit of the Yale Lock Manufacturing Company vs. Thomas L. James, in March, 1884, by direction of the Attorney-General, the sum of $2,000.

Mr. HALE. My impression is that the committee agreed to this amendment.

Mr. HILL. I supposed they had. It is a claim audited and approved by the Attorney-General.

Mr. HALE. It is a regularly certified Department claim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. In behalf of the Committee on Claims I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert as an additional section the following:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,027,314.09, for the payment of claims adjudicated by the Court of Claims under the French spoliation act of January 20, 1885, as follows:

Mr. COCKRELL. I make the point of order on the amendment. It is not worth while to read the names of all the claimants and the amounts. I make the point of order that they are claims, pure and simple, coming from the Committee on Claims, and are not appropriate to the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question. Have not the Bowman Act claims and the French spoliation claims been repeatedly put upon a deficiency appropriation bill, and has not the claim that they are findings or judgments of the Court of Claims been always held to take them out of the rule? If this point of order is good, why is it not good as against any judgment of the Court of Claims?

Mr. COCKRELL. Neither the French spoliation nor the Bowman law claims are judgments proper. They are findings of fact. Congress has recognized some of the findings in the case of the French spoliation claims and paid them. Congress has likewise recognized some of the claims allowed under the Bowman law, and that was done in a general act, including a large number of claims reported by the Court of Claims to Congress under the Bowman law, where they found the facts, finding the amount of property taken and actually used for army purposes and the value of it. That was a number of years ago. It is true once or twice, by a bare majority vote of the Committee on Appropriations, an amendment was inserted for the payment of the French spoliation claims. My recollection is that the Bowman Act claims have never been inserted upon a deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. PLATT. We paid several million dollars of the French spoliation claims in that way.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know. I say there was one class of French spoliation claims where payment was made, and that was all.

Mr. PLATT. Two, were there not?

Mr. COCKRELL. The fact that Congress may have heretofore put these claims on an appropriation bill does not relieve the claims since reported from the rule of the Senate as being claims, pure and simple. They have been offered and have been rejected and discarded and ruled out because they were claims. There can be no question on earth that these are claims, pure and simple. They come from the Committee on Claims, and are reported here as claims. If they are not claims, then we have no claims. If these claims are to go on, every bill reported by the Committee on Claims ought to go on, and I shall insist that every solitary one shall go on the bill. These are just as much claims as anything that has ever been reported by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not true that the Senate has once decided this question of order and put these claims on an appropriation bill and the House accepted them and they were paid?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think there was any point of order made at the time that was done.

Mr. WARREN. I can answer.

Mr. COCKRELL. They were put on at the time, it is my recollection, by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLATT. Has not the Senate since decided the point of order in favor of putting these claims on an appropriation bill; and have they not been put on, but not acceded to by the conferees on the part of the House? That is my recollection.

Mr. WARREN. They were so put on the deficiency appropriation bill in 1891. The question of order was raised by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], and it was settled by the Senate and they were put upon the bill and passed.

These are adjudicated claims coming from the Court of Claims over the proper certificate to the Committee on Claims and by that committee recommended to the Appropriation Committee. The certificate of the clerk of the Court of Claims is appended to the amendment, stating that they are the findings of the Court of Claims. It seems to me that when we by our own act have created a tribunal for the adjustment of such claims and by a later act have sent these particular claims to that particular tribunal for the specific purpose of making its findings and provided that they shall be reported to Congress annually, and they are so reported, there is but one honorable, decent, legal way to do, and that is to pay them.

I know of no point of order that can be raised as against the amendment and sustained, as I understand the rules of the Senate. The matter, it is true, was brought up in 1891. I have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 1, 1891, open before me. At that time the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] raised a point of order against the adoption of a similar amendment, and in making the point of order said:

The point of order is that the amendment proposes to provide for private claims; the claims were referred to the Committee on Claims, and that committee has refused to report them favorably to be placed on a general appropriation bill.

At this time we have the advantage of having had this amendment reported favorably by the Committee on Claims in a regular way and having had it sent to the Committee on Appropriations in due time. At that time the point of order was not ruled upon by the Chair, but was submitted to the Senate, and by the Senate it was decided that they were in order, and they were incorporated in the deficiency appropriation bill of that year. The law passed, and over $1,300,000 was appropriated and paid.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was in the last Congress?

Mr. WARREN. That was in 1891, the claims amounting to one million three hundred and some odd thousand dollars.

Mr. PLATT. I do not insist upon the accuracy of my memory, but I am very certain that since that session they have been reported by the Committee on Claims, the point of order made overruled by the Senate, or by the Chair, and they were placed upon the bill here but went out in conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the last Congress, when the combination was made between all the claims, including the sugar-bounty question, the question of order was raised by me. I have forgotten what claims they were, but I think it was upon these claims. It was submitted to the Senate, and the Senate decided that it was in order, and all the claims were put on, the whole mass of them, sugar bounty and all.

Mr. PLATT. The Supreme Court affirmed the sugar bounty to-day, and I think they would affirm these spoliation claims if they could.

Mr. COCKRELL. The House agreed to the one class and disagreed to the other, and they had to be abandoned in conference.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask what the Senator's point of order was about the sugar-bounty claims? The proposed amendment was to carry out existing law, and I can not understand how the Senator can make a point of order on this amendment. I may be wrong, for I am not strong on points of order, but I have been under the impression that either the findings or judgments of the Court of Claims were treated as estimates or as audits of the other Departments of the Government which were entitled to be considered, and that they were not to be treated as private claims, because they were made to carry out existing law. That has been my impression, and that is my belief as to the meaning of the rule. The Senator from Missouri would have it that these claims have only been passed upon favorably by the Senate on previous occasions by reason of some combination among Senators, some unworthy combination among Senators, which could not possibly have existed, and the Senator from Missouri ought to be the last to impute such a motive to honorable Senators upon this floor.

If the question was submitted by the Chair to the Senate because the Chair was in doubt as to how to rule, the presumption is that the Senate decided the question of order as it ought to have been decided, and I submit now, and I am confident in the belief, that these findings of the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act and in connection with the French spoliation claims are findings made in pursuance of existing law and that they are not to be treated, in accordance with the previous practice of the Senate, as private claims.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it seems to me that these claims come to us in the only way that they can ever be expected to come under existing laws. They are absolutely claims which have been reported here under and by reason of existing laws.

The amendment which I have sent to the desk covers 341 claims. The fact that they are claims on this Government of nearly one hundred years' standing is one that possibly does not reflect any too much credit on the Government in any way that we view it.

I do not suppose that I am as well acquainted with these claims as many of those who are older men and older in the service here than I, but I am informed that these claims grew out of a treaty made with France soon after the war of the Revolution, in which this country proposed to sustain France in any war she might have with England. A war between England and France occurred a few years later, in which we did not fulfill our engagements; and by reason of that an unpleasant feeling arose with France, and these depredations were committed upon our shipping, our commerce, by France. At a later date, under another treaty with France, the Government undertook the responsibility of paying these individual claims. It was expressly provided how the claims should be adjudicated and paid. It was provided that they should be investigated by the Court of Claims, and by the Court of Claims be sent to Congress, as their findings are sent here annually.

The amendment simply takes the findings of the Court of Claims in the order in which they were rendered, since and from those that were paid by the act of 1891 down to the date that these now presented were computed so far as they relate to individual and partnership claims, but excluding the so-called insurance claims.

I do not know on what point of order they can be ruled out. As I stated before, in 1891, when the Senate decided that they were in order, they were not part of a composite lot of claims.

They stood, as I may say, alone. At that time the point of order was made by the distinguished Senator who now makes the point, not only on the present grounds, but mainly on the fact that they had not been reported by any committee. Now, the Committee on Claims has reported this amendment exactly as it came from the Court of Claims over its certificate. I believe that this amendment is in order and that these claims come in under existing law. I believe it is but fair to say that they are also to carry out a treaty, and I believe it is not stretching it too far to say that they rise away over and above the ordinary purview of private claims. Therefore they meet every point that can be raised against them, and I submit that the amendment is perfectly in order.

As to previous rulings, there may have been others, but the only one I remember—and I have looked the matter up carefully—is, as I have said before, that the Chair, instead of ruling upon the point of order in 1891, submitted it to the Senate, and the Senate decided that the claims were in order, notwithstanding that at that time they had not been reported upon by one of the standing committees.

Mr. President, perhaps it is not necessary for me to say that I have no personal interest in these claims. I do not suppose a single individual in the State that I in part represent has any interest, even to the extent of one penny, in them; but in pursuit of my duty as a member of one of the great committees of this body, to which I have been assigned by the Senate, I have investigated these claims to some extent, and it seems to me that the only honorable way for us to do is to pay our debts. The fact that the claims are a hundred years old does not make any difference. They have come down to us and been adjudicated in the last five or six years in the only way they can be adjudicated, and their age and our former neglect should not militate against them.

I do not see how I can face my constituents, I do not know how this Senate can permit it to go out to the country that it has undertaken under a point of order, or through the ruling of the Chair upon the point of order, to rule out a million dollars of just debts, which have been due all these years to 341 different parties, and, at the same time, publish to the world the fact that we have appropriated during this session sixty-odd millions for the Navy, sixty-odd millions for rivers and harbors, and millions and millions more for other purposes—for improvements, investments, and so forth. I do not inveigh against any of these appropriation bills, but it seems to me that our first duty is to pay our just debts.

Mr. PLATT. I have only thought of this matter since the point of order has been made, but the more I think of it the more I am satisfied that this point has never been decided either by the Chair or by the Senate adverse to receiving these claims upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has stated the facts very clearly. He has shown that these are claims, and very old claims. They are not judgments of a court, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] knows perfectly well that these French spoliation claims are not judgments, like the ordinary judgments of the Court of Claims; he knows that the Bowman-law claims are not judgments like the ordinary judgments of a court, where the amount found is ordered and adjudged and it bears interest. He knows that under the Bowman law the court can only find certain facts and report their finding of facts.

They do not pretend to enter up a judgment; there is no pretense of a judgment; the first thing they determine is the question of loyalty. When that has been determined, they then proceed to determine as to the property, by whom taken, by whom used, and its value. If it were taken by the Army, and used for army purposes, they find that fact and state it, and report simply that fact, but they do not report any judgment. They report the facts in the case where the property was not used by the Army, and consequently the Government is not liable, just as they report in a case where the property was actually used by the Army for army purposes, and the liability of the Government is recognized. There is no distinction. They report the facts, and as a matter of course, they report them to Congress for action.

Now, the law in regard to French spoliation claims expressly declares that there is no liability on the part of the Government and that they are to be reported to Congress for its action. These are claims pure and simple, regardless of any decision or ruling which may have been made in the past, and I ask that they may be excluded.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, these claims, as has been stated by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], grew out of the treaty with France. The United States Government, if I remember correctly, agreed to pay these claims, and France in return agreed to pay the claims of her citizens against the Government of the United States.

Mr. GEAR. May I ask the Senator was not that arrangement made in the treaty at the time of the Louisiana purchase?

Mr. LODGE. I think it was before that treaty.

Mr. GEAR. Was not the money retained to pay these claims?

Mr. LODGE. The money was retained by our Government; at all events the money belonging to these claimants.

These claims have been contested before Congress for three generations. Finally, in 1891, as the Senator from Wyoming has stated, a portion of these claims were put in here in the Senate under the findings of the Court of Claims, and that portion has been paid. It was unjust to keep these people out of their money for a hundred years; it is still more unjust to have paid a portion of the claims and not pay the rest. That is the position in which we are placed.

As I understand, the Senate has already passed on this precise question, except that the claims were not then reported from a committee of the Senate. There has never been, I believe, an adverse decision; and it seems to me that being reported to the Senate from a Senate committee on the findings of the Court of Claims, they are not within the rule, and ought to be admitted as now in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits the question to the Senate. Is the pending amendment in order?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], and therefore withhold my vote.

Provided, That all of said awards shall be paid to the personal representatives of the original sufferers, to be distributed to the next of kin in accordance with the probate laws of the several States and Territories in which letters testamentary or administration have been granted: Provided, That in all cases in which an individual or firm was adjudicated bankrupt or insolvent, or where an assignment for the benefit of creditors was made, or the estate of the original sufferer after his death was declared insolvent, payment shall be made to the executor or administrator of the original sufferer, or of the survivor of the firm: And provided further, That no award shall be paid until the Court of Claims shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that the person to whom the award is made payable does not represent an assignee in bankruptcy or insolvency or an assignee for the benefit of creditors, and until the court which granted administration shall certify that such executor or administrator has given adequate security for the legal disbursement of the award.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

I hereby certify that the above list of awards by the Court of Claims in French spoliation cases is prepared according to the order of date in which said cases were decided by said court, and that the awards therein stated are correct.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the said court at Washington this 21st day of April, A. D. 1886.

ARCHIBALD HOPKINS, Chief Clerk.

Mr. VILAS. I want to inquire of whoever is proposing this amendment if it does not contain all the insurance claims?

Mr. WARREN. I will say, for the information of the Senator from Wisconsin, that it includes none of them.

Mr. VILAS. No insurance claims?

Mr. WARREN. No, sir; they are all excluded.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the pending amendment to pay sundry claims, in respect to which the Court of Claims has found in favor of the claimants, and found the respective amounts. The amendment has been referred to the Committee on Claims of the Senate, and by that committee favorably reported, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

Mr. HARRIS. I will state that the amendment is somewhat voluminous. It contains a large number of claims with the specific amount in each case. So the first paragraph may be read, and, unless desired by some Senator, there is no occasion to read the remainder of the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Are those claims found under what is generally known as the Bowman Act?

Mr. HARRIS. Under the Bowman Act. Each and every one of them has been found by the Court of Claims and reported by the Committee on Claims. They aggregate somewhere within the range of half a million dollars. Exactly what the aggregate is I have not summed up.

Mr. PALMER. I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee—I do not insist upon having the amendment read—the number of claimants included in it?

Mr. HARRIS. Even that fact I can not answer, but each claim has been referred to the Court of Claims. That court has, in the first instance, found the fact of loyalty, and then it has gone on to find the facts as to the amount and character of property taken and the value of the property.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee whether this list of claims has been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims?

Mr. HARRIS. It has been.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then it has had the examination of that committee?

Mr. HARRIS. It has.

Mr. CHANDLER. And the amendment contains no other claims but those which have received the consideration of the committee?

Mr. HARRIS. None other than those reported upon by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARRIS. And referred to the Committee on Appropriations after having been reported by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BURROWS. I will say, in response to an inquiry which has been made, that the amount carried by this amendment is $548,922.54.

Mr. HARRIS. Can the Senator answer the question asked by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] as to the number of claimants? I could not; I have not the number in mind.

Mr. BURROWS. The number of claims carried in the amendment is 325. I became conversant with this matter because it was referred to me as a subcommittee, and I examined it with a great deal of care and made the report in the case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of Mr. WARREN by adding the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of the several claims examined, investigated, and reported favorably by the Court of Claims of the United States under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," and known as the Bowman Act, namely:

Mr. BURROWS. If the question is upon agreeing to this amendment, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to page 25 of the amendment, where there is a provision to pay J. Harvey Mathes, administrator of Benjamin Cash, deceased, late of Shelby County, $1,225.

Mr. HARRIS. In line 13 I find the case referred to:

To J. Harvey Mathes, administrator of Benjamin Casa, deceased, late of Shelby County, $1,225.

Mr. BURROWS. In the copy of the amendment which I hold in my hand that claim is provided for on page 25, line 9, and it is also found on page 28, line 23.

Mr. HARRIS. That is evidently a mistake.

Mr. BURROWS. One of them should be stricken out.

Mr. HARRIS. Necessarily.

Mr. BURROWS. I move that one of the appropriations be stricken from the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the paragraph on page 29, lines 1, 2, and 3 of my amendment, which reads in precisely the same language, be stricken out.

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

The SECRETARY. On page 29 of the amendment to the amendment, it is proposed to strike out lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, as follows:

To J. Harvey Mathes, administrator of Benjamin Cash, deceased, late of Shelby County, $1,225.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, the amendment to the amendment will be modified by striking out those lines.

Mr. BURROWS. On page 27 of the amendment I have in my hand, and it is the one I examined, there is a clause which reads: "To David H. Hildebrand, of Shelby County, $863." I do not think the finding of the court would justify putting that sum in, although it is a small amount. The court in its finding did not ascertain that that amount was due. I hold in my hand the finding of the court, in which it says:

I.

During the war for the suppression of the rebellion there were taken from the claimant three horses and two mules for which the claimant had paid the following prices: For one horse $225, for another horse $175, and for the third horse $163; for one mule $340, for the other mule $175.

II.

The horses and mules were taken under the following circumstances: About April 1, 1864, between 10 and 11 o'clock in the forenoon, a force of some three hundred or four hundred United States mounted soldiers, commanded by an officer who represented himself to be a captain, halted at claimant's house in Shelby County, Tenn., and by the direction of the said commander seized and led away two horses and one mule. In the evening of the next day, before sundown, a similar force under similar circumstances seized the remaining horse and mule.

III.

Nothing has been shown to identify the command, which was unknown to claimant; the value of the stock has not been shown further than as stated in Finding I; no receipts or vouchers were given claimant or sought by him.

And that finding was that the claimant paid so much for this property. When he paid for it, whether he paid more than it was worth, or anything of the kind does not appear in the finding. I move to amend the amendment by striking out that provision, because the court has not found the amount due.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment can only be entertained by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURROWS. I think there will be no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be considered as agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. It is an amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. It has been referred to the Committee on Claims and reported favorably.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment:

For payment of Charles P. Choteau, survivor of Choteau, Harrison & Valle, of St. Louis, Mo., $174,445.75, it being the amount stated in the findings of facts by the Court of Claims on two separate occasions, to wit: First, in a proceeding under the general law (9 Court of Claims Reports, page 155); second, upon a reference by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives (20 Court of Claims Reports, page 250) in the Forty-eighth Congress, said amount being the balance due and to be in full satisfaction of all claims arising out of the construction of the ironclad steam battery Etlah, constructed under the contract made by the Navy Department on behalf of the United States with Charles W. McCord on the 9th day of July, 1864.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending amendment. The sum has been awarded by the Court of Claims. The matter was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, favorably reported, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of, the several claims examined, investigated, and reported favorably by the Court of Claims of the United States under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," and known as the Bowman Act, as hereinafter set forth, for supplies furnished the Indian service in 1873 and 1874, and reported to Congress by Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 165, Fifty-first Congress, first session, to wit:

To Edward N. Fish & Co., $1,800.

To Edward N. Fish & Co., assignees of W. B. Hugus, $2,400.20.

To Bowers & Richards, assignees of James M. Barney, $3,534.76.

To Sutro & Co., assignees of William B. Hooper & Co., $3,479.32.

The payments to the assignees in each case being at the request of the original claimants as found by the Court of Claims; and all of which claims were reported by the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress in House Executive Document No. 151, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, page 27, as deficiencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years.

Mr. HALE. Are these claims under what is called the Bowman Act?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is an error in the list of Bowman Act claims. On page 23, line 8, and again in line 11, it says, "Houston County." It ought to be "John T. Lynch, Houston, Texas County, Mo." There are two places on page 23, first, line 8, and again in 11.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be modified as indicated by the Senator from Missouri. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. I offer an amendment to be inserted after line 2, on page 55.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 55, it is proposed to insert:

The disbursing officer of the United States Mexican Boundary Commission shall pay, from moneys already appropriated for said expenses, to each of the three members of the Commission, such allowance as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, not exceeding $3 a day for the time actually employed by them in the discharge of the work of the Commission.

Mr. SQUIRE. A word by way of explanation.

Mr. HALE. The Senator need not explain the amendment. I do not think it is absolutely needed, but if there is any point with reference to the Comptroller stopping the account it ought to be cured; and I do not object to the amendment.

Mr. SQUIRE. Thank you. The amendment does not involve any expenditure beyond what is already appropriated in the bill passed during the present session of Congress, which became a law February 26, 1896. It is simply to meet an objection of the Comptroller, and nothing more. The money has already been appropriated.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know what the amendment relates to.

Mr. SQUIRE. It relates to the Mexican National Boundary Commission, which was authorized by an international convention of 1882, and subsequently in 1889——

Mr. HALE. It is all right.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We can not hear a word that is occurring on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. SQUIRE. I was about to state, in answer to the question of the Senator from South Dakota, that the International Boundary Commission, upon assuming their duties, were allowed to draw money to pay their personal expenses. There was an act to satisfy the Comptroller's objection to the payment thus authorized by the State Department. Provision was made in the deficiency act of 1894, and a provision was also inserted in the urgent deficiency act of February 26, 1896. I have it here before me. I will read it if it is necessary. I understand the Committee on Appropriations is willing to accept the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. After line 13, on page 28, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 13, on page 28, it is proposed to insert:

For the payment to W. H. B. Stout, Cyrus J. Hall, and Isaac S. Bangs, late doing business under the style and firm name of Stout, Hall & Bangs, and J. M. Vale, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full payment of the balance due them on a contract entered into with them by the United States of America, April 21, 1868, for furnishing stone for the walls of the cellar or subbasement of the Library building in the city of Washington, as found by the Secretary of the Interior in his report to Congress (House Document No. 117, first session, Fifty-fourth Congress) under the authority conferred upon him by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1895 (28 Statutes at Large, 94), the sum of $32,802.52, which sum shall be paid as follows:

To William H. B. Stout and Isaac S. Bangs, or their assigns, the sum of $22,802.52.

To Cyrus J. Hall the sum of $6,000.

To J. M. Vale the sum of $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 131, at the end of line 12, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Postmaster-General to pay to Mary M. Force, postmaster at Selma, Ala., the sum advanced by her in 1890 in payment of horse hire and the increased salary of B. M. Russell, a carrier of said office, when said account had been audited by the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, if the same is found to be just, $112.82, and said Auditor is empowered and required to audit said account.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY], who is called away from the city to-day, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 12, page 51, it is proposed to insert:

To pay the claims (Treasury settlements) certified in Senate Executive Document No. 98, second session Fifty-third Congress, $35,791.67.

To pay the claims (Treasury settlements) certified in House Miscellaneous Document No. 56, third session Fifty-third Congress, $37,313.54.

Provided, That no part of the money appropriated by the two preceding paragraphs shall be paid to any one of the claimants until the Court of Claims shall have heard and determined all the questions involved and the liability of the United States Government therefor in at least one test case, which case shall be preferred in the order of the docket of said court. Full and complete jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims for the purposes above named. If the determination of the Court of Claims shall be in favor of the claimant they shall be paid, otherwise not. The Attorney-General shall see to it that the interest of the Government is protected in said suit or suits.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer an amendment, to come in on page 26, after line 5.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

To pay William H. Crook, as compensation for services as secretary to the President to sign land patents, $4,000, for the fiscal years 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882, inclusive.

Mr. HALE. I offer an amendment, to come in on page 60, at the end of line 9.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

That there be paid to the Portland Company, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $80,867.46, in full payment and discharge of the claim of said Portland Company for work done and material furnished in the construction of the United States double-ender gunboats Agawam and Pontoosuc, as per report of Thomas O. Selfridge, commodore and president of board, Senate Executive Document No. 18, first session of the Thirty-ninth Congress.

Mr. HALE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

That the sum of $77,989.38 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to William S. Grant in full satisfaction of his claims against the United States arising out of his contract to supply military posts in Arizona in the years 1860 and 1861, said sum of money to be paid under the direction of the Secretary of War, who shall take proper releases and receipts from said William S. Grant.

Mr. HALE. On page 50 there is a reserved amendment which I wish to have the Senate adopt. It was passed over, and I have neglected to call it up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Appropriations report an amendment, to insert after line 17, on page 50:

Quartermaster's Department: To pay amounts audited and allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department for barracks and quarters, and reported to Congress in House Executive Document No. 234, Fifty-third Congress, third session, $36,500.12.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Calvin Gunn, of St. Louis, Mo., out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $700, in full compensation for the amount due him as informer, and ordered to be paid to him by the United States district court for the eastern district of Missouri, in case No. 1387 before said court, in the year 1868.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to inquire whether or not these amendments are within the rule. The Senator from Missouri and others have been objecting to claims. I should like to know if these are not private claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senate has decided that these amendments are all in order. The Senator from Virginia was absent at the time.

Mr. DANIEL. I only wish to give notice that we hope the bill may not be passed this evening, so that some of us may have an opportunity to enjoy the same privileges that are exercised by other Senators.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the heirs of James Bridger, deceased, the sum of $6,000, in full satisfaction for his improvements made at Fort Bridger, Utah Territory, which were appropriated by the United States Army, in the fall of 1857, under command of Brig. Gen. Albert S. Johnston.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was found by the Quartermaster-General to be due. A bill for this purpose has been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims and has passed the Senate two or three times.

Mr. ALDRICH. I make the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the proper Auditor of the Department reported favorably on this claim?

Mr. COCKRELL. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was the ground on which the amendment I offered was ruled out.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly it was, but the Senate has decided that all these amendments are in order, and that is not necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not understand that the Senate so decided.

Mr. COCKRELL. It certainly decided that. Nobody pretends to claim that the Bowman Act claims are audited claims. This is in strict compliance with the ruling of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Rhode Island to make a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. ALDRICH. I make the point of order that it is a private claim. It seems to me very plain. The fact that the Senate has decided by a vote that an amendment to pay the judgments of the Court of Claims in the French spoliation cases is in order does not entitle the Senator from Missouri or any other Senator to violate every rule of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. These claims have been reported by the Committee on Claims, and have passed the Senate repeatedly. They are old claims. They are precisely as just as the French spoliation claims.

Mr. ALDRICH. They undoubtedly have the virtue of age, if that is in their favor.

Mr. COCKRELL. And there is no difference between them on this earth. I insist that the amendment shall go in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri will again be stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. The point of order I make is that, under the fourth clause of Rule XVI, the amendment is not in order. It is a private claim offered to a general appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was unable to understand from the Senator from Missouri how it was taken out of the rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was taken out by the action of the Senate. The Chair submitted the question of other claims of precisely similar import and the Senate decided that they were in order. This is a claim, a just claim. It dates away back; it is not quite as old as the French spoliation claims or some of the Bowman claims. It has been referred to the Quartermaster-General. The Quartermaster-General has made a report upon it, and this is the amount that he found due. It has been reported by the Committee on Claims repeatedly, has passed the Senate at the present session, and is now in the House.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not understand that the Senate has made any such decision as the Senator from Missouri assumes. In the case of the Bowman Act claims and the French spoliation claims they were argued as being exempt from the ordinary rule as to private claims, because they had been passed upon by the Court of Claims, and because the amounts that were moved were findings of the Court of Claims. To be sure, there was the question whether a finding of the Court of Claims was a judgment. The Senator from Missouri admitted that the judgment of the Court of Claims was in order to carry out the provisions of existing law, but he said there was a distinction between a judgment of the Court of Claims and a finding of the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act and under the act in reference to the French spoliation claims. It was contended, however, by the advocates of those two classes of claims that the findings of the court were entitled to be treated, so far as the rule of the Senate is concerned, as in order, but it was not argued that every possible private claim was admissible notwithstanding the rule. Now, the Senator, a little out of sorts, I suppose, because the Senate overruled his point, argues here that the rule is wholly gone, and is seeking to load this bill with claims in order, I suppose, that an excuse may be found for leaving all the claims out in committee of conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I am not. If I should be one of the conferees I will stick to them until the next 4th of March, if the other members will. I give notice if any of these amendments are receded from it will not be by my vote. I will keep this Congress in session until the 4th of next March or make the House agree to it. If they are receded from, it will not be my fault. I am not trying to prepare a way for any such thing as that.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator shows that he possesses that calm mind and judicial temper which fit him to be a representative of the Senate upon a committee of conference, but I take the liberty of saying to him that he is not acting in accordance with his own calm and cool judgment when he gives such notice to the Senate. He goes upon the committee of conference, if he goes there, to deal calmly and coolly and with good judgment, and not with bad temper.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why should I not adhere to these things?

Mr. CHANDLER. If he is going to act in temper, he ought not to go upon the committee of conference to represent the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me? I do wish that some of our committees of conference would show a little of the temper which the Senator from Missouri is charged with showing. We should not then have to give up everything to the House the way we do.

Mr. CHANDLER. Practically the Senators who advocated that the Bowman Act claims and the French spoliation claims were in order upon this bill are being punished by the Committee on Appropriations now by having this bill loaded down with every claim which they can lay their hands upon for the purpose of making the amendments of the Senate odious. A very good argument has been exhibited to the Senate why the appropriation bills should be distributed instead of being concentrated in the hands of a half dozen gentlemen who, when things go to suit them, are very amiable, and when they do not go to suit them get out of temper and threaten the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I knew I would make the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire mad. He has been in the habit of tantalizing Senators and trying to provoke them to anger, and now he has shown his want of balance. He has shown his anger. He has shown his resentful feeling. I told him a truth. He did not want to hear that truth. I told him that I was willing to stand by the Senate amendments, but that is not what he wanted. He was trying to make the impression that we were loading the bill down for the purpose of disagreeing to them—an insinuation unworthy of the distinguished Senator and which he never would have made if he had kept his temper and had not wandered off in anger and resentment.

Mr. President, I simply meant that I was willing to abide by the decision of the Senate and to adhere to it. I have always in the Senate opposed putting on any amendments that the Senate conferees would not adhere to. I do not believe it is seemly on the part of the Senate to do it. I have for one protested against amendments that were proposed to be put on by the Senate, because when the Senate puts on an amendment to an appropriation bill relating to its own personnel and administration it ought never to yield. While I had the honor of being chairman of the Committee on Appropriations it never did yield one solitary cent. The Senate ought to maintain certain things concerning itself, and it ought to have its own way in regard to them.

Mr. President, these are claims. Everybody admits that they are claims. The French spoliation cases are claims. They are claims a hundred years old. They have been to the Committee on Claims. They have been reported and they have been put upon this bill. The Senate had a perfect right to do that. The Bowman claims have been to the Court of Claims, where there was a finding of facts. They came here and the Senate had a right to put them on.

The Senate has a right to make its own rules when it comes to a point of this kind. It made this rule, and that rule was that these claims should go on this bill. I think now that any other claim as just as those, that has passed the proper scrutiny, has the same right to go upon it, and I offered these claims. They are old claims, just claims. Nobody disputes them. They ought to go on the bill. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has no right to make the point of order upon them. He is estopped from doing that just as plainly as a man can be.

Now, I hope that the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire will regain his accustomed kindly feeling; that he will not show so much anger and resentment hereafter, and will not accuse Senators improperly of attempting to do what they never dreamed of doing.

Mr. CHANDLER. I congratulate myself that I have succeeded in doing what I never knew any other Senator to do. I have made the Senator from Missouri good-natured.

It all comes back to the same thing, whether there is or is not a distinction between the Bowman Act claims and the French spoliation claims and other claims. Those claims have been passed upon by the Court of Claims. The whole argument was based upon the proposition that there was a distinction between those claims and ordinary private claims that had only been passed upon by a committee of this body. I submit that the distinction is a good one, and that it does not follow because the Senate voted that those claims were in order therefore every private claim that is pending in Congress is in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, it is getting very late and dark, and I appeal to Senators to help me pass the bill. I want to get it out of the way to-night and be out of the way of the Senator from North Carolina, who this morning was willing to give way under the implied promise that the bill would be hurried through. I am very desirous that we should pass the bill to-night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question of order is pending before the Chair.

Mr. HALE. I understand that. I hope the Chair will decide the point of order, and that then we may have a vote upon the bill, unless there are some other amendments to come in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair determines the point of order when it is raised. The point of order made by the Senator from Rhode Island the Chair is compelled to sustain.

Mr. HARRIS. At the request of the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who was chairman of the Finance Committee of the Fifty-third Congress, I offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 21, page 98, insert:

To pay to Benjamin Durfee for extra services rendered to the Committee on Finance of the Senate during the consideration of the tariff bill of 1894, $2,500.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to say that, while Mr. Durfee was not connected with that committee, I personally know that he performed many services and quite a good deal of hard work. He is wonderfully familiar with all revenue laws and regulations and was of great service to the committee. The gentleman occupying the position of clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, who, I believe, receives an annual salary of $3,000, has had an allowance similar to this made to him, as I am informed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I offer an amendment. I move to insert, after the Portland Company amendment, that was offered by the Senator from Maine, on page 60:

For payment to Nancy E. Day, administratrix of the estate of James L. Day, deceased, the sum of $3,041.66, in payment and satisfaction of the amount found due from the United States to the said Nancy E. Day, administratrix as aforesaid, by the Court of Claims, upon a reference of her claim to that court by the Postmaster-General, under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. As I see the Senate is now in such good humor, I will take the liberty of offering an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add to the bill:

That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to purchase of James B. Lyon 50,000 copies of the United States Red Book (published by him at Albany, N. Y.), 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 30,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 copies to be distributed under the direction of the Secretary of State; and the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

Mr. HILL. Senators are, I think, familiar with this book. It has been laid upon their tables, one copy having been presented to each Senator. It is a most valuable and important book to be distributed to our constituents. It is one of the best books that can be distributed.

Mr. HALE. Is the amendment reported by any standing committee?

Mr. HILL. I think so, sir.

Mr. HALE. From what committee?

Mr. HILL. The Library Committee, I think.

Mr. HALE. It ought to have been there.

Mr. HILL. If the conference committee want to cut down the amount or prune it in any shape, they can do so. I offer it in behalf of my colleague [Mr. MURPHY], who is not able to be here, and I trust the Senator will allow the amendment to go on the bill. If you want to change it, it can be cut down hereafter.

Mr. HALE. If it is reported by a regular committee, of course I can not make the point of order. If it is not, I shall have to make the point of order, because there are fifty just such amendments pending.

Mr. HILL. I think it has been reported.

Mr. HALE. The Secretary can tell. I do not know anything about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has no information upon the subject.

Mr. HILL. We will look that up afterwards, if the Senator pleases. Let it go for the present. You can find out afterwards if it is not a proper amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. BATE. I should like to ask if this is the book that contains the likenesses of all Senators?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir; and the finest looking body of men who ever got together.

Mr. ALDRICH. I make the point of order against the amendment if no one else does.

Mr. BATE. I think myself there are some good things in the book——

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir; the Senator's own likeness is there, and it is first rate.

Mr. BATE. But I do not think it is in good taste for the Senate here to vote $50,000 for its distribution when the larger part of it consists of likenesses of Senators. I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I make the point of order. I supposed it had been made by the Senator from Maine, but if it has not I make it now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the point of order of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. ALDRICH. That the amendment is not in order; that it has not been reported by any standing or special committee, and is adding a new item of appropriation not estimated for.

Mr. HILL. It is about as good as the French spoliation claims amendment. Can not the good-natured Vice-President submit the question to the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits the question to the Senate. Is the pending amendment in order? [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the Senate decides that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. DANIEL. After line 2, page 21, I move to insert:

To pay Briscoe B. Bouldin the sum of $205.15, in reimbursement of expenditures on account of wounds received in the service.

Mr. HALE. Is that reported by a standing committee?

Mr. DANIEL. Allow me to make a brief statement.

Mr. HALE. I merely asked the question.

Mr. DANIEL. A bill for this purpose has been reported favorably from the Committee on Claims, and it is as meritorious a claim as is embodied in this whole bill. This gentleman was an officer of the internal-revenue service and had a desperate encounter in North Carolina with certain moonshiners, in which he acted with conspicuous courage. It was recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that his absolute expenses incurred by reason of the wounds should be paid.

The matter has been for two consecutive years examined by the Committee on Claims; the correspondence, the proof, the medical certificates, all set forth in full; and it is a case of that dignity and merit which it seems to me ought to be recognized by the Senate, and that a worthy officer, who was highly commended by his Government, should be recognized by this humane consideration of his sufferings and his courage. I know personally the facts to be true beyond the information which I gather from the reports.

Mr. HALE. If the amendment has been reported by a standing committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations it is not subject to the point of order. If it has not been so reported and referred it is subject to the point of order, and I make the point of order. I do not know whether that has been the case or not.

Mr. DANIEL. I think the Senator has himself offered amendments of the same character to this bill, and I do not see why we should be assailed on all hands with points of order which nobody regards as to his own claims.

Mr. HALE. I have not——

Mr. DANIEL. Members of the committee pay no attention to the rules.

Mr. HALE. I have not offered an amendment here that has not been either reported by a committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations or already passed by the Senate or both.

Mr. DANIEL. We naturally look to the members of the Committee on Appropriations as our exemplars and guides. They have paid no attention to the rule. It is evidently one made merely for personal convenience and not for the government of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator has no right to make that statement.

Mr. DANIEL. I did not mean by it to be offensive to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. No member of the committee, certainly not myself, nor has any member offered an amendment that is not subject to precisely the rule that I have invoked here, and which was taken out of the operation of the rule because it was reported by some committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which made it in order, and in other cases because the bill itself passed the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Maine that that does not make a private claim in order.

Mr. HALE. No, it does not make a private claim in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yet the Senator, I think, admitted some private claims.

Mr. HALE. I did.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I propose to reintroduce the amendment I offered some time ago, and I hope the Senator will not apply the rule which his own committee does not recognize.

Mr. HALE. I certainly shall not make the point of order, after what the Senate has done, against any claim, private or otherwise, where a committee has reported it and referred it to the Committee on Appropriations or where it has already passed the Senate. I certainly shall not make that point of order.

Mr. DANIEL. That exception, stated in guarded language, happens to cover cases which other gentlemen are interested in. I do not see why, if we are not going to be governed by the rule, gentlemen ought to invent new and very refining rules which simply bring in a certain class of cases and leave out the others. I am afraid that this rule, if strictly applied with the new and technical nicety with which the Senator shaves down the line, might trench dangerously near to the proximity of my case. I am a little uneasy about the refining application, and I hope the Senator will not make this point upon so worthy and meritorious a case. I think it is above the Senator from Maine, if he will allow me so to state, to make war upon a little claim of a revenue officer who was shot and wounded in the service and who was commended by the Government for his good conduct.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will withhold his praise, I will withdraw the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment, and after it is read I will make a brief explanation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 11, page 103, add:

To pay FRED T. DUBOIS the salary due him as Delegate in Congress from the Territory of Idaho from July 3, 1890, to March 4, 1891, inclusive, $3,333.34.

Mr. ALLISON. This amount includes the compensation of Delegate from Idaho from the time of the admission of the Territory of Idaho as a State until the expiration of his term as Delegate had the State not been admitted. It is a House provision, but by some accident it was omitted and not inserted in this bill. We are told that it will meet with no opposition on the part of the House. It is in exact accordance with all the precedents in similar cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment that was proposed, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 13, page 47, insert:

To pay Emmart, Dunbar & Co. the amount found due by the auditor of the District of Columbia for work done by said firm in connection with the laying of the 36-inch water main under their contract of September 1, 1871, with said District, to be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia, $14,548.22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to call up the conference report on the legislative, etc., appropriation bill. I think it will take no time.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me that I may submit a conference report in order to have it printed?

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection and will yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 7664) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes. I ask that the report may be printed in the RECORD, and also printed as a document, and I give notice that to-morrow morning, or at some convenient season, I shall ask the Senate to consider it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the report submitted by the Senator from Iowa will be ordered to be printed in the RECORD and also printed as a document.

The report is as follows:

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the conference report on the legislative, etc., appropriation bill may be taken up for consideration.

Mr. HILL. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not press the consideration of that report this evening.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it will take only a very few minutes. I think the Senator himself understands exactly what there is left in it.

Mr. HILL. I want to submit some remarks upon it, but do not desire to do so to-night.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator desire the report to go over?

Mr. HILL. Let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well; I make no objection.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 26, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 25, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will be approved. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman rise to object to the approval of the Journal?

Mr. KEM. I object to the approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman rose for that purpose?

Mr. KEM. I did.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question to the House.

The question was taken; and the Journal was approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The bill of the Senate (No. 989) granting a pension to Fannie Kautz, widow of General Kautz, of the Army, will be taken from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, if there be no objection, and referred to the Committee on Pensions. There was an erroneous reference in the first instance. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM]. The Chair will submit the question to the House.

The question was taken; and the change of reference was directed.

SALE OF GAS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6994) relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia.

The Senate amendments were read at length.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. ODELL, and Mr. RICHARDSON as conferees on the part of the House.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY COMPANY, ETC.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this being District day, I desire to call up for present consideration the unfinished business on the Calendar, the bill (H. R. 2928) to extend the routes of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and of the Belt Railway Company of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] which was pending when this matter was before the House on a previous occasion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 14, section 1, after the word "power," the following:

"And provided further, That within thirty days after the passage of this act cars shall be regularly run over the existing tracks, beginning at the intersection of G street and New Jersey avenue, thence across New Jersey avenue to and along G street to North Capitol street, thence north on North Capitol street to T street, according to a schedule satisfactory to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

Mr. HEPBURN. I believe the gentleman in charge of the bill is willing to accept that amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no objection to the amendment, as I understand it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the further amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 2 by adding:

"And provided, That said Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company shall not have its bonds outstanding at any one time to a greater amount than 75 per cent of the actual cost of the construction and equipment of said railway; which actual cost the president, the treasurer, and a civil engineer, approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall certify to said Commissioners, under oath, has been actually expended in the construction and equipment of its railway, and any false swearing in the matter shall be perjury.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I wish simply to say that that is almost a precise copy of the general law of the State of Connecticut, with reference to bonding privilege of street railways. It provides specifically that there shall be at no time outstanding more than 75 per cent of the amount of the cost of the road in bonds, and is simply a provision for the protection of the bondholders. It requires that at least 25 per cent of the cost of the road shall be paid on its stock, and no honestly managed road can object to such a provision.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why do you not make that provision stronger and require that all of the stock shall be paid in, and that the bonds shall only be for the surplus cost of the road over and above the amount of stock?

Mr. HILL. I have no desire to hamper the construction or extension of this road, but in looking over the bill it seemed to me that as now drawn there is no provision for the protection of the unsuspecting public who might buy the bonds. Therefore, after some personal experience in the construction of street railroads, and some familiarity with the law of Connecticut, I copied the precise provision of the general law of that State in regard to the bonding privilege.

Mr. HOPKINS. It would seem from a cursory examination of this provision that it is a bid to investors in these roads to only pay in 25 per cent of the stock and issue bonds for the rest of the cost of the construction.

Mr. HILL. The bill as drawn allows the issuing of bonds for the full amount of the cost. There is no limitation at all, except by the votes of the stockholders themselves. It seems to me there ought to be some provision for the protection of the bondholders.

Mr. HOPKINS. I agree to that entirely, and I ask the gentleman if he has any objection to striking out "75" and inserting "50," so that not more than 50 per cent of the cost shall be covered by the bonds, and at least 50 per cent must be covered by the stock?

Mr. HILL. I have no personal objection. It might possibly embarrass the road.

Mr. HOPKINS. It ought not. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "75" and inserting "50."

Mr. CANNON. I will ask my colleague if this is a new provision as to this particular road which did not pertain to the other roads in the District?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; this is absolutely new.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I want to ask my colleague, if no such limitation as this was applied to the roads running through the thickly settled portions of the city, and this being a road which is to be extended out in a section which is thinly settled, where the investors will have to wait a considerable time before their turn comes, will not the provision which he offers be equivalent to saying that there shall be no road built?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will answer my colleague on that. I will say most emphatically no, and the reason why I say no is that it is supposed that the capital stock of this company, if honestly paid in, will be sufficient to build and equip the road. It ought to be, at least. This amendment of mine provides that it may be bonded for 50 per cent more than cost. Certainly the builders of the road have a margin greater than can be found in almost any business enterprise in the country.

In the State of Illinois this watering of stock had grown to such dimensions that the legislature in their wisdom saw fit to require that the entire capital stock should be paid in in money or its equivalent, and that fact must be certified before there can be any bonds issued at all. The reason for amendments of this kind is apparent to all persons who have had any experience in matters of this character. They know that original investors put in a small amount of money on the stock, and then go outside and borrow money and bond the road for more than it costs to build it. In that way they get the stock for nothing. If the road proves a paying enterprise they make a handsome profit upon the stock. If the road is not a good enterprise the bondholders are the ones who lose the money, and the original investors or stockholders lose nothing at all, because they are not personally responsible upon the bonds issued by the company.

Now, in this case I am not familiar with the location of the proposed road, but I say as a matter of principle that we should not authorize the building of any street railroad in any section where it will not pay in the present, or the immediate future, because there is no demand for any such road, and it partakes too much of a speculative character.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in reference to this bill that the provisions of it are more stringent than the provisions of any railroad bill that has ever been before this House. There is a provision in this bill that practically every railway company in the city of Washington must lay bare its books, its whole list of stockholders, in a report to Congress every year. Now, this provides for rapid transit on the Belt and Eckington lines, and I do not think we ought to insert a provision that would prove a hardship and prevent rapid transit on those lines. We have seen one result of putting rapid transit on the Metropolitan line. The committee are entirely willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], but we do object to cutting it down to 50 per cent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is not a new line.

Mr. BABCOCK. This is not a new line, except a very small part of it. It is merely an extension. Now, Mr. Speaker, on these pending amendments I ask the previous question.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me answer the gentleman in about three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for the previous question. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield one minute.

Mr. HOPKINS. Upon the point stated by the gentleman I desire to say that if Congress has been liberal to these railroad companies heretofore that is no reason why we should be over-liberal with the present road. We know that with reference to many of these roads the stock that only cost 40 cents on a dollar is now selling for three or four dollars. The chartering of these roads is not to make a few individuals rich, but is for the purpose of giving the people cheap transportation, and the only way you can secure cheap transportation is to keep down the amount of the capital stock and bonds of the road. Now, if we allow the directors of this railroad to bond it for 50 per cent of the actual cost of the road it is amply sufficient. As my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] says, why should they be permitted to issue their stock at all until the cash value of that stock is paid into the treasury?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The stock is already issued.

Mr. HOPKINS. These stockholders ought to be required to pay dollar for dollar into the treasury before any bonds are issued at all. That is the requirement of the State of Illinois; that is the requirement of many of the States of the Union; and if these limitations we propose are ingrafted upon this bill we will not hear the cry against this road that has come up against these other roads that Congress has had so much trouble with in the past.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Which other road?

Mr. HOPKINS. I trust my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is your amendment?

Mr. HOPKINS. My amendment is that they shall not issue bonds for more than 50 per cent of the actual cost of the road.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is enough.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 42.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, on page 2, section 1, lines 2 and 3, I move to strike out the words "city of Washington" and insert the words "District of Columbia."

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no objection to the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 5 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire moves to strike out section 5 of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Before we reach that, I have an amendment which comes earlier in the bill. I move to strike out section 3 of the bill—section 4 as it originally was, but now section 3. That is the section authorizing an extension by the Belt Railway Company.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa instead of the gentleman from New Hampshire. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out section 3 of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, this section proposes to give to this company the right to largely extend its lines. It now has more than 20 miles of single-track railway in this city—that is, it and the other company which is a beneficiary in this bill, and yet there is a considerable portion of their road that has already been completed which they have persistently refused to operate. Here on North Capitol street, for the distance of a number of squares, immediately after the street had been completed by being perfectly surfaced, they tore up the street and laid their tracks, replaced the pavement between the tracks, and paved 2 feet on each side with cobblestones, and a portion of the way without any pavement between their tracks; and after thus marring the street, they persistently refused to use it. The people of that portion of the city have been clamoring for years to try to compel them to operate that franchise and give them the benefit of the travel that the charter originally provided for. The authorities have attempted to force them by process of the courts, and have thus far been unable to do it. Then, when they found they would not operate their road, action was brought against the company to require them to remove the nuisance; and they come in and cavalierly say that they are not required to do it, because, without warrant or authority of law, they have sold that property to another company. That is the situation to-day; and yet they come here and ask for some 6 or 8 miles more of trackage right in the city. I do not think they have shown themselves to be of that class that ought to receive any further favor at the hands of this Congress. Therefore, I move to strike out all of this provision that proposes to give them additional extensions and franchises.

Mr. BABCOCK. In reference to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, I desire to say that the committee have stricken out nearly all of the construction that this bill called for originally, leaving only these two spurs, one on Water street, which is a continuation of their track, provided they buy the right of way themselves, and this line beginning at Fourth and O streets and going up to what is called the baseball park. As I understand, this extension is less than 1 mile in length instead of 5 or 6, and the extension on Water street is very short, perhaps a quarter of a mile.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman give some reason why this company, which has been resisting so contumaciously the rights of the people by refusing to operate its road on streets where it is already chartered, should be given these additional facilities? Corporations that act in that way do not belong to the class that are usually favored by legislation. For some reason or other that I do not know anything about they neglect or refuse to do what they voluntarily undertook to do, what they asked and worked to be permitted to do—refuse to give the people the benefit of the service to which they are entitled; and yet they are here now asking for additional favors. I think they ought to be able to show that they have well used the gifts heretofore given them before they will be in a condition to ask for more. I trust that some of the friends of this measure will explain this contumacious conduct on the part of this corporation.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that as one of the committee I have heretofore persistently resisted the resolution asked for by this company on the very ground the gentleman has stated.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not, of course, mean "friends" in any improper sense; I mean simply advocates of this bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. As I have already said, Mr. Speaker, I have persistently opposed the legislation asked for hitherto in the last two sessions of Congress, until finally this bill has been presented which is so stringent in its requirements that I believe it to be in the interest of the whole city that it should pass. The District Committee, as I said before, has stricken from the Senate bill every provision for extension except the two trifling ones that I have indicated. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RUSK], who will further explain the bill.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in general explanation of the bill and somewhat in reply to the gentleman from Iowa, that these two lines have passed under the control of the same persons who constitute the corporation which is now building an electric line between Baltimore and Washington. In the city of Baltimore that line is rapidly approaching completion. By the 1st of August cars will run from Washington to Laurel, and from Baltimore to Ellicott City, and by the 1st of January the line will be in full operation between the two cities. In the city of Baltimore that line is connected with the Traction Company, which controls some 80 miles of street railroads running in various directions. Their idea is to take these two old horse railroads in this District, equip them thoroughly as modern lines, and connect them with the line between Baltimore and Washington.

The purpose is to reduce the fare between the two cities to probably $1 for the round trip, and to make such arrangements that a person buying a ticket from Washington to Baltimore or from Baltimore to Washington shall receive a coupon for street-car fare in either city so that he can ride not only between the two cities, but to any part of either city for the single fare of $1 for the round trip. In other words, the single fare will include street-car fare in each city. I know nothing of the conduct of those who formerly owned these lines, but I do know that the lines have now passed into the hands of responsible persons who have raised the millions necessary to build the line between Baltimore and Washington, and they desire this as a Washington terminus of their system, so that they may convey passengers not merely to the confines of Washington, but to any part of the city. The Senate committee examined this bill very carefully, and, in view of the considerations which I have briefly stated here, they granted very large extensions. The House committee, however, was not willing to go so far as the Senate committee had gone, and it struck out all those extensions except the ones that have been mentioned by the chairman of the committee and which are absolutely necessary to perfect the system even on a small scale. To strike out this section as proposed by the gentleman from Iowa would destroy entirely the plan. The company will be very much hampered by what the House committee has already done by striking out the extension to the Zoological Gardens and other points, and the striking out of this section would entirely defeat the object in view.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman from Maryland feel authorized to give some assurance that this company, if they get these extensions, will use the franchises that have been given them heretofore? For example, that they will use the North Capitol portion of their track, which for more than two years they have refused to make any use of?

Mr. RUSK. I know the persons who are interested in this enterprise, and I know that they are anxious to have the bill pass, and will accept and carry out in good faith every provision contained in it.

Mr. McCORMICK. Is there any provision in this bill to prohibit the digging up of the streets and leaving them in confusion? That seems to be a practice in Washington, and there does not seem to be any power to compel the railroad companies to put the streets back into proper shape.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is a general law which regulates that.

Mr. McCORMICK. But it does not regulate it. F street was in a disturbed condition for a large part of the winter, and now H street—one of the most important streets in the city of Washington—long after the laying of the new track, is in a dangerous condition. We used to think in New York that the streets were too often left in bad shape by the railroad companies, but the streets in Washington are left in worse disorder, if H street is an example, than those of any city I have been in. There ought to be a law to stop the railroad companies from tearing the streets to pieces at will and leaving them in an unsafe condition for months after the work of laying the rails is finished.

Mr. BABCOCK. The reason the track has not been repaired on F street is because there was other work to be done there, and the repairing has been delayed until all the work was completed. Let me say that the work on F street has been done with the greatest rapidity, considering the vast amount of work required to be done.

Mr. McCORMICK. I speak more particularly now of H street. For the last four or five months H street has been in a constant state of confusion; torn up, and torn up, and torn up again, and now it is from Fourteenth street west unfit for vehicles, and in a state by the change of grade that would discredit a frontier village. Some one should be held responsible for it.

Mr. BABCOCK. I now ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will not insist on the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. HEPBURN was rejected.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I now renew my motion to strike out the fifth section.

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire)—ayes 6, noes 13.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and which I will state has been accepted by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 6 by adding:

"And provided, That said Belt Railway Company shall not have its bonds outstanding at any one time to a greater amount than 75 per cent of the actual cost of the construction and equipment of said railway, which actual cost its president, treasurer, and a civil engineer, approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall certify to said Commissioners under oath has been actually expended in the construction and equipment of its railway; and any false swearing in the matter shall be perjury."

Mr. HILL. I will simply say that this bill covers two railroads, not only the Eckington road, but the Belt Line. This amendment proposes to apply to the Belt Line the same restriction in regard to the issue of bonds that is applied to the Eckington road.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "75 per cent" and inserting "50 per cent."

Mr. BABCOCK. We accept that amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. HOPKINS to the amendment of Mr. HILL was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. BABCOCK. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] to strike out section 5 was evidently misunderstood. That section provides that the Belt Railway Company may abandon certain lines in this city. The gentleman from New Hampshire objected to that provision, and wished to have it stricken out. The committee concede that the gentleman's amendment is right, and agree that the section be stricken. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire was disagreed to; and then I shall ask that the amendment be adopted.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the reconsideration will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire to strike out the fifth section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend by inserting after the words "shall be," in line 3, on page 9, the words "sworn to and"; so as to read "which report shall be sworn to and signed by the president and treasurer of such corporation," etc.

Mr. RICHARDSON and Mr. BABCOCK. No objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move further to amend by inserting after the word "debt," in line 11, on page 9, the words "amount of dividends declared."

Mr. RICHARDSON. The effect of that is that the companies shall report the amount of their dividends?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move further to amend by inserting after the word "superintendence," in line 22, page 9, the words "salaries of," so that the reports shall embrace "salaries of officers, clerks, agents," etc.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr BAKER of New Hampshire. I move to amend section 11 by striking out, in line 13, page 10, the word "may" and inserting "shall."

Mr. BABCOCK and Mr. RICHARDSON. No objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NICOLAI BROS.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask present consideration of the bill (S. 3011) for the relief of Nicolai Bros.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to grant permission to Nicolai Bros. to use the pipes heretofore laid by them under a permit from said Commissioners dated December 22, 1893, along I street southeast from Half street to South Capitol street, South Capitol street from I street to K street, K street from South Capitol street to corner of K and Half streets southwest, under such regulations and rental as may be made by the said Commissioners with regard thereto.

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BALTIMORE AND WASHINGTON TRANSIT COMPANY, OF MARYLAND.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 8469) to authorize the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company, of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company, incorporated under the laws of the State of Maryland, and by amended charter by act of the legislature of Maryland, 1896, be, and is hereby, authorized to extend its road from its present charter terminus at Takoma Park, Md., into and within the District of Columbia, commencing at the northeastern boundary line of the District of Columbia, on Carroll avenue, in Takoma Park subdivision, thence in a westerly direction along said Carroll avenue to Maple avenue, thence southerly along said Maple avenue across the Blair road, thence northerly along Blair road to Umatilla street, thence westerly along Umatilla street in such manner and to such point on Umatilla or other streets as will be most feasible to form a junction with the Brightwood railway, the entire distance being about one-half mile.

SEC. 2. That the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company and the Brightwood Railway Company shall have the power to make any contracts or agreements that they may deem necessary to enable the said companies to run the cars of each or either company over the tracks of the other company, and also to contract for and use the power of each or either company to propel the cars of the other company; that said extension of the transit company from the District of Columbia line to a junction with the tracks of the Brightwood Railway Company, near Fifth and Umatilla streets, in Takoma Park, District of Columbia, shall be commenced within six months and completed within one year from the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That in the event that the company should not be able to come to an agreement with the owner or owners of any land through which the said road may be located to pass, or upon which any necessary buildings may be required to be located, proceedings for the condemnation for the use of the company of so much of said land as may be required, not exceeding 30 feet in width, for its roadway, and of so much as may be necessary for buildings, etc., may be instituted in the usual way in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, under such rules and regulations as said court may prescribe for such purposes.

SEC. 4. That the said Baltimore and Washington Transit Company shall be empowered to construct, maintain, equip, and operate a single or double track street railway over the said line, with all necessary buildings, switches, machinery, appliances, appurtenances, and other devices necessary to operate the same by cable, electricity, compressed air, storage battery, or other motive power, to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, That the right of said company to use an overhead single trolley on a street or part of a street shall cease six months after the date of the approval of an act of Congress appropriating money for or otherwise authorizing the paving of the roadway of such street or part of street, except in connection with continuous track rails: And provided further, That the right of said company to use an overhead single trolley in any public space in the District of Columbia, except in connection with continuous track rails, shall in any event cease on July 1, 1899. Said railway to be constructed of good material, with grooved rails of approved pattern, and in a neat and substantial manner, subject to the supervision and approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; the standard gauge to be used and the surfaces of the tracks to conform to the grades of the streets established by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and where the tracks lie within the streets of the District of Columbia the same to be paved between the rails and 2 feet outside thereof with such material and in such manner as shall be approved by the said Commissioners, and kept in repair by the said railway company.

SEC. 5. That said railway shall be constructed in a substantial and durable manner. The plans of construction, rails, electrical and mechanical appliances, conduits and stations, and location of stations and tracks, shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The said company, having first obtained the written permission of the District Commissioners therefor, may make all necessary trenches and excavations and place therein the machinery and devices necessary to the operation of said railway. When said trenches and excavations are open they shall be thoroughly protected to prevent accident, and shall be closed within a reasonable time and the disturbed pavement relaid, all to the satisfaction of said Commissioners. The said company shall, at its own expense, in a good and substantial manner, make all changes to pipes, conduits, and other underground constructions rendered necessary by the construction of said railway. Said company shall be liable for any damage to pipes or other underground constructions caused by the passage of its cars over the same, or by electric currents used in the propulsion of its cars. The said company shall, before commencing work on said railroad, deposit with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia such sum as the Commissioners of said District may deem necessary to defray any expense that may be incurred by the District of Columbia in connection with the inspection of the work of construction of said railway, and to make good any damage done by said company or any of its contracting agents to any public work or construction. An account of the disbursement of such deposit or deposits shall be made to said company, and any balance due them shall be returned upon the completion of the work to defray the cost of which the money was deposited.

SEC. 6. That whenever the roadway of any street occupied by the said railway company is widened, one-half of the cost of widening and improvement of such widened part shall be charged to the said railway company and collected from said company in the same manner as the cost of laying or repairing pavements lying between the exterior rails of the tracks of street railways, and for a distance of 2 feet from and exterior to such track or tracks on each side thereof is collectible under the provisions of section 5 of the act entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878.

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act shall prevent the District of Columbia at any time, at its option, from altering the grade of any avenue, street, or highway occupied by said railway, or from altering and improving streets, avenues, and highways, and the sewers thereof. In such event it shall be the duty of said company to change its said railway and the pavement so as to conform to such grades and improvements as may have been established.

SEC. 8. That the said company may receive a rate of fare not exceeding 5 cents for each passenger for one continuous ride over the route aforesaid within the District of Columbia, or any part thereof, between the termini of said railroad within said District, and shall sell tickets at the rate of six for 25 cents.

SEC. 9. That said company shall pay to the District of Columbia, in lieu of taxes on personal property, for each fiscal year, 4 per cent of its gross earnings under this franchise upon its traffic for the preceding year derived from the operation thereof within the District of Columbia, which amount shall be paid to the collector of taxes at the times and in manner that other taxes are or may be payable, and subject to the same penalty in case of arrears; and the franchise and property of said company, both real and personal, to a sufficient amount, may be seized and sold in satisfaction thereof in the same manner as is or may be provided by law for the sale of other property for taxes, and said per cent of its gross earnings shall be in lieu of any and all assessments upon its personal property in the District of Columbia used solely and exclusively in the operation and management of said railway; but its real estate in said District shall be taxed as other real estate therein: Provided, That its tracks, machinery, and devices shall not be considered real estate for the purpose of taxation.

SEC. 10. That the said company shall, on or before the 1st day of February of each year, make a report to Congress, through the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, of the names of all the stockholders therein and the amount of stock held by each, together with a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures, from whatever source and on whatever account, for the preceding year ending December 31, and such other facts as may be required by any general law of the District of Columbia. The report shall be verified by the affidavit of the president and secretary of the company, and if said report is not made within the time specified herein said company shall be liable to a fine of $500, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 11. That the said corporation may issue bonds or other evidence of debt, to be secured by mortgage of its railroad properties and franchise within the District of Columbia, or by deed of trust thereon, but not to an amount greater than the cost of construction and equipment. It may own, purchase, lease, and sell real estate for the purposes of operating said road.

SEC. 12. That said company shall commence the construction of its said railway within six months from the approval of this act, and said railway shall be open for traffic, with its switches and turn-outs, and with cars running thereon for the accommodation of passengers, within one year from the date of the approval of this act.

SEC. 13. That the said railway company shall deposit with the collector of taxes, District of Columbia, the sum of $1,000, within sixty days from the passage of this act, as a guaranty that it will commence and complete its road within the time herein limited. And unless said sum of $1,000 is so deposited within sixty days from the passage of this act, all rights, franchises, and privileges hereby granted shall immediately cease and determine, and this charter shall be null and void. Should the said railway company fail to commence or complete the construction of its road within the limit of time prescribed by this act, said sum of $1,000 shall be forfeited by the said railway company, and shall be deposited by the collector of taxes with the United States Treasurer to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia, in equal parts.

SEC. 14. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may make such regulations as to rate of speed, schedule for running cars, mode of use of tracks, and removal of ice and snow as, in their judgment, the interest and convenience of the public may require. Should the servants or agents of said company willfully or negligently violate such an ordinance or regulation, said company shall be liable to the District of Columbia for a penalty not exceeding $500.

SEC. 15. That Congress reserves the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act.

The Committee on the District of Columbia recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

First. Strike out all of the first section after the word "Columbia," in line 10, and insert in lieu thereof the words "on Spring road, in Tacoma Park subdivision; westerly along said road to the line of Tahoe street extended; west along the line of said street to Blair road, and thence northwestery, following public highways, to a junction with the Brightwood Railway, along a route to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, That the right of use of Spring road authorized herein shall cease and determine when highways contiguous thereto and shown upon the recorded highway extension plans shall have been opened, in which case the route of the said company shall be upon said highways as may be approved by the said Commissioners in lieu of Spring road."

Second. Add at the end of section 3 the words "Provided, That the land acquired by such agreement or condemnation for right of way for tracks within the limits of streets of the recorded highway-extension plans shall be dedicated to the District of Columbia for a public right of way before the company shall lay its tracks on such land, and that such right of way shall not be less than 90 feet in width for double tracks nor 20 feet in width for single track."

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. This seems to be a provision for an overhead-trolley road coming into the District of Columbia.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will explain the bill in a moment.

This road does not come within 5 miles of the city of Washington. It is away out at Takoma Park, and permission is granted by the bill to give the company, which has a part of its line in Maryland, the right to enter the District of Columbia. The purpose is to permit the road to connect with what is known as the Brightwood road at Takoma Park. It simply authorizes the connection. The bill has been carefully drawn by the District Commissioners, and the committee has made the various amendments which have been recommended by the Commissioners to the bill. The bill is drawn in accordance with their recommendation.

I ask a vote on the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 8 of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in line 5, page 7, after the word "company," the words "in conjunction with said Brightwood Railway."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like the gentleman to state the effect of the amendment. I did not catch exactly the purport of it.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I have also another amendment that I propose to offer to the same section, line 7, page 7, before the word "aforesaid," to insert the words "and the route of said Brightwood Railway"; so that the section will read:

That the said Brightwood Railway Company may receive a rate of fare not exceeding 5 cents for each passenger for one continuous ride over the route aforesaid and the route of said Brightwood Railway within the District of Columbia, or any part thereof, between the termini of said railroad within said District, and shall sell tickets at the rate of six for 25 cents.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no objection to that. It simply makes them pay one fare in the District.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. That is the purpose. This extension is only about a mile and a half long, and as the bill stands a 5-cent fare can be collected for that distance. I want to prevent that if possible.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to offer this as one amendment?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Yes; as one amendment to section 8, to make it read as I have suggested.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WASHINGTON AND GREAT FALLS ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of Senate bill No. 2499, to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway Company."

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that this is a very lengthy bill, but the amendments of the Senate make it a very simple one. I therefore ask to dispense with the reading of the bill except so far as it is amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading of the bill except in so far as it will stand if amended?

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM], and the Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway Company," approved July 29, 1892, and the amendment thereto approved August 23, 1894, be, and the same are hereby, amended as follows:

Section 1 shall be amended to read as follows, commencing with the word "beginning," in line 17:

"Beginning at a passenger station to be erected and maintained on the square bounded by Prospect, Thirty-fifth, M, and Thirty-sixth streets northwest, as hereinafter provided for; thence westerly along Prospect street to or near Thirty-eighth street northwest; thence westerly and northerly on land to be acquired, except at street crossings, by said company, to and across the Foxhall road; thence westerly along the top of the bluff on the north side of the Canal road, and outside and south of the southern boundary of the land of the Washington Aqueduct pertaining to the distributing reservoir, to a point on said boundary not more than 600 feet from the western boundary of said land; thence across said land, but at no point less than 200 feet from the outer crest of the dam of said reservoir, to said western boundary; thence westwardly on a route exterior to and on the south side of the land of the United States pertaining to the Conduit road to the land of the said aqueduct pertaining to the receiving reservoir; thence through said land to a point on the land of said aqueduct near the westerly foot of Dalecarlia Hill; thence westwardly on a route exterior to and on the south side of the land of the United States pertaining to the Conduit road, except in the vicinity of Washington Aqueduct boundary stone No. 31, as hereinafter described, to Cabin John Creek, returning thence along the same line by return tracks to the place of beginning, with the privilege of constructing a branch line, with a single or double track, from the Conduit road lands south to Chain Bridge, and a branch line north, beginning and connecting at a point on its main line about opposite said Chain Bridge; thence running northerly on land to be acquired by said corporation to the Conduit road; thence across the Conduit road at right angles and on the grade of this road; thence northerly on land to be acquired by said corporation, except across and along streets, where necessary, to a point on the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway at or near the junction of the Loughboro road with the River road. Also, beginning and connecting on Thirty-seventh street northwest at its junction with Prospect avenue; thence north along Thirty-seventh street 120 feet; thence easterly on land to be acquired by said corporation 240 feet; thence southerly on land to be acquired by said corporation 120 feet to Prospect avenue and to connect with its present tracks: Provided, That there shall be but one railway parallel to and near the Conduit road; and wherever the route specified in this act is parallel with or coincides with the route of any other railway the two companies shall maintain and use but one set of double tracks, and any violation of this provision by the said Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway Company shall operate as a repeal of this charter; and matters of dispute between the companies respecting railways parallel to the Conduit road, and affecting the same, in the District of Columbia shall be referred to and determined by the Secretary of War; and matters in dispute between the companies respecting railways on the Canal road shall be determined upon the application of either road to any court in the District of Columbia having competent jurisdiction. The inner rail of said Washington and Great Falls Railway shall not, at any place on the line of said railway, be less than 100 feet from the middle of the paved portion of the Conduit road, except in the county of Montgomery, in the State of Maryland, in which county said inner rail shall not be less than 50 feet from the middle of the paved portion of the Conduit road; and the said railroad may cross, under such conditions as the Secretary of War may impose, the lands of the United States at Chautauqua, between Washington Aqueduct boundary stone No. 31 and a planted stone south 36° 43' west, and distant 206.5 feet from Washington Aqueduct boundary stone No. 67, at which place the inner rail of the tracks shall be not less than 65 feet from the middle of the paved portion of the Conduit road: Provided, however, That said Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway Company, being authorized thereto by a vote of the majority of its stockholders of record, may contract with any street railway company in the State of Maryland or the District of Columbia, owning or operating a connecting or intersecting line for the joint management, lease, or purchase of such line or lines, and operate the same in connection and as an extension with its present line, and in case of such contract may provide the means necessary by an increase of its capital stock not to exceed the actual consideration paid or the actual cost of the necessary construction, completion, equipment, and maintenance thereof. And for the purpose aforesaid said company is hereby authorized and empowered to issue its bonds to aid in paying for such construction, completion, motive power, equipment, and maintenance aforesaid, and to secure the said bonds by mortgage or deed of trust of its right of way and all its property and franchise of whatsoever kind, whether real, personal, or mixed, on the whole of said line, its extensions, and branches, and connections, the stock and bonds authorized to be issued and negotiated by said company, to the amount of $650,000, under the decree of the supreme court of the District of Columbia being hereby confirmed. Wherever the said railway shall run over or across any of the lands of the United States or any of the accessory works of the Washington Aqueduct, as provided in this act, it shall be done only on such lines, in such manner, and on such conditions as shall be approved by the Secretary of War and accepted by said company, and no work shall be done on said railway on any of said lands until after such approval and acceptance in writing. No steam cars, locomotives, or passenger or other cars for steam railways shall ever be run over the tracks of said railway within the District of Columbia or on said lands. Said company shall, before commencing work on said railway, deposit with the Treasurer of the United States to the credit of the Washington Aqueduct the sum of $5,000, or such other sum as the Secretary of War may deem proper, to defray all the expenses that may be incurred by the United States in connection with the inspection of the company's work on the lands of the United States and any of the company's work that may affect the interests of the United States, and in making good any damages done by said company or its works to any work or land or other property of the United States, and in completing, as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, any of the company's work that the said company may neglect or refuse to complete and that the Secretary of War may consider necessary for the safety of the Washington Aqueduct and the works pertaining thereto, including its telephone line, or for the proper drainage of the United States lands, its reservoirs, and other works, or for the proper use and orderly appearance of the Conduit road; and the said company and its successors shall also deposit as aforesaid such further sums for said purposes and at such times as the Secretary of War shall direct. The said moneys shall be disbursed like other moneys appropriated for the Washington Aqueduct, and whatever shall remain of said deposits after the completion of the work for which they may be obtained shall be returned to said company with an account of their disbursement in detail. The disbursements of said deposits shall, except in case of emergency, be made only on the order of the Secretary of War. During the construction and after the completion of said railway its agents and servants, when on the public land of the United States, shall be subject to such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe. The provisions of this act, as far as applicable, shall apply to any extension of this railway in the State of Maryland that may be granted by said State; and the provisions of section 15 of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1891, entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Arlington Railway Company, of the District of Columbia," shall control and govern all the privileges granted by this act to the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway Company and said section shall be held to include the Washington Aqueduct and its tunnels and all other works connected therewith. Said Washington and Great Falls Railway shall everywhere be constructed in a neat and substantial manner, of good material, subject, for such parts of the line as are within the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to the supervision and approval of said Commissioners, and, for such parts of the line as are in any jurisdiction outside of the District of Columbia, to the supervision and approval of the proper authorities of such jurisdiction; the gauge of the track to be the same as that of the Washington and Georgetown Railway; and the said Washington and Great Falls Railway Company shall, where its tracks run on or across any street or road which is under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or across the Conduit road or any road outside of the District of Columbia, pave the same between the rails and sets of rails and 2 feet outside thereof, with such material and in such manner as shall be approved by such proper authorities, as the case may require, and shall keep the same in repair at its own expense; and if the said corporation shall fail to make any necessary repairs within ten days after notice has been given by said authorities the repairs shall be made by said authorities and the cost thereof, except as hereinbefore provided, if not paid voluntarily, shall be recovered by them before any court of competent jurisdiction; and the amount of such repairs shall be a lien upon all property of said company from the time the same are made until paid by the company; that the said corporation shall operate its said road by electric power, and for this purpose it is hereby authorized to erect and maintain such poles and aerial lines as may be necessary for the proper conduct of said power; such lines to be built in the most perfect and substantial manner: Provided, That in order to prevent any danger or damage to the United States telephone line between the Great Falls of the Potomac and Washington, belonging to the Washington Aqueduct, or to its instruments, from the electric wires of said railway company, the said company shall, at all times and at its own expense remove, change, and protect said telephone line in such manner as may be directed by the Secretary of War. The said corporation shall erect and maintain, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, at its own expense, a neat, well-painted, and substantial fence, 4 feet in height, on each side of its tracks, through the lands of the United States, and also at such places along the Conduit road as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, with suitable cattle guards, openings, and crossings for roadways, and at such places as the Secretary of War shall consider to be required for the safety of the use of said roadways.

"That the said corporation shall, at its own expense, maintain electric lights during the hours after nightfall that its cars shall run, and at least until 12 o'clock a. m., which lights shall be located so as to light all roads on and across which the railway shall pass and such other points along the proposed route as the Secretary of War shall direct. No claim for damages shall ever be made by said company or its successors in consequence of the exercise of any of the rights of the United States under this act. The crossings over the Conduit road shall be made to conform to all changes of grade of this road. The construction of said railway on any street where there are or may be any mains, fixtures, or apparatus pertaining to the Washington Aqueduct shall be subject to such conditions as may be approved by the Secretary of War, which conditions must be obtained and be accepted in writing by said company before commencing any work on such street; and the operations of said company in respect of the safety of such mains, fixtures, or apparatus shall always be subject to the control and direction of the Secretary of War, and subject to the right of the Secretary of War or other lawful public authority to interrupt the construction or use of said railway, whenever necessary for the protection or repair of such mains, fixtures, or apparatus. Efficient signals, by gong or bell, shall be made by every car before and during the crossing of the Conduit road, and, if the Secretary of War shall deem necessary and shall so direct, every car shall, before crossing this road, be brought to a full stop. The rate of speed at which the cars may run on said road shall not exceed 5 miles per hour on or across any street or road, and the fare for riding over the said road shall not exceed 10 cents each way per passenger, and this amount may be divided into divisions of 5 cents each. The work of construction and the operating of said railway by said company on the lands of the United States shall be subject to such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, and the exercise of the rights by this act granted are to terminate at the pleasure of the Secretary of War in case of persistent neglect by said company or by its successors to make deposits or to comply with any of the conditions, requirements, and regulations aforesaid.

"Every car shall be brought to a full stop before crossing the Foxhall road. It shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to inspect, or to cause to be inspected, from time to time, the cars operated on said road, and to require of said company that all cars and stations shall be of the first class and shall be maintained in good condition, and that cars shall be run according to schedules which shall accommodate the public; the said Commissioners shall also have the power to make such regulations as to the rate of speed, the use of tracks, the removal of ice and snow from off the tracks as the public interests may require; failure to comply with any such requirement or regulation or failure to stop cars before crossing the Foxhall and Conduit roads shall subject the company to a fine of $50 for each such failure, which fine may be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction."

Section 2 shall be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the capital stock of said company shall be $650,000, divided into shares of $100 each, which capital stock may be increased from time to time upon a majority vote of the stockholders, but not to exceed the actual cost of right of way, construction, equipment, station houses, and other buildings necessary to the operation of said road. The said company shall require the subscribers to the capital stock to pay in cash, to the treasurer appointed by the incorporators, the amounts severally subscribed by them, as follows, to wit: Fifty per cent at the time of subscribing and the remainder at such times and in such amounts as the board of directors shall require, and no subscription shall be deemed valid unless the 50 per cent thereof shall be paid at the time of subscribing; the remainder of said subscription to be paid at such times and in such amounts as the board of directors may require, as hereinbefore provided; and if any stockholder shall refuse or neglect to pay any installments as aforesaid, as required by the board of directors, after thirty days' notice in writing, the said board of directors may sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, so many shares of his stock as will pay the installments; and the person who shall offer to take the least number of shares for the assessments due shall be taken as the highest bidder, under such general regulations as may be provided in the by-laws of the company, but no stock shall be sold for less than the total assessments due and payable; or the company may sue and collect the same from a delinquent subscriber in any court of competent jurisdiction. No certificate of stock shall be issued until the par value thereof has been fully paid up. The company may buy, lease, or construct such passenger rooms, ticket offices, depots, workshops, and buildings as may be necessary, at such points, not on the land of the United States, along the lines as the business of the railway and the convenience of the public may require, and connect its tracks therewith; all of the above subject to the approval of the proper authorities. Whenever one-fourth of the capital stock of the company so subscribed shall have been paid in, bonds may be issued, in the discretion of the board of directors, to an amount not exceeding the balance of the stock unpaid, which bonds may be secured by mortgage of its franchise and property, real and personal: Provided, That the moneys raised on said bonds shall be used and expended only for the completion and improvement of said road and the equipment thereof. But this section is subject to the provision that said corporation shall not have or issue any greater number of shares of stock than the nominal value of such shares shall equal the actual and necessary cost of the construction and equipment of such railroad: Provided, however, That an amount of stock equal to the bonds so issued shall be first canceled and adjudged annulled: And provided further, That such stock and bonds may be issued as the work progresses."

Section 3 shall be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That within thirty days after the passage of this act the corporators named in the first section, or a majority of them, or if any of them refuse or neglect to act, then the majority of the remainder, shall cause books of subscription to the capital stock of said company to be opened and kept open in some convenient place in the District of Columbia, from 10 o'clock in the forenoon until 4 o'clock in the afternoon, for a period to be fixed by the corporators, not less than two days, unless the whole stock shall be sooner subscribed; and the said corporators shall give public notice, by advertisement in one or more of the daily papers published in the city of Washington, of the time when and place where the said books shall be opened; and the subscribers upon said books to the capital stock of the said company shall be held to be stockholders: Provided, That every subscriber shall pay, at the time of subscribing, 50 per cent of the amount by him subscribed to the treasurer appointed by the corporators, or his subscription shall be void; and when the books of subscription to the capital stock of said company shall be closed, the corporators, and in case any of them refuse or neglect to act, then a majority of the remainder, shall, within twenty days thereafter, call the first meeting of the stockholders of said company to meet within ten days thereafter, for the choice of directors, of which said meeting notice shall be given in a daily newspaper published in the city of Washington and by written notice mailed to each stockholder, and each stockholder shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock standing in his name on the books of the company, which vote may be cast in person or by proxy."

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RIGHTS OF MARRIED WOMEN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1659) to amend the laws of the District of Columbia as to married women, to make parents the natural guardians of their minor children, and for other purposes.

Mr. HULICK. I ask that the reading of this bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD. In the absence of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM], I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Alabama. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the property, real and personal, which any woman in the District of Columbia may own at the time of her marriage, and the rents, issues, profits, or proceeds thereof, and real, personal, or mixed property which shall come to her by descent, devise, purchase, or bequest, or the gift of any person, shall be and remain her sole and separate property, notwithstanding her marriage, and shall not be subject to the disposal of her husband or liable for his debts, except that such property as shall come to her by gift of her husband shall be subject to, and be liable for, the debts of the husband existing at the time of the gift.

SEC. 2. That a married woman, while the marriage relation subsists, may bargain, sell, and convey her real and personal property, and enter into any contract in reference to the same in the same manner, to the same extent, and with like effect as a married man may in relation to his real and personal property, and she may, by a promise in writing, expressly make her separate estate liable for necessaries purchased by her or furnished at her request for the family.

SEC. 3. That any married woman may carry on any trade or business, occupation or profession by herself, or jointly with others, and perform any labor or services on her sole and separate account, and the earnings of any married woman from her trade, business, profession, occupation, labor, or services shall be her sole and separate property, and may be used and invested by her in her own name.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act contained shall invalidate any marriage settlement or contract.

SEC. 5. That the husband shall not be liable for the payment of the wife's antenuptial debts, but she shall be liable to all remedies for the recovery of such debts, to be enforced against her and her separate property as if she were unmarried.

SEC. 6. That the father and mother shall be the natural guardians of the person of their minor children. If either dies or is incapable of acting, the natural guardianship of the person shall devolve upon the other: Provided, however, That in case of the death of either parent from whom the said children may inherit, or take by devise or bequest, the said parent may, by deed or last will and testament, appoint a guardian of the property of the children, subject to the approval of the proper court of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. That the survivor may by last will appoint a guardian of the person and property of any of the children, whether born at the time of making the will or afterwards, to continue during the minority of the child, or for a less time, subject at all times to removal for cause and appointment of another by the proper court.

SEC. 8. That dower shall hereafter be assigned to a widow entitled to the same in the equitable as well as the legal estate of her deceased husband.

Mr. HULICK. I send to the Clerk's desk certain amendments recommended by the committee. I wish first to offer a section, to come in after section 3, and to be numbered section 4. I shall then offer another section, to be numbered section 5. Then I shall ask that section 4 in the printed bill be numbered section 6, and that the other sections of the bill following that be renumbered to correspond. Then I shall offer a new section, to be numbered section 11.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read, which is to come in after section 3, and to be numbered section 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. A married woman may contract, and sue and be sued in her own name, in all matters having relation to her sole and separate property, in the same manner as if she were unmarried; and her husband shall be joined with her when the cause of action is in favor of or against both her and her husband.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULICK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the other section, to follow the one just adopted, and to be numbered section 5.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Neither the husband nor his property shall be bound by any such contract made by a married woman not liable for any recovery against her in any such suit; but judgment may be enforced by execution against her sole and separate estate, in the same manner as if she were unmarried; but she shall be entitled to all the benefits of all exemptions to the heads of families or householders.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULICK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that section 4 in the printed bill be renumbered 6; that section 5 in the printed bill be renumbered section 7; that section 6 in the printed bill be renumbered section 8; that section 7 of the printed bill be renumbered section 9; and that section 8 be renumbered section 10. These are merely to make the numbers of the sections consecutive.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HULICK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an additional section, to be known as section 11.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That sections 727, 729, and 730 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for the District of Columbia be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULICK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REAL ESTATE OF INSANE PERSONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8672) conferring jurisdiction upon the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or any court in said District having general equity jurisdiction, to decree a sale of real estate in said District belonging to insane persons for purpose of reinvestment, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where any insane person, lunatic, idiot, or person non compos mentis is or shall be seized or possessed of or entitled to any lands, tenements, hereditaments, or real estate whatsoever, or any right, title, or interest therein, legal or equitable, in possession, reversion, or remainder, or any right of dower inchoate or consummate, or right by the curtesy, it shall and may be lawful for a justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia holding an equity court, or any court in said District having general equity jurisdiction, upon the petition of the guardian or guardians, trustee or trustees, or committee of such insane person, lunatic, idiot, or person non compos mentis, and his or her appearance by guardian, to be appointed by the said justice or court aforesaid, and upon the hearing and examination of all the circumstances, and upon its appearing to the said justice or court aforesaid, as hereinafter provided, that it will be for the interest and advantage of such insane person, lunatic, idiot, or person non compos mentis to sell such lands, tenements, hereditaments, or real estate, or any part thereof, or any right, title, or interest therein, legal or equitable, to direct the same to be sold upon such terms as the said justice or court may direct, with full power and jurisdiction to control, govern, and direct the application of the money and proceeds arising from such sale or sales, and the interest thereof and the investment and reinvestment thereof as in the judgment of the said justice or court may seem proper in such funds, securities, loans, real estate, or the improvement thereof or in the improvement of other real estate belonging to said insane person, lunatic, idiot, or person non compos mentis by the erection and construction thereon of buildings and other improvements.

SEC. 2. That all sales made by the authority of the said justice or court under this act shall be reported to and confirmed by the said justice or court before any conveyance of the property shall be made. A lien shall be retained upon any real estate so sold to secure the unpaid purchase money, and bond with good and sufficient security, to be approved by the said justice or court, shall be given by the person or persons empowered to sell the property as aforesaid to the United States of America for the due execution of the trust committed to him or them, which bond shall be lodged with the clerk of said court and be by him recorded among the records of said court, and an attested copy thereof, under the hand of said officer and under the seal of his court, shall be evidence in all courts in this District. And upon any breach of the condition of said bond an action may be maintained in the name of the United States of America by and for the use of any person or persons interested, either upon the original bond or upon a duly certified copy thereof, and judgment may be recovered upon such action for the damage actually sustained.

SEC. 3. That the money and proceeds arising from the sales of said lands, tenements, hereditaments, or real estate whatsoever, or any right, title, or interest therein, legal or equitable, and also any funds, securities, loans, promissory notes, or bonds secured by deed of trust on real estate, or real estate in which the said money and proceeds arising from said sales shall be invested by and under the direction or authority of said justice of said court, except so much thereof as may have been previously applied under the order of said court or justice for the benefit of such insane person, shall, on the death of such insane person, lunatic, idiot, or person non compos mentis, be considered real estate and shall pass accordingly to such persons as would have been entitled to the estate if it had not been sold.

SEC. 4. That the said justice or court may order any real or leasehold property of such insane person, lunatic, idiot, or person non compos mentis to be leased for any term of years, or may order the surrender of any lease of the estate or property of such person to be accepted and the same to be demised anew on such terms as the justice or court may direct.

SEC. 5. That in all applications to sell the real or personal property of such insane person, or to demise the real or leasehold property of such person, or to accept the surrender of a lease thereof, the said justice or court shall, before passing a decree, have the appearance and answer of such person, as provided in section 1, and have proof taken as in other chancery cases as to the expediency of sale, quantity, value, and condition of the property; and after considering all the evidence and circumstances, if the said justice or court shall deem it for the interest and advantage of such insane person, said justice or court may decree a sale, lease, or surrender of the whole or part of such property on such terms and conditions as the said justice or court may prescribe; but a decree for a sale for the payments of debts may be passed by said justice or court without being satisfied that such sale is for the interest and advantage of such insane person.

SEC. 6. That no sale, lease, or surrender of a lease of the property, real or personal, of such insane person shall be valid unless the same shall be reported to and confirmed by said justice or said court.

SEC. 7. That it shall and may be lawful for the said justice or the court aforesaid to allow any trustee who shall make a sale of any real estate by virtue of this act such commission as is usually allowed upon sales made under authority of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHANNON (during the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SHANNON. I rise for the purpose of saying that the bill is quite lengthy, and that there is no intention on the part of the committee to amend it except in a few immaterial points. I therefore ask that further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Clerk will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I should like an explanation of this bill.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, those gentlemen who have taken the pains to examine the report which accompanies this bill will have noted the statement that this legislation has become necessary by reason of a late decision of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in the case of Allen C. Clark, appellant, vs. Arthur Mathewson, committee, etc., filed January 6, 1896. That decision is to the effect that in the District of Columbia a court of equity has no jurisdiction to decree the sale of the real estate of a lunatic merely for the purpose of better investment. Authority has already been given by legislation for the sale of the real estate of an infant for that purpose; but legislation on this point is wanting in the case of insane persons. I will not detain the House by any extended reference to the decision, but will simply read the closing paragraph. The court says:

Finding no warrant for the exercise of the jurisdiction in the decree of sale under which the proceeding arose, whether under the statutes or independently thereof, we must reverse the decree appealed from, with cost to the appellant, and remand the case to the court from whence it came, with direction to dismiss the bill, unless it may be amended so as to show a necessity for sale for support and maintenance. And it is so ordered.

Decree reversed and cause remanded.

This decision of the court of appeals makes necessary the passage of some such legislation as is embodied in this bill.

I now invite the attention of the House to the terms of the bill itself. The first section of the bill provides for the filing of a petition by the committee of the insane person, requires proof of expediency of sale, and provides that the court shall have entire control of the investment of the proceeds. Section 2 requires that all sales must be reported to and confirmed by the court; that the trustee shall give a bond to the United States, and the same be recorded. Section 3 regulates the investment of the proceeds and provides that on death of the insane person his estate shall descend as land. Section 4 confers the additional power to lease estates and surrender the same. Section 5 prescribes the procedure and the evidence required in all cases under the bill. Section 6 requires that the lease, to be valid, must be reported to and confirmed by the court, and section 7 merely treats of the commission to which the trustee will be entitled for his services. The whole procedure, as outlined in the bill, follows very much that adopted by the courts in regulating the sale and disposal of the property of infants. I now send to the Clerk's desk three amendments, which are not of material importance, and only designed to correct the phraseology of the bill. I do this in the name of the committee.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York what is the existing chancery power found in the bill?

Mr. SHANNON. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I was unable to hear him.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. There are certain powers now vested in the court of equity to decree the sale of property in the District.

Mr. SHANNON. The decision in the case to which I have referred sets forth very clearly the condition of the law in the District of Columbia in regard to this matter. While the powers now lodged in courts of equity here are sufficient to authorize the sale of the property of infants for the purpose of better investment, that is not the case with reference to the property of insane persons. Hence the necessity for some legislation like that embodied in the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman what necessity there is for section 4 of this bill? The bill, as I understand, gives power to sell. Why do you extend it to power to lease?

Mr. SHANNON. The inquiry of my colleague is covered by the amendment already proposed by the committee and which I now send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let the amendments be reported.

Mr. SHANNON. I ask that the amendments be read.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Amend the caption of the bill so that it will read: "A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the supreme court of the District of Columbia, having general equity jurisdiction to decree the sale, lease, or surrender of any lease of real estate in said District belonging to insane persons for the purpose of reinvestment, and for other purposes."

Page 2, line 22, strike out the word "direct" and substitute the word "order."

Page 2, line 23, strike out the word "direct" and substitute "determine."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I desire to offer an amendment striking out section 7, and to state my reasons. Section 7, it seems to me, is objectionable, because it provides for an allowance of commission on sales, and the provision is vague and indefinite. It says that "such commission shall be allowed as is usual." That might be a commission of 5 per cent, or it might be a commission of 7 per cent, or it might be a commission of 10 per cent. Now, the proper commission would be about one-half of 1 per cent, and it seems to me it would be very unwise and improper to pass this seventh section in its present vague form. The courts, as a rule, would allow probably 5 per cent, which I think would be excessive. Suppose the estate was worth $100,000, it is manifest that a commission of one-half of 1 per cent for a sale would be adequate to compensate the committee or the trustee, but this section leaves it open to the court to allow $5,000 or $10,000 for such sale. I will ask the gentleman to accept an amendment limiting these commissions to one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. SHANNON. I will say, in reply to my colleague from New York, that this section states distinctly that the commission allowed shall be such as is "usually allowed upon sales made under the authority of the court." I frankly admit that I do not know just what these commissions are, but whatever they are they are the commissions that would be usually allowed by the court in such cases, and that, it seems to me, is sufficiently definite.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if he thinks it proper for us to legislate in the dark? Why did not the committee reporting the bill ascertain what are the usual commissions? We should limit the commission to be allowed in these cases. I suggest that the gentleman accept an amendment providing that such commissions shall not exceed 1 per cent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will state to my friend from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] that the section he proposes to amend refers only to the commission to be allowed in cases covered by this bill, cases of the estates of lunatics. The general law provides what these commissions shall be, and this bill simply provides that the court shall take jurisdiction of the matter and fix the commission in each case in accordance with the general law. Now, if you change the commission in these cases, fixing a rate which shall be applicable only to cases arising under this bill, the result will be that you will have a different rate of commission paid in this District for handling the estate of lunatics from that which is paid for handling the estate of other persons under legal disability, such as infants and married women. Therefore it occurred to the committee that this was a matter which might well be left entirely to the discretion of the court. There is no difficulty about it. The court is not going to allow an excessive commission to the trustee or the guardian or the person who executes the trust. It is perfectly safe, in my opinion, to leave this matter to the discretion of the court.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my amendment and offer another. I move to insert after the words "such commission" the words "not exceeding 1 per cent."

The amendment was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering revenue bills.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I understand that my colleague on the committee makes this motion as a privileged motion by direction of the Ways and Means Committee. If my understanding is correct, it is not in order to raise the question of consideration, and the only way the House can express itself on the subject of the consideration of this question at this time is by a vote on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. By vote on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole. If the House does not resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the question does not come up for consideration.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. EVANS, the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KNOX. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 32.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York and Mr. KNOX. No quorum.

Mr. STEELE called for the yeas and nays, but immediately withdrew the call.

The Speaker proceeded to count the members present.

Mr. DINGLEY (pending the count). Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EVANS. Will the Chair please state the question.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of revenue bills.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. After the point of no quorum has been made, no announcement having been made by the Chair, is this the proper procedure?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the yeas and nays may be called, because that is one method of determining the presence of a quorum. The Clerk will call.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 55, not voting 173; as follows:

ALCOHOL IN THE ARTS.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering revenue bills.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I call up for present consideration a bill (H. R. 3282) to repeal section 61 of an act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which became a law August 25, 1894, and move to proceed with its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 61 of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 25, 1894, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to repeal section 61 of an act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which became a law August 28, 1894."

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, with reference to this measure——

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Before the gentleman from Kentucky proceeds, I would like to inquire of my colleague as to his disposition regarding the length of time that he proposes to occupy in general debate. I make the inquiry now because a number of gentlemen have expressed a desire to occupy some considerable time in the debate, and I would like to know, if possible, whether some arrangement could be made, and also with reference to the disposition of the time that will be allowed for debate. If agreeable to my colleague, I would like to have an expression of opinion on his part in regard to the matter.

Mr. EVANS. In answer to the question of my colleague, I will say frankly that so far as I am personally concerned, I am willing and should be glad to have the most liberal allowance of time that the business of the House and the wishes of the committee, considering the approach of the close of the session, the number of election cases, conference reports, and so on, pending, and other matters of business pressing before the House for consideration—I say I am willing that the time for debate shall be as liberal as the condition of business will allow. But that, of course, I can not control, nor can my colleague, for that matter. That is something for the House itself to determine. My personal preference would be to allow the utmost liberality to members to express their views on this most important subject.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Is it the desire of my friend from Kentucky to allow the general debate to run this evening?

Mr. EVANS. I have no objection personally——

Mr. HOPKINS. You had better get a vote to-day.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to interfere, but let me suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that there are three or four appropriation bills, each of which will occupy something of the time of the House; then there are several election cases——

Mr. DALZELL. Four of them.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). Four election cases, I understand, awaiting disposition, and other matters pressing for consideration. As I understand it, this is merely a question of the repeal of what is known as the free-alcohol provision in the Wilson-Gorman bill?

Mr. EVANS. That is the whole proposition.

Mr. CANNON. I have not the honor to be a member of the Ways and Means Committee, but it does seem to me that at this stage of the session this bill ought to be disposed of this afternoon. I speak, of course, only for myself as an individual.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, to the House that for one I disagree entirely with the gentleman from Illinois who has just taken his seat. Even if this is only a matter of whether we are to have free alcohol or not, it is too important a proposition to be disposed of this afternoon. It opens up the question of an entire revision of the tariff, and it seems to me that the poor people of the West, if you are going to engage in that operation, ought to have some consideration. You ought not to take up one particular industry, but you ought to give an opportunity to the other industries also to be heard. If you are going to take up one particular clause of the bill, you ought to take up the entire bill and subject it to the revision that it requires.

Mr. DINGLEY. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will proceed, because the time that is taken up in this matter might well be occupied in the discussion.

Mr. EVANS. I will proceed, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARRETT. Do we understand the gentleman from Kentucky refuses to make any arrangement as to the time for debate?

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman understands nothing of the kind.

The CHAIRMAN. No arrangement has been made.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, I would like to ask one question. This being an internal-revenue bill——

Mr. EVANS. Entirely.

Mr. CANNON. I would ask if it is in order, in any degree, upon this bill to legislate respecting the customs revenues?

Mr. EVANS. My own individual opinion would induce me to answer the gentleman's question quite positively in the negative.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question.

Mr. EVANS. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Is it not a part of the general tariff law that you propose to repeal?

Mr. EVANS. I will say, as I intended to say in my remarks, that this is simply an internal-revenue excrescence on the Wilson tariff bill; that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky give way for a moment to receive a message from the Senate?

Mr. EVANS. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, we are now in the House. I move that the House do now adjourn, before you give the gavel up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee will resume its session.

The committee accordingly resumed its session, with Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

TAX ON ALCOHOL.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I was about to say it is quite immaterial to me usually whether what I have to submit to the House receives much attention or not; but upon this occasion I feel that it is so important to the interests of the revenue, the interests of the country, that I ask order and I beg attention while I submit the reasons upon which the Ways and Means Committee of the House, with entire unanimity, except one member, have recommended the repeal of section 61 of the Wilson bill.

Soon after this session began the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE] introduced into the House a bill for the repeal of section 61, and the Ways and Means Committee were called upon to investigate the question involved in the bill which he submitted. We have done so with great industry. We have done so at great length, and the result of that investigation has been the report that we have submitted to this House, and the earnest recommendation that we have made for the repeal of section 61.

Section 61, which it is proposed by this bill to repeal, is in the following language:

> Any manufacturer finding it necessary to use alcohol in the arts, or in any medicinal or other like compound, may use the same under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and on satisfying the collector of internal revenue for the district wherein he resides or carries on business that he has complied with such regulations and has used such alcohol therein, and exhibiting and delivering up the stamps which show that a tax has been paid thereon, shall be entitled to receive from the Treasury of the United States a rebate or repayment of the tax so paid. (28 Stat. L., 567.)

The practical operation of this provision, as I think you will see, is that it allows anybody calling himself a "manufacturer" to get alcohol, pay the market price for it, use it in what he calls the arts, or in medicinal or other like compounds, sell it at a full price including the tax, and after that has been done come to the Treasury and get a dollar and ten cents a gallon by way of a gift from the Treasury for every gallon of alcohol he has used. I shall endeavor to show to the members of the committee precisely how that act operates to a result such as I have described.

All of us who are in the least degree acquainted with the internal-revenue service of the country know that what are called distilled spirits under the internal-revenue laws embrace what we call whisky, what we call high wines, and what we call alcohol. Whenever any distilled spirits are made the law requires them to be put in a bonded warehouse, and they are not permitted to be removed therefrom until the tax of a dollar and ten cents per proof gallon has been paid to the Government, and just as soon as that is done, at that moment those distilled spirits must be removed from the warehouse.

Unquestionably the idea of taxing spirits for the purpose of raising revenue for the Government was founded in most manifest common sense and propriety. There are no subjects which to me seem better suited for the purpose of taxation than distilled spirits; but unquestionably the original idea of taxing them did not embrace the idea of taxing such as were used in the useful arts or in manufactures. Consequently I shall not attempt to discuss the general merits of an effort to pass a law giving free alcohol in the useful arts, but shall discuss before you the demerits of this section, the demerits of the manner by which that object was sought to be obtained through section 61, which was unfortunately slipped into the Wilson bill, in another place than this, and could not be stricken out, because Mr. Cleveland's letter so paralyzed all parties interested in passing the new tariff bill that a conference never took place for the purpose of taking these excrescences off.

There are several things to be considered; but I should like, gentlemen, in the investigation into the merits of this measure, to consider, preliminarily, one thing, and that is, the interests of the Government of the United States. It may startle you to know that the investigation made by the Ways and Means Committee demonstrates the fact to be that under the operation of section 61 of the Wilson bill the Government stands to lose $25,000 or $30,000 a day, not for the purpose of aiding manufacturers and the people generally, but as mere gifts and bounties to individuals who may call themselves manufacturers. The Government, I say, stands to lose not less than $25,000 or $30,000 a day in pure gifts, and this matter has been going on since August 28, 1894. Hence claims amounting to perhaps ten million or fifteen million dollars have arisen, and therefore we find, in opposition to this bill, a strong lobby—the only one I have encountered in my short experience here—urgent against the measure now before you.

This bill does not propose in any wise to affect the claims which have arisen under the law while in operation. It does not propose to take away from claimants their right to collect those claims, if they are just and fairly due by the Government. It does not propose to take away from the courts the ordinary right to adjudicate these questions between the Government and the claimant. We must look, therefore, I say, primarily to the interests of the Government which we come here to serve. Somebody must take care of the interests of the United States in these matters, and the Ways and Means Committee, in their endeavor to investigate this question, have felt the stress of that obligation in the midst of the clamor of those who were asking that the Government should not stop the doling out of these enormous gifts to those who call themselves manufacturers.

This has been done, too, by the majority of that committee without the slightest fear that they were doing anything in conflict with the doctrine of protection to home industries.

They are as strong protectionists as are in the House, and were appointed on that committee probably because they were such.

They knew that that doctrine had nothing to do with this question, and were not to be deceived by the pretense that it did.

The section of the bill which I have read gives a bounty to the manufacturers who deem it necessary to use alcohol in the arts or in medicinal compounds. Before I go any further let me say that of the whole medicinal interests, so far as numbers are concerned, 95 per cent of them have asked for the repeal of this bill. Take the vast retail drug trade in the country, and 95 per cent of them have asked that this bill be repealed, because of reasons I shall give further along in the progress of my statement.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. EVANS. I believe I prefer to wait until closing what I have to say. Then I will answer any questions in my power in respect to the bill.

Alcohol, as we all understand, is the highest form of pure spirits. It is useful in the manufacture of many articles, but I call the attention of the House to one most significant fact, namely, that a man who manufactures alcohol is perfectly willing to accept 2 cents a gallon as his whole net profit thereon. The man who proposes to use alcohol under the operation of this bill must not only have his profit on what he invests in it, but another profit of $1.10 per gallon on the alcohol used, the full amount of tax paid on it, thus adding what the Government gives to what he gets for his goods. An investigation of this question shows this to be the fact, that the man who uses alcohol in the manufacture or production of any article does not charge one cent less to his customers than he did before section 61 went into effect.

Right there comes an important suggestion in connection with this matter. The owner can not get the spirit out of bond until the tax is paid. He pays the tax and charges his customer the full amount of that tax, $1.10 a gallon, and probably a profit upon that, and after he has spread his product over the country and collected the cost of its manufacture, including the cost of the alcohol, after having received from his customer the full value of his goods, including the $1.10 tax which he paid on the alcohol, which is a part of the cost of the goods, he comes to the Government of the United States and says, "I want the $1.10 paid to me again by you."

The House can see that his purpose in trying to get free alcohol in this way is not to benefit the consuming public. Far from it. The retailer gets no part of the benefit of it; the man who buys the goods made with the free alcohol does not get any abatement in the price. The manufacturer collected the whole price from the man to whom he sold the goods, including the cost of the alcohol and the amount of the tax; and then, if section 61 is operative, he gets $1.10 per gallon again. These gentlemen are very clamorous, and not unnaturally. They desire that this bounty shall be continued to them at the expense of the Government.

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, there is no such merit in the use of alcohol in the arts or in medicinal compounds as that the Government of the United States should pay a premium of $1.10 a gallon to everybody who undertakes to use it; and I want again to contrast what they expect in the way of profit, that is, those who use alcohol in the manufactures or arts, and the profit of the man who manufactures the alcohol himself. One is content, as I said a while ago, with 2 cents a gallon profit for making it, while the other wants $1.10 a gallon profit for using it.

It is said that alcohol thus used is part of the raw material, and that we ought to cheapen raw material. Let us look at that a moment. The object of cheapening raw material is not exclusively for the benefit of the manufacturer, but that doctrine is meant to operate for the benefit of the consumer as well. If you give the manufacturer cheap raw material, it is to cheapen the manufactured product. But here is the peculiar feature of this thing: The manufacturer has collected from the consumer the $1.10 a gallon which he has paid. With that in his pocket, he comes also to the United States Treasury, under section 61, and wants it again; and you see it follows incontrovertibly that when he gets the other $1.10 per gallon it is that much of a gift or bounty, pure and simple, made to him by the Government because he used alcohol in the arts or in the manufacture of medicinal compounds.

Surely this is a most remarkable result, but not quite so remarkable as the fact that we find advocates for the continuance of so wanton a waste of public money under the guise of protection to home industries. And it is largely or almost entirely because the retail druggist does not get the benefit of a single cent of this rebate, because the articles come to him precisely as high as if this rebate was not allowed; that the retail druggists of the country are in favor of the repeal of section 61, saying that it is a bounty given to a few, regardless of the interests of the Government, and that the mass of the purchasing and consuming public got no sort of benefit from this so-called free alcohol.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I need to consume much of the time of the committee on this subject; especially do I believe that I need not consume much of the time of those members who understand anything about the operations of the internal-revenue system. I do desire, however, to read to the committee a somewhat instructive circular letter which has come into my possession, and which illustrates to some extent the powerful influences that are operating in behalf of those who insist that this spigot shall remain open. A firm of attorneys in the city of Washington, writing over the name of Harvey Spaulding & Son, have issued a circular letter which illustrates the whole subject, and I will read an extract from it to the committee:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 21, 1896.

GENTLEMEN: The Committee on Ways and Means in the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance in the Senate have both reported bills for the repeal of section 61 of the act of Congress of August 28, 1894, providing for a rebate of the tax on alcohol to manufacturers, and there is every probability that the repeal bill will become a law within three weeks or a month. It will therefore be advisable to make as much use of alcohol in manufacturing as possible during the coming month, with a view of taking advantage of the law to the utmost as long as it lasts.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there is the milk in the cocoanut. This is a circular letter addressed generally, urging all persons interested to come up and avail themselves of this good thing as long it lasts. The records of the Internal Revenue Bureau show that millions of dollars of these claims are being brought forward by persons who have used alcohol in manufacturing processes and who have collected the whole cost of it from their customers, and are now seeking, as a matter of pure profit from the Government, to get that $1.10 per gallon again. Of course they are perfectly right from their point of view. I am not impeaching the honesty of their motives in doing this. It is natural that they should be anxious to have this law remain on the statute book, and these attorneys, who probably hope to get some of the claims for collection, are urging the "boys" to avail themselves of the advantage of the law as long as it lasts. In this circular they are told that Congress intends to abolish the law and stop this leak, and are urged to come up and avail themselves of it as rapidly as possible while it lasts. There is one district in the city of New York where there are claims to the amount of a million dollars already made under section 61 of the statute, and it is natural that these people should be clamorous that it shall not be repealed. The possibilities under it are too great and too alluring for that to be allowed without a contest.

Mr. HILL. How much did I understand the gentleman to say the claims filed amount to?

Mr. EVANS. I do not know that the claims which have been filed amount to so large a sum as I have named, but the information which comes to us is perfectly clear and specific that claims of this character are outstanding to an enormous amount, which are only awaiting the decision of the test case which is pending in the Court of Claims.

Mr. HILL. May I ask the gentleman, in all courtesy, where the information comes from that he is now giving to the committee?

Mr. EVANS. It comes, as I have said, from the developments in the course of the investigation that we have made. We do not shut our eyes to the facts.

Mr. HILL. I am asking the gentleman for the particular sources of the information.

Mr. EVANS. Well, the gentleman can propound his question, but he can not by any means dictate my answer, which is as I have stated it.

Mr. HILL. I do not wish to dictate your answer. You stated, if I understood you correctly, that something like $30,000 a day of these claims were filed.

Mr. EVANS. I stated nothing of the kind, and the gentleman could not have been paying very much attention to what I said if he so understood me. What I did say (and the notes of the Official Reporter will doubtless show it) was that so long as this law remained on our statute book the Government stood to lose from twenty-five to thirty thousand dollars a day in the way of claims under this provision.

Mr. HILL. Have the committee any accurate information as to the amount of these claims which have actually been filed?

Mr. EVANS. We have the estimate of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that these claims will amount to $10,000,000 annually.

Mr. HILL. That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. EVANS. I do not care whether it is or not in the gentleman's view. It is a fact as I have stated it.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman pardon me if I make a single statement?

Mr. EVANS. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky decline to yield?

Mr. EVANS. I decline to yield, because I know what I am talking about, and my time is limited. I say that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue estimates that the claims under this law will amount to perhaps $10,000,000 a year. Take Hostetter & Co., who have a claim of perhaps a quarter million of dollars that they have not yet filed, and there are many others. It was stated in the hearings in our committee room that there were vast numbers of these claims not filed because a test case was pending in the Court of Claims, and it was not regarded as necessary to file them until that case was decided. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue states, in a letter from which I shall read an extract, that in one district in New York claims of this nature to the amount of about $1,000,000 have originated and probably have been presented. To illustrate—what I may as well do now as at any time—the extreme expansibility, so to speak, of this section 61, I will read what the Commissioner has stated to the committee as to the amount and character of these claims. In the report which the committee had the honor to submit to this House will be found the letter of the Commissioner, in which he says:

An investigation of claims presented in one of the collection districts of New York for rebate on alcohol claimed to be used under section 61 of act of August 28, 1894, shows that the same will amount in this district alone to about $1,000,000 annually. From information obtained in this district it is believed these claims will be largely increased in number and amount when it is generally known that the rebate will be paid.

I should like the attention of the House for a moment in order to show just what sort of a law this is. You must remember it says that—

Any manufacturer—

Now, think of the height, the breadth, the thickness of a word like that—

Any manufacturer finding it necessary—

Now, think of that word "necessary." Anybody may call himself a "manufacturer" and anybody may find it "necessary"—extremely appropriate—to use alcohol, if he can get $1.10 a gallon for using it.

Any manufacturer finding it necessary to use alcohol in the arts—

Apply yourselves for a moment to think of that word "arts." What is not an art in the language of one who can get $1.10 a gallon for alcohol to stimulate his ingenuity to find out what an "art" is?—

or in any medicinal or other like compound.

Observe the expansibility of this language, and then see what the Commissioner of Internal Revenue says in the letter, which I shall continue to read:

These claims cover a vast number of articles, such as tinctures, medical compounds, flavoring extracts, essences, patent medicines, bay rum, bay salt, Florida water, medicine extracts, pepto mangan, homeopathic medicines, root beer, witch-hazel, medicinal and other like compounds, fruit extracts, nutrolactics, pharmaceutical preparations, barbers' supplies, tobacco, smoking tobacco, celluloid and fancy goods, hair tonics, bovinine extract, varnish, bitters of various kinds, essential oils, essence of pepsin, medicinal saumetto, tricopherous perfumery, Jamaica ginger, ethers, oils, wine and liquor flavors, toilet waters, confectioneries, blackberry brandy, cherry brandy, household panaces, soothing sirup, Radway's Ready Relief, sarsaparilla, Venetian liniment, etc.

Note carefully what are to be the consequences as soon as it becomes known that these rebates will be paid, if the bill now before the House should fail to pass and section 61 should continue in operation. If in the dry tree these people have found out all these various ways of using alcohol, what may we expect in the green? There is no telling the enormous expansion that will be the result of the industry of our people when they find that they can get not simply 2 cents a gallon as manufacturers of alcohol, but $1.10 a gallon profit for each gallon that may be put into the manufacture of anything, even hair tonic, or any other useful article like that. The expansion of water just as it goes into steam will be as nothing to it.

Why, Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that the slightest attention given to this matter by anyone who proposes to guard the interest of the Treasury and the Government must convince him, as it should every legislator acting here under the responsibility of a sense of duty, that we ought at once to vote for the repeal of this most obnoxious measure.

I am not here to say that there ought not to be a plan devised by which persons may get free alcohol for employment in the useful arts; and I am authorized to say in this connection on behalf of the Ways and Means Committee, whose organ I am, and in what I say I speak only in that capacity, I am authorized to say that they will propose a second section (which I will read now for information) which we have supposed would meet the views of most of the gentlemen who have heretofore engaged in the discussion of this matter with us, so that when we get this particular section repealed, the only one that we are seeking now to repeal, as it contains this Pandora's box, the one that gives this evil tinge to this whole matter—when we get this section repealed, this second section which we propose to offer will provide a method by which we can investigate deliberately and intelligently the whole question, and if there be a way of providing for the use of free alcohol in a manner safe for the interests of the Government, the committee which this second section proposes to raise can find that out. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I am authorized on behalf of the Committee on Ways and Means to propose.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That a joint select committee is hereby authorized, to consist of three Senators, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate, and three members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, which select committee shall consider all questions relating to the use of alcohol in the manufactures and arts, free of tax, and to report their conclusions to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1896.

Said joint select committee is authorized to sit by subcommittee or otherwise during the recess or session of Congress at such times and places as they deem advisable; to summon witnesses, administer oaths, print testimony or other information, and to employ such stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary, one-half of the expense to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to ask the gentleman one question. Is it intended by the amendment just read to exclude from the consideration of the commission that is to be appointed alcohol used in medicinal and like arts?

Mr. EVANS. The amendment speaks very plainly for itself.

Mr. KNOX. It simply says "in the manufactures and arts."

Mr EVANS. I was just about to enter on that part of the discussion, and to explain the operation of that amendment.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Allow me to ask this question: If this bill should become a law, in what position will it leave those persons who are already entitled under the existing law to rebates?

Mr. EVANS. I think the gentleman is too good a lawyer for it to be necessary that I should say to him what I will say to the House, that, in my opinion and in the opinion of the committee, there will be no difficulty whatever about those claims which have accrued. They would not be in any way impaired or affected by this repealing act.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. No provision is made for them in this bill.

Mr. EVANS. None.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. And does that mean that they will not be provided for, because up to this time they have not been provided for?

Mr. EVANS. Oh, well, that will be for the Government to answer. If these parties get a judgment, of course it can be appropriated for. We will answer that, however, when the time comes. It is not a pertinent question to the issue now.

Mr. Chairman, it must be understood, further, that the appetite for this dollar and ten cents will be almost unappeasable unless you repeal this provision of the law. And to keep that appetite down and to keep the revenues of the Government from being most grossly defrauded and imposed upon unless this section is repealed, you must have scattered broadcast throughout the country officers and agents of internal revenue, men in every district and every locality throughout the land, to protect the Government against frauds under the operation of this particular section of the law.

Let me say to the committee that the Commissioner estimates, and it is the estimate of our committee, too, that, in addition to the bounties that you give to these people as a premium, it will cost no less than from one million to one million two hundred thousand dollars a year in salaries and expenses in order to protect the Government against these frauds. It is thought by the Commissioner that this is not too high an estimate of what the Government will be annually required to pay in order to prevent the payment of fraudulent claims which would otherwise be presented.

Now, everybody on the Committee on Ways and Means—I believe I can say even my learned and able friend from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL]—will agree with me, and everybody who has investigated the question has come to the same conclusion, that there was no possibility of making a law in such form as that medicinal compounds could be included in the benefits thereof, because the facilities for fraud are too enormous and too certain in connection with that branch of the subject. The possibilities of fraud are so apparent in that connection that even the fool need not err therein. Anybody who chose to do so could swindle the Government under the guise of making medicinal compounds. And nobody in the committee, as I remember, supposed that the law ought not to be repealed so far as medicines and medicinal compounds were concerned.

But, Mr. Chairman, the great clamor with reference to this matter has come from the manufacturers themselves. It has not come from the people. The people make no demand for the retention of this section. On the contrary, let me say, infinitely the greater number of petitions that came to us have come from people asking the Government to repeal this section of the law. It is a provision that does not benefit the public, but only a few individuals. The profits of the provision, scattered out amongst the people at large, even if they derive the full benefits from it, would be so small, so infinitesimal, when divided amongst the mass of the population, it would amount to nothing. But if it is all accumulated in the hands of a few it makes an extremely respectable amount of wealth to be enjoyed at the expense of the Government. The only excuse, the only ground, upon which we can give free alcohol to anybody is not that it will benefit him individually, but that it will benefit the people at large; that it will benefit the consumer by giving a cheaper product.

There is no justification whatever in passing a law to give to a few people the benefit of a bounty, and excluding the general public from its provisions. The general public taxes alcohol at $1.10 a gallon, and they have taxed it at that rate ever since 1862. The general public is entitled to have that tax in order to pay the enormous expenses of the Government to which it is subjected by reason of the pension laws, the civil list, the Army estimates, and so on. I repeat, the general public is entitled to have that tax unless the general public, for the general good, shall see proper to relinquish it. In this case it is admitted that the general public has not derived any benefit from this particular relinquishment of the tax, and that only a few persons get it. And it is not wise legislation, in the estimation of the committee, that a few persons should be so vastly benefited at the expense of the Government and at the expense of the people.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, we must understand that one of the most important factors in raising revenue under our system, as it is at present operated, is the internal-revenue system. Last year the tax on distilled spirits produced a revenue of nearly $80,000,000. We collected that. There is but little taxation which escapes on distilled spirits under that system. We raise, I repeat, eighty millions per annum by that system. It will not do to relax the proper rigors of the internal-revenue system. It will not do to open such a door for fraud as was opened and will be kept open by the retention of section 61. And I call your attention to the fact that fortunately for the country in the framing of section 61 such inapt language was used, in my judgment and in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as to make the act impracticable and inoperative.

While that section was foisted upon that bill, as I said a while ago, as an internal-revenue excrescence upon a tariff system which was vicious enough, as exemplified by the Wilson bill, luckily it was placed upon the bill in such hot haste that the author of it, whoever he may have been, used language not sufficiently explicit and apt to make it operative; and that is the only thing that saved this country $20,000,000 up to date by way of mere gift to those that were no more entitled to it than are we, the members of this committee who are deliberating upon this question to-day. It is all a bounty, nothing else. When the Secretary of the Treasury undertook to frame regulations he found that he could not do it. He was unequal to the duty. The Commissioner, after a most elaborate effort and careful investigation of the subject, was unequal to the task, a most fortunate failure, in my judgment, for the good of the country, in this day of deficiencies of revenue, when our expenses exceed by $2,500,000 per month our income.

We are told that there is great justice in these claims. Individually I have a conviction which I intend to declare here and let it go upon record, namely, that there is not one particle of justice or merit or anything like equity in a single claim that has been presented under section 61. And why? Because in not a single instance did the man who presented that claim lower his price in consequence of the rebate. Not in one instance was the price lowered to the consumer or the general public. The proof is clear enough about that. So that to start with there is nothing but a promise to give these people something, and there never was any consideration to uphold that.

But that is only an exceedingly minor and insignificant point compared with what I am about to state. Anybody who proposed to operate upon section 61 read in the most unmistakable and significant language the following:

> Any manufacturer * * * may use the same under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and on satisfying the collector of internal revenue for the district wherein he resides or carries on business that he has complied with such regulations * * * shall be entitled to receive from the Treasury of the United States a rebate or repayment of the tax so paid.

He had no claim and knew that he had no claim until he complied with the regulations, and for that very reason, among others, he charged to his customers and consumers the whole $1.10 per gallon, and those two things, in my judgment—first, the absolute knowledge upon his part that he had no right except as it was based upon regulations which he knew did not exist, coupled with the fact that he charged the customer the whole price of this alcohol and then sought to get back the rebate as a mere gift and bounty—effectually excludes the idea of any justice, equity, or anything of that sort in these claims against the Government. So that the Government of the United States will inflict no wrong or injustice upon any claimant if it shall, in the progress of time, deny every one of these claims, through the courts or otherwise, upon the grounds that I have just indicated. The condition precedent to the allowance of these claims does not exist; has never existed. There have never been any regulations, and these claimants knew it. They knew they had no claim until regulations were made and they complied therewith, and, in my judgment, they have no claim. But, fortunately, that is for the courts to determine, and if the courts determine that these claimants have any just or equitable claim, that is all right.

My opinion is that the courts ought not to determine in that way, and I sincerely hope they will not, although I am in favor of paying every claim that the United States owes in justice and in fairness, whether we are able to pay it or not. I am in favor of paying them all, but I am not in favor of giving to anybody, as a premium or reward for using alcohol, the sum of $1.10 per gallon for all that his ingenuity may lead him to use. I do not believe in so rewarding that kind of ingenuity. There are other kinds of ingenuity that promote the public welfare, that advance the public good. We give them no such enormous and magnificent gifts as those which are proposed to be given under this section; and because there is no merit in these claims, I for one felt that it was our duty to take away the jurisdiction of the courts and the Department; but I am perfectly loyal to the committee, which thought otherwise, and will leave it just as it is; leave these claims to the court and let their decision be final. If the courts find in favor of these claimants, then the Government must pay the penalty for the exceedingly unwise, inequitable, and perhaps iniquitous measure which was passed in the form of section 61; iniquitous because it gives to a few such a large bounty at the expense of the many.

Now, if the second section which we shall propose in due season shall be adopted by this House, this question of free alcohol in the arts and manufactures can receive deliberate, intelligent, adequate, and fair consideration at the hands of those who understand something about it between now and the next session; and if there can be a well-guarded provision by which manufacturers, for the benefit of the people at large, can receive their alcohol free for use in their various processes, I for one, so far from opposing it, shall be in favor of it; but I am urgently opposed to continuing this gap so wide open, out of which must necessarily flow, unless the courts come to the rescue, so large an amount of public wealth, so large an amount of the public revenue; and, as I said, unless we repeal the section the probability is that industries to absorb this bounty will expand as the ingenuity of our good citizens may find opportunity. They have only found this thing out recently in New Jersey, in New York, in Massachusetts, and in Connecticut; but it will spread abroad all over the country. Gentlemen of the committee, let me say it will even reach California after a while, and all over the country they will get to raiding the Treasury at the rate of $1.10 a gallon for every gallon of alcohol they can use in the manufactures. The way it is going on the most of us will quit the practice of law, we will quit the practice of medicine and doing all these meritorious things, and go to making a living on something in which we can use alcohol.

Mr. DALZELL. Making hair restorers!

Mr. EVANS. Yes; we will go into the making of hair restorers, where I might be a customer; and also patent medicines. It does not make any difference what sort of manufacture it is under this section. That is immaterial. This word "manufacture" is one of the broadest of words in the English language, unless it be the word "arts," and both of them are quite broad enough to let in anybody who wants to get into the business of looting the Treasury. You can use alcohol in anything, so that it is a "manufacture" or "art"; it matters not how little else there is. You can use it in any way, and you shall not be cut off from going to the Treasury, if only there is art or a medicinal compound. There is much mention of repudiation in this discussion. I have heard more talk of repudiation in the discussion of this matter than I have heard for many years. You are told that to repeal this section is repudiation.

Mr. GIBSON. I will say to my friend that he means since the United States refused to pay the war claims due its loyal citizens.

Mr. EVANS. Or anything of that sort. We are told that this is repudiation. I am not in favor of repudiating anything that is fair and right; but when the Government acts inops consilii [laughter] a remedy should be applied. It shall not act that way this time. The Committee on Ways and Means has recommended a measure that will cure the evil, and, with one exception, all its members are agreed; and I do not know but what that one exception was that way. At all events, all but one of the Committee on Ways and Means were clearly of opinion that we would lay this matter before you in such a shape as that you alone should take the responsibility of leaving this door open by which the Government can be plundered in the case of the use of alcohol in the manufactures and the arts.

I have spoken with earnestness because I feel that the people of this country ought to know the situation. I feel that the members of this committee ought to know of it. Many of them do not, because their avocations of life do not bring them in connection with the internal-revenue system. It is a most charming thing to talk about free alcohol in manufactures and free alcohol in the arts. That is one of those delightful siren songs that fill with pleasure some gentlemen who represent certain large and important parts of the United States.

Mr. LINNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. EVANS. I always yield with pleasure to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. LINNEY. I want to vote for the gentleman's bill if I can. I see, however, that you report here that under the existing law 20,000,000 gallons are used annually of grain alcohol. Now, suppose you repeal the present law, and it restores the use of wood alcohol, which you say is poisonous and is untaxed, will not the effect of it be to destroy the use of the 20,000,000 gallons of grain alcohol and stimulate the use of the poisonous wood alcohol?

Mr. EVANS. If my friend will just listen he will vote for this bill.

Mr. LINNEY. I listened to every word you said, my dear sir. Here you denominate it as cheap and poisonous.

Mr. EVANS. That is, 2,500,000.

Mr. LINNEY. But 20,000,000 of grain alcohol are now used.

Mr. EVANS. Gentlemen, I want you to understand this fact. Wood alcohol, which I did not think of enough importance in this matter to mention unless somebody asked about it, cut somewhat an incidental figure in the investigation of this matter. Nobody representing wood alcohol ever appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means; nor did I think of considering it here, because it did not need to be. But wood alchohol is alcohol made from wood instead of grain. Pure grain spirit is not poisonous; but it is useful as a solvent for varnishes, and is used in many other manufactures, such as hat making and things of that sort.

Now, I want to say to my friend from North Carolina that, so far as yet developed, nobody has sought any of this bounty for any alcohol that is used for drinking purposes, however much of an art that may become. It is only asked for on alcohol used by the manufacturers. Wood alcohol can not be used, of course, in medicine, with reference to which everybody admits that this section of the statute ought to be repealed, but it can be used in several ways in manufacture. In hat making, for instance, it is used as a solvent or in the preparation of the materials that are put into it, and it does not make a particle of difference, for that purpose, whether it is poisonous or not.

Mr. HILL. It only makes the difference of whether it kills you or not; that is all.

Mr. EVANS. Well, down in my part of the country we never take any varnish in ours, so there is no danger. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. You do not take wood alcohol either, do you?

Mr. EVANS. We would take, gladly take, wood alcohol for the purposes for which it can be safely used. Now, Mr. Chairman, under the operation of our internal-revenue laws, which have been in force ever since 1862, the wood-alcohol industry has developed to a considerable extent in some parts of the country, so that there are perhaps two and a half million gallons of it used. Wood alcohol costs more to make than grain alcohol. It does not cost more than 10 or 15 cents to make a gallon of grain alcohol, but it costs many times that much to make a gallon of wood alcohol. But when you add the tax of $1.10 a gallon to the grain alcohol you make the wholesale price about $1.25 per gallon, while the wood alcohol can be got for a good deal less. That being so, the wood-alcohol manufacture has developed until they have come to make about two and a half million gallons of it, employing about a thousand hands. But when you rebate the tax you reduce the cost of grain alcohol to 10 or 20 cents a gallon, and nobody will buy wood alcohol, thus killing the industry.

Mr. LINNEY. But the use of the wood alcohol will displace the use of the grain alcohol, will it not?

Mr. EVANS. To a certain extent, possibly. Where you have to have grain alcohol, you must have it; but where wood alcohol can be used, you can use it without paying the tax. But the wood-alcohol industry has very little to do with the question. It is simply alluded to in the report of the committee as one illustration of the unwisdom of keeping this law in operation. That is to say, the effect will be that by the paying out of the public Treasury of a bounty to certain industries—it may be a snide manufacture of some sort or something called art—you will destroy the wood-alcohol industry without benefiting in the least the public at large.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The gentleman stated just now that the wood-alcohol industry would not be interfered with particularly. I wish to call his attention to the language of the report, which, on page 7, says:

> And, lastly, we deem it our duty to call attention to the fact that the effect of section 61, if carried out, will be the destruction of the large wood-alcohol industry.

Mr. EVANS. That is exactly what I have said and what I say now, and I have explained to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY] how that will come about, by reducing the price of the grain alcohol and putting it at 20 or 30 cents or more below the price of wood alcohol. In that case wood alcohol will not be used, and so the industry will be destroyed.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report of the Ways and Means Committee on this subject be incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The report is as follows:

> The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3283) entitled "A bill to repeal section 61 of an act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which became a law August 28, 1894," having carefully considered the same, report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, when so amended as to substitute the word "eighth" for the word "fifth," at the close of line 5 of the bill. An amendment of the title to conform to this change is also suggested.
> The language of the section which the bill proposes to repeal is as follows: "Any manufacturer finding it necessary to use alcohol in the arts, or in any medicinal or other like compound, may use the same under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and on satisfying the collector of internal revenue for the district wherein he resides or carries on business that he has complied with such regulations and has used such alcohol therein, and exhibiting and delivering up the stamps which show that a tax has been paid thereon, shall be entitled to receive from the Treasury of the United States a rebate or repayment of the tax so paid." (28 Stat. L., 567.)

An effort was made to prescribe regulations to carry the law into effect, but the failure to do so is shown by the following letter, dated the 6th day of October, 1894:

"SIR: Your communication of yesterday in reference to the execution of section 61 of the act of August 28, 1894, and advising me that, for the reasons therein stated, you 'are unable to prepare any set of regulations which would yield adequate protection to the Government and the honest manufacturer without official supervision, which has not been provided for by Congress,' is received. I have also given much attention to the subject, and have fully considered all the arguments and suggestions submitted by the parties interested in the execution of the section of the statute referred to, and have arrived at the conclusion that until further action is taken by Congress it is not possible to establish and enforce such regulations as are absolutely necessary for an effective and beneficial execution of the law.

"You are therefore instructed to take no further action in the matter for the present.

"Respectfully, "J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

"Hon. J. S. MILLER,
"Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

And thus the matter stands now, except that claims under the section to a great amount are outstanding against the United States unpaid and unadjusted.

Prior to the act of August 28, 1894, commonly known as the Wilson bill, there was never any such provision in our statutes as curiously and disastrously took shape in section 61. This crude legislation was not by any means one of the least of the evils of that incomplete and unfortunate measure. The wording of the section was found to be vague and inapt, so much so, indeed, that it was difficult and probably impossible to determine its limitations in practice, and the door was left wide open for frauds and misinterpretations. So certainly was this the case that the Treasury and internal-revenue officials, after patient and laborious effort, confessed, as shown in the foregoing letter, their inability to carry it into effect. That no other conclusion could be reached on the law as it stands every disinterested person who intelligently studies the subject must, it is believed, admit.

Necessarily, therefore, there should be some change of the section to make it practically operative, or else it should be repealed to avoid the very great harm it will do.

We have examined the schemes proposed in lieu of unconditional repeal, but in the judgment of the committee none of them would accomplish the object and adequately protect the revenue without involving large expenditures of money and the creation of a very large number of additional officers—results, unhappily, greatly disproportionate to the benefits to come to the public from free alcohol.

Undoubtedly the idea of taxing distilled spirits had its germ and origin in the conviction that that product was not in any respect a necessity, but was a quasi evil, to say the least, and from that standpoint a more appropriate subject of taxation than any of the necessaries of life. But this conception did not extend to such uses of alcohol and its preparations as were essential to the manufacture of articles of meritorious public consumption, such as medicines, hats, varnishes, and many fabrics. Consequently, if a scheme could be devised whereby the Government could exempt alcohol from taxation when so used it might strongly commend itself to the committee were it not for the considerations presently to be urged. But, as before suggested, nothing has been proposed to us which even approximately relieves the subject of the difficulties to be encountered.

The matters of prime importance in considering the subject seem to be, first, the interest of the Government from a revenue standpoint, and, second, the interest of the people generally as distinguished from that of a very limited number of them.

The hearings before the committee were very protracted and elaborate, and the conclusion was clearly reached that free alcohol, under the practical operation of any reasonable construction of section 61, would immensely benefit a few manufacturers and wholesale dealers in certain lines by returning to them, long after the product was marketed and sold, a sum equal to the tax on the alcohol used; but that the great consuming public would not, probably in a single instance, owing to the exceptional nature of the case, have a cheaper price made to them. This is so well illustrated in the case of the retail druggist and his customers (whose claim to cheaper medicines is certainly as meritorious as anything we can select) that we need go no further on this line than to report that the testimony did not materially conflict on the point that they could not and would not get lower prices. The entire retail drug trade is therefore against free alcohol. It is but just to say that this opposition is not merely on the ground of prices, but is also because of their fears of frauds on the Government, and of injury to themselves as merchants by jeopardizing the purity and character of the articles they sell.

A relaxation of the high tax on alcohol might be very desirable under some circumstances, especially if we did not so much need revenue, but the entire removal of the excise would not be excusable even to a meritorious manufacturing industry unless the people at large should share in the benefit when the manufactured article came to them for sale. It is one of the strongest objections to this particular legislation that no such participation by the public in the benefits of the exemption seems possible. This benefit all goes, and must continue to go, to the manufacturer alone, or to him and his jobber, and the consuming public pays just as much as if Congress had not enacted the section. The reason of this is that the full amount of tax must be paid at the outset to get the alcohol out of bond, and long afterwards, perhaps after the product is sold, the claim for refunding, if the proof is satisfactory, is allowed. This delay and uncertainty inevitably result in the collection from the purchaser of the full price of the goods, inclusive of the tax, and afterwards from the United States of whatever is refunded on account of the tax.

While this benefit to the manufacturer will greatly aid him when he gets the remitted tax, and possibly in a small way may benefit a limited number of laborers or jobbers, with whom he may divide to a nominal extent, the dividend to the consumer would be so small and uncertain in any event that it would not be worth making, and therefore will not be made, but substantially all of the amount thus refunded will be retained by the manufacturer alone. Hence it is apparent that he will continue to sell his product for precisely as much as if the alcohol were to continue to be tax paid, and will also afterwards get back and retain the $1.10 per gallon as additional profit. It can not be just or wise to favor in this manner the manufacturer of any sort of goods. We repeat that the appeal of no line of business can be stronger than that of the maker of medicinal compounds which are designed to promote the health of the people, and yet free alcohol is so manifestly improper and impossible for that interest, unless we wish to break up the internal-revenue system, that no one of the committee entertains the slightest idea that the law ought to remain in force as to medicinal or other like compounds. The facilities for frauds on the revenue are too manifest to make this tolerable.

We have pointed out that the proposed benefit to purely private enterprises and manufacturing interests could not bring any compensating general benefit to the people at large, which would alone justify it, and it would seem manifest from this point of view alone that section 61 should be promptly and unconditionally repealed, however desirable under other conditions free alcohol might be. We must for a long time necessarily tax alcohol generally, and we can not, under these circumstances, or without injustice to the public, exempt it even to the most meritorious industries. We can not make a separate matter of it in those connections with justice either to the revenue, the Government, or the general public. Ordinarily cheaper raw material will insure cheaper products, but where the price of the former is made to depend upon the more or less uncertain chance of a refund of a part of its cost, the result must be that the price of the product can not be materially reduced. So it will operate here, and the tax subsequently refunded will be that much of mere bounty to the manufacturer alone.

Other considerations seem cogent and powerful aids to the conclusion reached by the committee.

The current expenses of the Government for the fiscal year to end July 1, 1895, will exceed by about $30,000,000 the revenues for the same period. The best estimate made of the alcohol likely to be claimed as free under the act is 10,000,000 gallons per annum, a total for the fiscal years 1895 and 1896 of 20,000,000 gallons, on which the taxation is $22,000,000. We submit that the Government, especially in times like the present, can not afford, and ought not to be required to refund taxes under section 61, and should not any longer be subjected to the danger of having to do it. But the large direct loss to the revenue of $11,000,000 per annum is not all. Unless the strictest supervision is maintained over the whole subject of the use of alcohol in the arts, and in making medicinal and other like compounds whenever the manufacturer "finds it necessary," in the language of the section, to use it, the frauds committed under the extremely loose wording of the section will add many millions more to the losses the Government will sustain.

As anybody may become a "manufacturer" of some kind, and may "find" it necessary to use alcohol in the "arts," whatever that may mean, or in the making of medicinal or other like compounds, the utmost vigilance (to be exercised possibly in every school district from the Atlantic to the Pacific) will be required to prevent the success of the teeming schemes which will inevitably be devised to get the bounty of free alcohol. It is estimated that to do this adequately and effectively something like as many more revenue officers must be created as now exist, all of whom must be paid proper salaries. In this way more millions would have to be spent, adding fresh burdens to the people generally, in order to give a benefit to a few, upon some specious pretext of free alcohol to this, that, or the other interest, Government aid to which is neither fairer nor more necessary than to any and all others.

England, Germany, and some other countries have laws providing for the use of free alcohol in the preparation of foods, lights, and medicines, and in some of the useful arts. The last is done, where practicable, by the methylation of the spirits, and it has been urged that we could make and enforce similar laws, and in this way benefit a few industries. We have no accurate information as to how effectively these laws operate in those countries, though as they are not repealed the presumption is that favorable results have been attained.

But those countries of very limited territory and dense population present cases very different from ours, particularly in the matter of possibility of surveillance, and investigations made officially in this country do not encourage much hope that methylation could be so regulated as to give useful and safe results. It is too easy to demethylize the spirits to risk it to our acute and enterprising citizens of certain tendencies.

Again, distilled spirits produce more revenue than comes from all other internal-revenue sources combined. From them we got last year nearly or quite $80,000,000. Spirits are a manifestly proper subject for taxation, and we should not relax our hold upon this great source of revenue (as we certainly shall if we permit this entering wedge to remain) until the obligation to pay vast sums in pensions to the soldier and his widow has been extinguished. Its efficiency as a revenue producer will be greatly reduced by the seductive intrusions of claims for free alcohol upon one plausible but delusive pretext or another, unless we begin resistance at once. We should forget our duty to the Government, and the sacred objects in raising this revenue, if we gave it away in any unjustifiable manner.

While the case is admittedly clear to all as to medicinal compounds which may so easily be perverted into beverages, a few may insist that some industries, where the use of alcohol involves its total destruction, rest upon a better and more favorable foundation in claiming free alcohol; but while the committee admit that the difficulties of surveillance are diminished in proportion as the number of instances in which free alcohol may be used is limited, this does not relieve the subject from a most essential difficulty, which lies at the very root of the matter, namely, that for the Government to refund to the manufacturer the amount, or even a portion of the amount, of the tax paid on the alcohol used by him, long after that tax had been paid and the amount of it included in the price to the consumer, is to that extent to bestow a bounty upon an individual or industry no better entitled thereto than any of the others of the country not so favored. It must not be forgotten that there is no virtue so magical about the use of alcohol as to entitle him who uses it to be paid by the Government for so doing $1.10 per gallon on what he uses.

The manufacturer must always, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, sell his product at a price which includes the tax paid as well as a reasonable profit, and will afterwards get as an additional profit whatever sums may be refunded by the Government. This is the course the matter will take and must take in every case. It is therefore clearly a mere bounty to the manufacturer, and a possible injustice to all other industries not equally favored. Alcohol is exceptionally surrounded, and the people are entitled, through the Government, to the tax thereon, unless in some way they can get the benefits of its being exempt in certain instances. There is neither justice, propriety, nor logic in taking this benefit from the people generally, as represented by the Government, and bestowing it upon a less number, as must necessarily be the result unless section 61 is repealed. The practical operations of this peculiar section must lead to this and nothing else.

As very clearly stating views which met the approval of the committee, and as giving also some very important facts in a succinct and forcible manner, and particularly as showing, as the first one does, the almost phenomenal flexibility of the language employed in section 61, or at least its great width of application, the following letters are inserted at this point. They are quite instructive:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
"OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
"Washington, D. C., February 11, 1896.

"SIR: An investigation of claims presented in one of the collection districts of New York for rebate on alcohol claimed to be used under section 61 of act of August 28, 1894, shows that the same will amount in this district alone to about $1,000,000 annually. From information obtained in this district it is believed these claims will be largely increased in number and amount when it is generally known that the rebate will be paid.

"These claims cover a vast number of articles, such as tinctures, medical compounds, flavoring extracts, essences, patent medicines, bay rum, bay salt, Florida water, medicine extracts, pepto mangan, homeopathic medicines, root beer, witch-hazel, medicinal and other like compounds, fruit extracts, nutrolactics, pharmaceutical preparations, barbers' supplies, tobacco, smoking tobacco, celluloid and fancy goods, hair tonics, bovinine extract, varnish, bitters of various kinds, essential oils, essence of pepsin, medicinal saumetto, tricopherous, perfumery, Jamaica ginger, ethers, oils, wine and liquor flavors, toilet waters, confectioneries, blackberry brandy, cherry brandy, household panacea, soothing sirup, Radway's Ready Relief, sarsaparilla, Venetian liniment, etc.

"OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
"Washington, D. C., February 13, 1896.

"SIR: Referring to my letter of the 11th instant, on the subject of alcohol used in the arts, etc., inclosed please find copy of a letter this day received from The A. Burdsal Company, of Indianapolis, Ind., manufacturers and jobbers in paints, varnishes, etc., protesting against the allowance of rebate of tax on the alcohol so used.

"The statements made in support of this protest confirm the views expressed in my letter above referred to, and, coming as they do from manufacturers who use alcohol in their business, and who have made claim for rebate on alcohol already used, seem to be entitled to special consideration.

"Respectfully, yours,

"JOS. S. MILLER, Commissioner.

"Hon. WALTER EVANS,
"House of Representatives."

"INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 10, 1896.

"DEAR SIR: I see by the trade papers that a large delegation of patent-medicine manufacturers, perfumers, wholesale druggists, and others have appeared before the Ways and Means Committee in favor of the McMillin bill for free alcohol. As a user of alcohol, and at the same time having a claim now before the Government for the refunding of the tax on what we have used during the past year, I desire to enter my protest against this bill, believing it is a great wrong to the people of this country and to the Government.

"If I correctly understand it, the Government refunds the duty on alcohol to every exporter of every line of goods in which alcohol enters. If such is the case, where, then, is the drawback to the manufacturer of goods that are sold for export? In the second place, is free alcohol likely to be of benefit to the people of this country? To this I answer no. It is simply a scheme of the large manufacturers of patent medicines and others to get absolute control of this business and shut out the small competitors, who are worrying them more than taxable alcohol.

"Go back to the time when manufacturers of patent medicines in this country had to affix a stamp to their preparations. By false representation they had Congress remove this tax. Is the public benefited thereby? Not a cent. Their medicines have sold at the same price as before, and the Government loses the revenue on them.

"It is exactly a parallel case with the tobacco manufacturers. They had the tax repealed on manufactured tobacco, and after that was done they sold tobacco at identically the same price; that is, so far as the poor man was concerned, his nickel piece of tobacco was no larger than it was before. The result was all the large tobacco manufacturers made immense fortunes.

"In order to prevent the Government being wronged by the use of free alcohol it is necessary that supervisors be appointed, just as they are in the distilleries. Many safeguards will have to be thrown around its use, which will entail expense upon the manufacturers. Those who manufacture in large quantities and can stand the expense of supervision will be able to run under the free-alcohol law, but small manufacturers who are to-day making extracts, elixirs, and different compounds in connection with a small retail drug business, who enter into competition with the large manufacturers that have appeared before your committee, will not be able to stand this expense of supervision, and the consequence will be they will have to go out of the business.

"One of the largest uses to which alcohol is put is the cutting of shellac to make 'shellac varnishes.' Almost every large paint house in the United States now make their own 'shellac varnish,' but if they are required to have a supervisor stand over them and see that they use the alcohol they buy for nothing else but the manufacture of this article they will have to discontinue it, and this business will be thrown into the hands of the large manufacturers in New York and elsewhere, who, having complete control of the market, will naturally take advantage of the situation and make exorbitant profits. It is simply a scheme of the big fish to eat the little ones.

"Outside of all this, the United States Government needs the revenue coming to it from alcohol, and should have it. I would even go further than that and reenact the law that a stamp should go on every bottle of patent medicine in this country, simply because these men are making large profits and can afford it. It will not advance the cost of their medicines 1 mill to the poor man, who buys them from the retail druggist. When this Government is on a better financial basis than she is to-day it will be time enough for her to be liberal, and throw away revenue that rightly belongs to her.

"Respectfully,

"THE A. BURDSAL CO.

"Mr. MILLER,
"Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Washington, D. C."

In addition to all these considerations it should not be forgotten that the "chemical," the "spirits," and the "sundries" schedules of the Wilson bill were prepared without section 61 being in the bill, and after its insertion there was no rearrangement of the duties to meet this change, which was made in the Senate. Disproportionate protection is thereby unintentionally given to many articles to the extent in some instances of at least 100 per cent, notably:

In sulphuric and fruit ethers, and in all alcoholic compounds not specially classed in the schedules.

And, lastly, we deem it our duty to call attention to the fact that the effect of section 61, if carried out, will be the destruction of the large wood-alcohol interest. Over a thousand hands are engaged and several million dollars are embarked in the industry, and 2,500,000 gallons are annually produced. It is poisonous and not usable as a beverage, and is therefore not taxed. It is not as good as grain alcohol nor so cheap as free alcohol for manufacturing purposes, but amply suffices in many cases.

It is not considered by the committee to be either just or wise to give a bounty in the way of free alcohol to any other industry, when one of the certain effects of the bestowal will be to destroy the wood-alcohol interest, and in no way to benefit either the Government or the public. On the contrary, the Government, instead of being benefited, would pay a large bounty to one set of industries, and in this way enable them to destroy another. The bestowal of this bounty is not defensible upon any ground under what must be the practical operations of section 61, and its harmfulness to another meritorious industry enlarges and emphasizes the reasons against it, which the committee regard as already overwhelming.

Unless the section is repealed promptly, the Government stands in danger of losing about $11,000,000 per annum now because of it, with the chance for a large yearly increase as ingenuity in availing of its provisions develops. The reasons for immediate action seem most urgent and powerful.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied fifty-five minutes.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask my question now?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. MORSE. I understood the gentleman from Kentucky to base his argument upon the ground that this free alcohol was an excrescence on the Gorman-Wilson bill.

Mr. EVANS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORSE. If you remove all the excrescences upon that bill, will there be anything left? [Laughter.]

Mr. EVANS. Well, we propose to remove this one at least, one at a time in that respect. [Cries of "No!" "No!" on the Republican side.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time, and after my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL], shall have occupied as much time as I have taken we can probably come to some agreement as to when the debate shall close.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as there seems to be considerable uncertainty as to the length of time which is to be allowed for this debate, and as there are gentlemen sitting about me who represent districts in which legitimate and extensive manufactures exist which are vitally interested in this question, I do not wish to occupy any great length of time myself, preferring to give those gentlemen an opportunity to represent their districts and the industries of those districts.

Mr. EVANS. Did the gentleman understand my suggestion that he should proceed to occupy as much time as I have occupied, and that then we might reach an understanding as to the time for concluding the debate?

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. If my colleague on the committee can assure me that we shall have general debate on the bill beyond this afternoon, that may help us to come to an understanding.

Mr. EVANS. Of course I can not give the gentleman that assurance, as I can not control the matter. My suggestion was that the gentleman should occupy the full length of time that I had taken, and that then we might come to an agreement.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. In any event, I should not think of occupying the whole of that time myself and leaving other gentlemen who are opposed to this bill the uncertain chance of securing time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been unable to agree fully with my colleagues on the Committee on Ways and Means in relation to this proposition. I agree with them more nearly this afternoon than I ever have before, inasmuch as the amendment is proposed in a way declaring for the principle of free alcohol in manufactures and arts. In the few words I shall say I am going to speak generally on this subject.

I conceive it to be a policy of the Republican party that it shall by its legislation seek to foster, protect, and in every legitimate, reasonable way care for the manufacturing industries of this country. I consider it further specifically the policy of the Republican party to grant free alcohol for use in manufactures and arts. I call the attention of this committee to the fact that the Republican platform of 1888—the last platform on which we stood in victory—as it was presented to that great Republican convention at Chicago by the chairman of the committee on resolutions, William McKinley, jr., of Ohio [applause], declared unequivocally in favor of free alcohol for use in manufactures and arts. And so before that time, and clear down until to-day, I for one recognize and declare it to have been the policy of the Republican party to give free alcohol for use in manufactures and arts, under such rules and regulations as will protect the revenue of the Government from fraud in alcohol used for beverages and for purposes other than manufactures and arts.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will my colleague on the committee permit a question right there? He has stated what was the platform of his party in 1888; and he mentioned in connection with that the gentleman whose name was attached to the tariff law which was passed when his party came into power. Now, is it not a fact that when Mr. McKinley was chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means he refused to make any provision of this kind giving free alcohol for use in the arts?

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Let me answer my colleague. Without going fully into the history of this question, I will come directly to the answer. In the Fiftieth Congress the Senate Committee on Finance, a Republican committee, in dealing with the Mills bill incorporated upon that measure an amendment providing specifically, and by regulations which I believe were practicable and feasible in their execution, for free alcohol in the manufactures and arts. That ended the action on the subject in the Fiftieth Congress. In the Fifty-first Congress we were in a position to pass a completely new tariff law dealing with the customs features and the internal-revenue features. It is a fact, as my colleague on the committee [Mr. MCMILLIN] states, that that law did not contain provisions for free alcohol in manufactures and the arts. I do not know whether that subject was discussed or considered in the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House during that Congress. My understanding is that it was talked of and gone over at some length in the Ways and Means Committee. But what did Mr. McKinley and the Republican party, with which he acted, do in that tariff bill in the Fifty-first Congress? They had a reduced internal-revenue tax all along the line, lower than it is to-day by 37½ cents per commercial gallon, or something of that sort; and in addition to that they increased the duty on imports of manufactured articles which came into competition with domestic products in the production of which alcohol was used.

Mr. McMILLIN. My friend will pardon me——

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I am perfectly willing, if my friend from Tennessee would substitute the McKinley bill for this section and the other sections of the tariff law of 1894, to say nothing further about free alcohol. For the advantage and protection which the American manufacturer gets incidentally and accidentally from this section 61 which crept into the law through no desire of the party which my friend represents—the advantage which the American manufacturer gets from this section would be a mere bagatelle as compared with the advantage he would get from the full and complete provisions of the old McKinley law.

Mr. McMILLIN. Right there, if my friend will pardon me, I know he would not intentionally mislead the committee; and he will agree with me, I think, that his statement in regard to what was done by the committee and the House is misleading in this: He says that the internal-revenue tax was reduced 37 per cent, but the whisky tax of 90 cents a gallon, which is the question involved here, was not reduced one cent.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I understand that under the McKinley law the tax was 37 cents less than it is now.

Mr. McMILLIN. No, sir.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. On alcohol?

Mr. McMILLIN. No, sir.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Then there is a variance between my friend and myself.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman stated that the committee did reduce this internal-revenue tax, when in point of fact neither the committee nor that House nor that Congress reduced the gallon tax on whisky by one cent. What the gentleman possibly might claim is——

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I hope the gentleman will not take too much of my time. My understanding is (and I am speaking in the presence of gentlemen who are better acquainted with this subject than I am) that the law——

A MEMBER. Which law?

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. The law of 1890—the McKinley law, as it is commonly called—reduced the tax on the commercial gallon of alcohol by 37½ cents, and on the proof gallon by 20 cents less than it is to-day.

Mr. McMILLIN. I knew my friend was in error in that respect.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. But providing it did not reduce it a penny, it increased the tariff rates on the manufactured products into which alcohol enters as a component part, and the advantage to the American manufacturer comes there. You took away that advantage and you took that protection away by the law of 1894, and the incidental amount of protection and advantage left by section 61, you—and I regret to say it, Republicans as well as Democrats—propose now to take away.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have been diverted from the line of argument that I had intended to pursue. I was remarking that it was a principle and policy of the Republican party to grant free alcohol for use in manufactures and in the arts. I believe that is the policy which is held by the Republican party to-day; and in evidence of it I submit to you the amendment which my colleague [Mr. EVANS] from the Ways and Means Committee has given notice that he will offer some time in the discussion of this question. That is an amendment which recognizes that free alcohol shall be used in the manufactures and in the arts if regulations practical and effective and protective to the Government can be devised.

Now, section 61 is crude and is faulty. My colleague on the committee will bear me witness that during the consideration of this question in the committee at no time did I contend that this section should not be repealed. It came into the bill incidentally, but it was a declaration of a principle and policy of the Republican party. Incidentally, as long as it is on the statute book, it gives the benefit and protection of free alcohol to the manufactures and the arts. But what I have contended for was this: That with the repeal of this faulty section of the law there should be brought into the House for its consideration some measure which was practicable and feasible in its execution and which would guarantee to all our domestic manufactures free alcohol. Therefore, if I may be allowed to say it, I think the Republicans, my colleagues on the Committee on Ways and Means, did not go to the full extent of their duty as Republicans in this matter. I have no contention with my colleague the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] as to the faults of the present law. I admit that it is very crude, that it is very impracticable, though not impossible of execution. I have no doubt that it would cause frauds on the revenues of the Government, but I do say in connection with a repeal of this provision that it is the duty of the committee and it is the duty of this House to try in every possible way to prepare some measure which shall be practical in its stead.

Why do I say this, Mr. Chairman? The use of free alcohol in manufactures and in the arts to-day is admitted in all of the civilized countries abroad. Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Russia, and Switzerland all have enactments allowing free alcohol for use in manufactures and the arts. Some of these laws have been on their statute books for ages almost. France has had such a law since 1816, and all the evidence we can find shows that those laws have operated not only to the advantage of the manufactures of those countries, but in no way have they interfered with the revenues of the respective Governments from alcohol or from spirits used for beverages. And in further evidence of that fact, every revision of their laws which any one of these countries has made has granted free alcohol for use in manufactures and in the arts as far as practicable, and each revision, as a rule, has been more liberal and comprehensive in allowing alcohol for such purposes than the law which preceded it. Probably the most perfect free-alcohol law in foreign lands to-day is that of Germany, which, if my memory serves me right, has been in operation in substantially its present form since about 1888. England's law, the present law, was amended at an earlier date, but the evidence is conclusive that all of these foreign countries protect and stimulate their manufactures by allowing the free use of alcohol.

Now, it seems to me perfectly clear and right from our standpoint as Republicans and protectionists that when these foreign countries stimulate their important industries and their export trade by allowing free alcohol the same stimulus should be given to the trade of this country. And here let me remark that there is no place in the world where grain spirits can be manufactured so cheaply and so easily as in the United States, and the free use of alcohol in manufactures and the arts, according to my idea, would afford a stimulus not only to domestic trade, but to our export business it would be a boon. And especially would it be advantageous to the grain producers of the country. I believe the free use of alcohol in manufactures and the arts would be a great advantage to the agricultural industries of the entire country in the greatly increased demand and production of grain alcohol for use in the industries which would be stimulated and extended by free alcohol.

Now, I say repeal section 61, if you see fit, because it is crude and possibly impossible of execution; but in its stead at the same time as you repeal it, or as soon as practicable thereafter, give us a law which shall allow free alcohol for use in the manufactures and the arts. Do not let the only single, well-defined tariff enactment of this Republican House of the Fifty-fourth Congress be a repeal of a protective feature of existing law without the substitution of more effective and pronounced protection. Do not let patriotic duty to a Democratic Administration entirely overweigh protective consideration for American industries. It is very proper to consider the deficiency of revenue and the distressed financial conditions of the Government, and seek to relieve and reimburse the Treasury. But it is not necessary to do it according to the dictum of a Democratic Administration and in a way hostile to Republican policy.

Now, it may be said that it is rather a late day to suggest that we substitute for this repeal some other enactment which shall allow free alcohol. It was my privilege in the committee to submit two bills, each of which seemed to me to be practicable and feasible in execution. One of them dealt exclusively with manufactured products, where the alcohol was entirely consumed in the product and could in no way be recovered in a portable form from the manufactured product. That bill would apply to a large number of manufacturing industries. It would apply to the hatting industry, which is to-day represented in so many States of this Union. It would apply to the manufacture of hardware. It would apply to the manufacture of various things. It would apply possibly to some manufactures of paints, varnishes, and that sort of thing.

There was another bill submitted, which was more extensive and more liberal in its provisions; and so in what I say to-day I wish it to be understood that I am in no way defending section 61 which you seek to repeal, except so far as I defend it as declaring a policy of the Republican party. I can enjoy the criticism of my friend and colleague [Mr. EVANS] in reference to the abuse of section 61. I stand with him, as he knows, for its repeal; but when we repeal it, we still place ourselves far from what I believe to be our duty in carrying out a policy under the principles of the party to which we have prescribed ourselves year after year.

Going back for a moment to the foreign laws which allow free alcohol for use in the manufactures and arts, an excellent and practical law is the English law. The spirits under this English law are methylated under the supervision of Government officers. And now I want to speak for a moment about methylated alcohol and refer to the wood-alcohol industry. The wood-alcohol industry is a domestic industry which I as earnestly and as heartily as my colleague and friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] believe in preserving and protecting. It makes no difference to me for this discussion or at this time if the industry is under the control or the influence of a trust.

Mr. PAYNE. If my colleague will allow me, I will say to him that I have no special interest in the wood-alcohol industry any more than in any other industry in the United States. There is not a drop of it manufactured in my district or very near to my district. I believe there is some manufactured in the State of New York and in the State of Pennsylvania, but I have no interest in it any more than I have any other industry.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. You have the same interest in it that I have—that is, an interest in its preservation as a domestic American industry.

But the argument is made that the continuance of section 61, by authorizing the use of free grain alcohol in the manufactures and arts, destroys the wood-alcohol industry. I quite disagree with that. I believe that free alcohol allowed for the manufactures and arts would be a stimulus for the wood-alcohol industry. The extent of the wood-alcohol industry to-day is very small. There is nothing better than wood alcohol with which to methylate grain alcohol. The free use of grain alcohol in our manufactures and arts would very largely extend the use not only of grain alcohol, but of methylated alcohol, and thereby furnish an outlet and a use for an additional quantity of wood alcohol.

Under the English law methylated alcohol is what is largely used in the manufactures and arts. It is a combination of perhaps nine parts grain alcohol and one part wood alcohol. These methylated spirits are prepared under the direction of a Government official, and the authority to methylate is granted to distillers, to rectifiers, and to licensed methylaters. Persons are licensed to sell such spirits. They are called authorized methylaters and retailers of such spirits, and the methylated spirits are authorized to be sold in quantity to any person for use in any art or manufacture carried on by him; to a retailer of such spirits, who is limited at one time to a holding of 50 gallons, and by a retailer to any person in a quantity not exceeding 1 gallon.

This law has been in force since 1880. There are to-day in the United Kingdom 24 methylaters and 12,104 retailers of methylated spirits. That is the way they take care of their users of methylated spirits over there in that foreign country, which sends, under the stimulus of the present tariff law, so many products to take away the trade of our domestic manufacturers. Further than that, they place a customs duty on every article in which spirits are used, including imports of methylated spirits. It seems to me, gentlemen, only fair that we should afford to our domestic manufacturers here the same stimulus and the same protection which they give there in Great Britain.

To illustrate, take the item of transparent soap. I am not dealing with any such fictitious manufactures and arts as my friend and colleague from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] made reference to. The manufacture of transparent soap requires the use of methylated spirits or grain alcohol. First, there is a duty of 8 cents per proof gallon put upon methylated spirits, thus compelling the use of domestic spirits. Second, there is a duty of 6 cents per pound upon transparent soap. As a result of this, the importation of methylated spirits in Great Britain to-day amounts to less than 475,000 gallons, and the importation of soap amounts to less than 11,000 pounds, virtually no importation at all. So that the whole domestic market over in Great Britain is retained to their manufacturers of soap simply by their provision in relation to the use of free alcohol and methylated spirits in that manufacture.

Now, what protection can result to our industry of transparent-soap manufacture from a duty of 15 per cent on soap when we levy an internal-revenue tax of 800 per cent on the alcohol our manufacturers use in its production, when the foreign manufacturers have the benefit of free spirits? Why should this discrimination continue against our citizens when we have as an example to follow the laws granting free alcohol to manufacturers in force in every single civilized country abroad, the whole operating practically and preserving the other revenues of those governments from alcohol used for other purposes?

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied twenty-five minutes, and has thirty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take up more time now, and, instead of reserving my time, I shall yield the remainder to my colleague, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for thirty-five minutes.

Mr. HILL. I shall trust to the generosity of the House to give me the rest of the time to which I would be entitled if recognized in my own right. I propose to discuss this question as a Republican and a business man.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this is the most important question to the interests of my district of any that has come before Congress this session, and I respectfully ask that I may be allowed to use my own time to the full extent that the rules will permit.

Mr. Chairman, I propose to discuss this question as a Republican and a business man.

On the 19th of December, 1893, the Wilson tariff bill was reported to the House and passed February 1, 1894. It was amended 634 times by the Senate, passed by that body July 3, and readopted by the House August 13, 1894. It was the Democratic expression of a deliberate intention to reduce duties on importations an average of 15 per cent and to increase internal-revenue taxation about 30 per cent. It was wickedly conceived, was delivered by abortion, and has developed into a monstrosity. It has proved a curse to the party that fathered it and disastrous to the home into which it was thrust. There has not been an hour since it was thought of till now when under its operations this nation has not steadily run into debt.

Think of what has happened to this land of ours since March 4, 1893. Two financial panics the like of which no living man has seen before. Factories closed and armies of idle men marching across the land demanding food and work. Business suspended or prosecuted at fearful loss. Public works postponed and the Government crippled in every branch of service. The coast defenses discontinued, so that, while we shout defiance to all the world, we are the objects of derision by the weakest of the civilized nations of the globe. Our little Army without equipment; our infant Navy without shot or shell and only fit for pleasure cruising. Thousands of men who fought to save the Union dropped from the pension roll and thousands more whose honest claims are by technicalities postponed and deferred while want, and destitution, and old age are bringing them to their graves. The postal service crippled and its wonderful growth and progress practically stopped.

A nation which for thirty years under Republican administration has been the wonder of the world, which in that time has had a growth in wealth, in numbers, and in the development of every industrial art unequaled since creation's dawn, this nation brought to a dead standstill by this full fruition and crowning glory of Democratic statesmanship.

The people who make Presidents and Congressmen have learned well the lesson taught by sore experience, and have spoken in ways that do not admit of doubt, that the blunder of 1892 shall be corrected and the Democratic policy reversed. They mean that the taxes upon the products of American labor shall be reduced, or, better yet, abolished altogether, and that the expenses of this nation shall be met from customs duties laid on foreign products coming into competition with our own and the balance paid by luxuries wherever found. To-day, without regard to party, the people are united on this issue in the Northern States, and woe to the politicians who run counter to this demand.

Honest pay for honest work and honest work for all is the people's rallying cry, and the whole brood of trusts and combinations, speculators and lobbyists, political schemers and bosses, must stand aside and give the procession room.

I will stop here to give notice that I shall move an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the amendment proposed by the committee, the effect being to appoint a commission not to repeal the law, but to report a substitute to the next session of Congress in place of it.

During the summer of 1894, while the Wilson bill was pending in the Senate and the auction for votes for its support was going merrily on, and the "deadly blight of treason was blasting the councils of the brave," and the "communism of pelf" was dictating laws to a triumphant Democracy for the first time in thirty years in full control of the nation, the keen eye of Senator HOAR of Massachusetts discovered one weak spot in the enemy's line and forced into the bill an amendment now known as section 61, which the pending measure proposes to repeal.

It was accepted for the time being to avoid discussion, but with no thought of final adoption, for no Democrat in either House for a moment dreamed that this mass of "outrageous discriminations" would come from the conference committee with any semblance of the Senate bill still remaining. The bill was in committee for forty days, until at length, with a hunger and thirst for tariff reform such as never tortured Dr. Tanner for food and drink, the Democratic majority swallowed it, amendments and all, at a single gulp, and have been suffering from indigestion ever since.

The only feature of the whole bill that was intended to operate in the interest of American labor and for the benefit of home industries was this section 61, put in by a Republican, left in by accident, and damned by the Administration from that day to this. Can it be possible that this Republican House will select this sole exponent of its own principles, the only leaven in the whole lump, the one redeeming feature of Democratic free-trade legislation, and repealing that, allow the rest to stand, to bring paralysis, decay, and death to every American industry for two years more? Was it for this and this only that this House was made two-thirds Republican by an indignant people? Think you that the members from doubtful States—yes, from any State—will glory in such a record as this upon the stump this fall?

But the Secretary of the Treasury, the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, and, I am sorry to say, a few Republicans upon that committee, claim that because the enforcement of this law would inure to the benefit of the industries of this nation to the estimated amount of ten millions annually, and because large claims for rebates under its provisions are being prosecuted in our courts, it must, therefore, be repealed. I admit that large claims are being made; it only shows the necessity for the enforcement of the law. I deny that ten millions of revenue or one-quarter of that amount is possibly lost thus far by this one section of the bill, but I do know that one hundred and thirty millions have already gone by reason of the other sections, and that the next two years will add another hundred millions, and all at the expense of our own people; and yet this committee deliberately proposes to repeal the helpful clause and leave the rest untouched.

I ask the delegation from the great State of Ohio, a State whose splendid champion of protection seems now to be marching with triumphant tread to receive the highest honors of the nation [loud applause on the Republican side], if this is the advance message of prosperity which they will send out of the gloom and darkness of the past four years to the struggling industries of this land?

I ask the gentleman from William L. Wilson's district in West Virginia if this is the protection that he taught to his mountaineers in 1894? Did the members from North Carolina and Tennessee tell their constituents then that the internal revenue would be increased and the Wilson tariff duties left untouched? Was it for this that the woolgrowers of Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, and the Dakotas sent their members here, to tax alcohol in the industrial arts 700 per cent and keep wool on the free list, and so maintain the Wilson tariff price of 5 cents a pound?

Dare the gentlemen from the grain-raising States go back to their constituents and tell them that the only tariff legislation that they have succeeded in passing was to put the highest tax in all the world upon the farmer's grain, and thereby narrow the market which the Wilson tariff bill by accident had broadened? Will the gentlemen from New York and Pennsylvania enjoy telling their constituents that they have put the whole of the magnificent industries of those States under tribute to one little trust in a few counties there with an entire annual output of only $1,800,000?

And yet this is what must be done if this bill is passed, for it will be the only tariff legislation of this session, and if adopted by this Republican House will be gladly ratified by a Democratic Senate and approved, as it has already been demanded, by a free-trade Administration.

That there may be no misunderstanding about this matter, I wish to quote the section to which reference is made and show the action of the Administration in regard to its enforcement. It reads as follows:

> Any manufacturer finding it necessary to use alcohol in the arts, or in any medical or other like compound, may use the same under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and on satisfying the collector of internal revenue for the district wherein he resides or carries on business that he has complied with such regulations and has used such alcohol therein, and exhibiting and delivering up the stamps which show that a tax has been paid thereon, shall be entitled to receive from the Treasury of the United States a rebate or payment of the tax so paid. (28 Stat. L., 567.)

This was not a new proposition, for on the 22d day of June, 1888, William McKinley, jr., chairman of the committee on resolutions, read to a Republican national convention, of which many members of this House and some of the members of the Ways and Means Committee were a part, that splendid enunciation of the doctrine of protection which has never been equaled in the history of the party and which has possibly made his name immortal, and therein specifically declared for free alcohol in the arts and sciences, and if less revenue was desired for the entire abolition of internal taxes rather than a reduction of the duties on imports.

Has it come to this, that because the Democrats in this Congress refuse to vote for a revenue tariff bill to furnish means to maintain an Administration of their own, we must violate our principles and repudiate our pledges to the people?

Neither was it a new legislative proposition, for provisions looking to the same result were added to the Mills bill in 1888, and the report of the Senate Committee on Finance refers to it in this language:

> Senate Report No. 2332, Fiftieth Congress, first session.
> Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Finance, submitted the following report (to accompany bill H. R. 9051).
> The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, respectfully report:
> The provisions of the substitute which allow the use of alcohol in the industrial arts free from taxation would prove of great benefit to a large number of important manufactures. Alcohol is used in the production of more than 500 chemical and pharmaceutical preparations and in many of the mechanical and industrial arts, and its use in all these directions would be largely extended if the onerous tax should be abolished. The heavy tax upon alcohol unnecessarily increases the price of many manufactured products, with no corresponding benefit except the resulting revenue, which is now unnecessary.

Every reason that justified a Republican Senate in such action then justifies the Republican House now in demanding the execution of this law; and I can go even further than that, and assert that we have the very best Democratic authority for the statement that revenue need not be considered, for only a few days ago when the report upon "filled cheese" came in I found this statement therein:

> The Treasury does not need replenishment, even if revenue should arise from this bill. We have of available cash in the Treasury more than $160,000,000 over and above the gold reserve.
> H. G. TURNER.
> BENTON MCMILLIN.
> J. L. MCLAURIN.

So this remarkable spectacle is presented of Democrats voting for this bill in order to perpetuate the customs schedule of the Wilson bill and Republicans elected for the express purpose of wiping out that legislation aiding them in preserving it.

This talk of a loss of eleven millions of revenue per annum because of this measure is the veriest nonsense, prompted by a Democratic official to prevent the enforcement of the law, and no one knows this better than the author of this report.

At the end of the fiscal year of 1895, which covered ten months of the law, the claims for rebates were for 317,890 proof gallons, or about $317,890.

On November 30, 1895, the Attorney-General reports the amount to be, for fifteen months, nearly $2,500,000, a sum less by far than that which has been openly asserted upon the floor of this House to be annually stolen in the administration of the United States courts by marshals' and witnesses' fees.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. If it is agreeable to my colleague, I hope he will read a letter which I know he has received from the Attorney-General as to the facts in this matter.

Mr. HILL. If I have time I will read it; but I will put it in the RECORD. I wrote to the Attorney-General for a tabulation of these claims. I read this report from the Committee on Ways and Means, saying this Government was receiving $11,000,000 a year in claims; and I sat down and wrote to the Attorney-General for a tabulation of the claims he had received. The letter is as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
> Washington, D. C., May 4, 1896.
> DEAR SIR: I am sorry to say that it is quite impossible for me to give you the exact information requested by your favor of May 3 with reference to the claims for rebate upon alcohol. There have now been commenced between 500 and 600 suits, which take their place day by day on the docket with suits of all other kinds, and there is no way of classifying them with reference to locality except by a separate examination of each individual petition. Our clerical force is kept so inadequate for the work to be done in this Department that it would be next to impossible to do this in time to be of any use to you.
> The condition of things is briefly this: Commencing with about December 1, 1894, almost daily since, these suits have been commenced in the Court of Claims, mainly by two attorneys. There are other attorneys who have large numbers of the claims who have not brought suit on them, thinking it as well to wait until the questions of law are decided and then make one suit cover the whole period. It is, of course, obvious that as to those who commenced suits some time ago, their claims have been growing daily, as they continue to use alcohol, and therefore the amounts stated in the petitions do not adequately represent the amount of claim which the individual would have were his action to be brought to trial and judgment.
> There are, as I say, about 550 of these suits already commenced (each day increases the number). The aggregate of the amounts claimed in those petitions is about $1,800,000, but as many of them were commenced nearly a year and a half ago, it is perhaps not far from correct to say that the present claims of the individuals represented by those suits aggregate about double the sum above mentioned, or about $3,600,000.
> It was estimated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that approximately 30,000 people used alcohol in such a way as to come within the terms of section 61 of the tariff act of 1894. Presumably, however, the 500 who have commenced suit are larger users on the average than those who have not.
> I shall be glad to give any information in my power on this subject, and if it is important that the exact information called for by your letter should be had I will facilitate any clerks who may be sent by obtaining the petitions for them and directing their work.
> Your letter has been referred to me for the reason that the suits in the Court of Claims are in my charge.
> Very respectfully,
> J. E. DODGE,
> Assistant Attorney-General.
> Hon. E. J. HILL,
> House of Representatives.

The aggregate amount of the claims in this computation is about $1,800,000, but as many of them were commenced nearly a year and a half ago, it is perhaps but fair for me to say that the present claims now represented by those suits would aggregate about double the sum, about $3,600,000 up to this time, so that the entire amount that anybody knows anything about is less than $2,000,000 per year. Now, one man's guess is just about as good as another man's guess, especially when he does not know anything about it, and it seems a very strange thing that a committee as important as the Ways and Means Committee of this House should have made a statement of that kind, when it was perfectly possible to get the actual facts in the case by simply doing as I did, by writing a letter to the Department and finding out; and it seems to me that that alone invalidates all the rest of the proposition that they have presented on this subject.

The fact of the case is that the estimate of $11,000,000 is the wildest kind of an estimate, originally made years ago and based on calculations made by David A. Wells, of the quantity of alcohol used in the arts and sciences before any tax was put on it, but that since that was done and the cost so enormously increased other and cheaper substitutes have been necessitated in order to meet foreign competition with untaxed spirits, with the result that greatly inferior products have been produced. No one knows except from the claims presented what amount is used, but everyone knows that if this law were enforced the amount would be enormously increased.

The census reports for 1890 show the use of alcohol by wholesalers and manufacturers to have been 5,425,791 proof gallons, and from this must be deducted the wood alcohol product before any definite conclusion can be reached, so that a fair assumption is that two and one-half million dollars will represent the full amount and that the entire rebate provided for has been claimed to date. In a letter from the present Commissioner himself, in 1887, he says:

I would not venture to say that the quantity so used was greater than 5,000,000 gallons.

Directly bearing upon this question, I wish to quote from a report made to the Fiftieth Congress extracts from letters of Emil Kipper and David A. Wells. Mr. Kipper says:

Whatever the amount, there is no question that the consumption of alcohol used in the arts has been immensely reduced by the high tax, and the best illustration of what would be used in the arts if the duty were removed is contained in D. A. Wells's letter of October 11, 1887, who, as special commissioner of revenue, has a more intimate knowledge of the whole subject than any other known source.

A result of removing the tax on spirits, never touched upon by either party up to this date, is this: The reduced cost of spirits on abolition of tax will so enlarge the industrial field that a whole class of products now limited would be revived, not only for home consumption, but for export, and this would be immediately felt by the agriculturist in increased demand for grain. It is fair to state that the increased consumption of spirits for industrial purposes were the tax repealed would foster and benefit so numerous channels of trade that the most sanguine estimates now suggested will be greatly exceeded.

You have probably noticed that the present tax aids the combination of distillers in their efforts to increase the price of spirits to the detriment of the consumer, since there is five times as much capital employed to pay the tax as would be required to produce the spirits were the tax repealed. A distiller may have sufficient capital to produce the spirits, but he needs quintuple the amount to pay duty and conduct his distillery business.

Since the whisky combination the price of alcohol has been advanced from $1.98 to $2.13, deducting the tax. This would show an advance of 50 per cent in price of spirit, exclusive of tax.

The board appointed to advise the Government in regard to the methylation of spirits for use in the arts stated that by charcoal filtration and subsequent distillation the wood alcohol could be separated from the methylated, and therefore reported adversely as to the introduction of a methylated act similar to the one in force in England.

In reply to this I inclose an abstract of the German law, where all the difficulties have now been overcome and the revenue protected.

The German law went into effect last October, and if any interest is felt I can procure the details and probably opinions as to its working effect. A perusal of the abstract, as it seems to me, will convince the authorities that it would be as practicable in the United States as in Germany.

Mr. Wells says:

NORWICH, CONN., October 11, 1887.

DEAR SIR: * * * Prior to the imposition of any taxes on distilled spirits, or before the war, I am of the opinion that at least 33 per cent of the whole product of the country, which in 1860 was probably about 90,000,000 proof gallons, was consumed in the arts and industries. * * *

For a period of nearly a half century previous to 1860 the manufacture of spirits in the United States had been free from all specific taxation or supervision by either the National or State Governments, and being produced mainly from Indian corn, at places adjacent to the localities where this cereal was cultivated, and to a large extent also from corn that was damaged and so otherwise unmarketable, was afforded at a very low price, the average market price in New York for the four years next preceding 1862 having been about 23 cents per proof gallon, with a minimum price during the same time of 14 cents per gallon. In Cincinnati the market price of whisky for August, 1861, was commercially reported as "closing dull" at 13 cents per gallon. The price of alcohol in New York during the period above noted ranged from 40 to 60 cents per gallon. Under such circumstances the consumption of distilled spirits in the United States previous to the war, for a great variety of purposes, had become enormous, affording a practical illustration of the curious varying relations between prices and consumption, and also of what may be considered in the light of an axiom in political economy, namely, that practically there is almost no limit to the consumption of any useful commodity, provided that through a reduction of cost or price it is brought within the purchasing power of those who desire to consume.

The excessive cheapness of alcohol also led to its most extensive use for fuel in manufacturing and in domestic culinary operations, for bathing and cleaning, for the manufacture of varnishes, vinegar, imitation wines, flavoring extracts, perfumery, patent medicines, white lead, percussion caps, hats, photographs, tobacco, and a great variety of other purposes.

The immediate effect of this imposition and rapid increase of internal taxes upon distilled spirits was a series of industrial and commercial phenomena more remarkable than anything of the kind before recorded in economic history; and yet so completely was the attention of the American people engrossed at this time in other and greater events—events affecting their very existence as a nation—that the results referred to did not so much as create a ripple in public opinion, and were barely adverted to, if noticed at all, in the columns of the public press. In short, the influence of these taxes was to entirely and rapidly revolutionize great branches of domestic industry, and in some instances to utterly destroy them.

My opinion now is that not more than 10 per cent, as a maximum, of the present product of distilled spirits in the United States is used for industrial, artistic, or medicinal purposes.

If the present tax of 90 cents per proof gallon could be reduced to 50 cents, the rate established from 1868 to 1872, I have no doubt that the use of alcohol for industrial and medicinal purposes would be very largely increased, cheapening many manufactured products, enlarging the market for the same both at home and abroad, and without occasioning any material reduction of the national revenues.

I am, yours, most respectfully, DAVID A. WELLS.

Mr. WILLIAM F. SWITZLER.

Mr. Chairman, there seem to be three parties interested in the repeal of this law. First, the whisky trust, from profit; second, the wood-alcohol trust, from the same motive, but, as I think, mistakenly; and third, the Democratic party, from principle, honestly believing in large internal revenues and low customs duties. In full accord with this idea, immediately upon the passage of the law, when manufacturers applied for regulations as required by section 61, a positive refusal was given, based upon the puerile excuse that the Department was unable to formulate regulations that would protect the Government from fraud, and this in the face of the fact that such regulations for accomplishing this object had some time before been prepared in the Department at the request of a Senator and had been submitted by him as an amendment to the bill while it was pending in the Senate.

And this, too, in the face of the further fact that such regulations had been for years and still are in daily operation for the use of either methylated spirits or pure grain alcohol free of tax in the industrial arts, etc., in Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Austria-Hungary, the Netherlands, Belgium, Spain, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Greece, Switzerland, and Portugal, with every one of which countries we are to-day competing in the manufacture of products in which alcohol is a constituent part. Is it impossible for American ingenuity and Yankee skill to do that which all these foreigners have successfully accomplished? The refusal to obey the law was couched in the following language, and the only thing that has been done by this Administration is to endeavor to secure its repeal:

SIR: Your communication of yesterday in reference to the execution of section 61 of the act of August 28, 1894, and advising me that, for the reasons therein stated, you "are unable to prepare any set of regulations which would yield adequate protection to the Government and the honest manufacturer without official supervision, which has not been provided for by Congress," is received. I have also given much attention to the subject, and have fully considered all the arguments and suggestions submitted by the parties interested in the execution of the section of the statute referred to, and have arrived at the conclusion that until further action is taken by Congress it is not possible to establish and enforce such regulations as are absolutely necessary for an effective and beneficial execution of the law.

You are therefore instructed to take no further action in the matter for the present.

Respectfully, J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

Hon. J. S. MILLER,
Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. STEELE. Does the gentleman think we could bring methylated spirits into this country without escaping taxation?

Mr. HILL. I do not see why it is not possible except under the unfriendly disposition of this Administration.

Mr. STEELE. You could bring in methylated spirits from Germany or England or any other country and take them down to the chemist, and in an hour and a half he will fix them so that they would be fit to drink.

Mr. HILL. The trouble with this bill is the indisposition of the Democratic Administration to support the law. There was a proposition submitted by the manufacturers of my State. Your Internal Revenue Commissioner said it was most feasible.

Mr. STEELE. Yet we had hearings of parties from different parts of the country, and not a single party, in my recollection, said so.

Mr. HILL. It is perfectly puerile to say that they had hearings before the committee. How could the manufacturers know that there were hearings before the committee? I, a member of Congress, in daily attendance, did not hear of it, and how could the manufacturers receive any such information?

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. EVANS. Do you think that section 61 of the Wilson bill, that is sought to be repealed, conferred on the Secretary or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue power or authority over methylated spirits?

Mr. HILL. I have this to say: These regulations could be put in force if the Ways and Means Committee in this matter had not yielded to the dictates of the Democratic Administration [loud applause], and they should have provided regulations to put it into effect rather than have this section repealed. My time is limited and I shall have to take all the rest of the time, but I think I will cover the grounds of the gentleman's question before I get through.

The date of this letter is October 6, 1894; so that it only took the Secretary of the Treasury thirty-nine days to decide not to enforce a law which was pending forty days in conference committee of the House and Senate. I have been informed that certain manufacturers of so-called bitters, who at first eagerly claimed the rebate under the law, suddenly discovered that the greatly reduced cost of their product was certain to invite an enormously increased competition in the manufacture and sale of articles of a similar kind, and that they at once became actuated by the same philanthropic motives which now prompt the whisky trust to mourn a possible loss to the revenues of the Government, so that they now appear as the most ardent and enthusiastic advocates of the repeal of the rebate law.

Mr. Chairman, it has been a surprising thing to me during the few months that I have been a member of this body to see how, even on political lines, this House and its committees have uniformly accepted the recommendations and suggestions of Department officials in framing legislation. We did finally secure a seed distribution too late for any practical use. [Laughter.] We have passed a postal bill with which many are dissatisfied, in order to keep within an income, for the cutting down of which no one on earth is so responsible as the present Postmaster-General, Mr. William L. Wilson. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] The sugar bounties voted by the last Congress are still unpaid, and Bowler reigns supreme. We have tried to humor this Democratic Administration with a revenue tariff bill, and even before we had recovered from the nausea occasioned by it they flung it back in our faces as unworthy of themselves or of us, and now demand an increase of internal-revenue taxation in place of it.

Oh, for one straight, square, outspoken, honest, manly declaration of Republican tariff principles by a House of Representatives elected by the people on that issue and on that alone! [Applause.]

This is our opportunity to say to the industries of this land, "We can and will at least stop the increase of internal-revenue taxation now, and if you stand by the party in November another Congress will enact a tariff law that will bring again to the American people the prosperity of 1892." [Applause.]

Let me give you a practical illustration of the effect of this bill upon a single industry in this country. I refer to the manufacture of hats. The cost of a proof gallon of alcohol is 15 cents. Commercial alcohol is 188° proof and is worth 28 cents. The tax on a proof gallon is $1.10 and on the commercial article is $2.07, or between 700 per cent and 800 per cent. The competing English manufacturer is allowed to use methylated spirit, or a mixture of 10 per cent of wood alcohol with 90 per cent of grain alcohol, free of tax, which costs him 30 cents. The cost of alcohol for stiffening a dozen hats thus becomes $1.25 here as against 15 cents there. Aside from this the labor cost is more than four times as much here, and the use of machinery, contrary to the prevailing idea, is far more prevalent there than here. In this country a man who works at stiffening hats gets $25 per week, whereas in Stockport, England, and in Brussels, in Belgium, he gets $6 per week. And yet the Wilson bill at the same time that it added to the cost by increased taxation here reduced the duties 15 per cent on the imported article, thus seriously handicapping the American producer. There have been more failures in the hat trade in my own district in two years under the Wilson bill, both in number and amount, than in any ten years before. The high tax has compelled the use of wood alcohol except in the finest work. Prior to 1894 wood alcohol sold at $1.40 per gallon. Immediately upon the passage of section 61 the price dropped to 70 cents, but when Mr. Carlisle refused to enforce its provisions it advanced to 90 cents—now $1.05. What our manufacturers now fear is that if this section is repealed it will go back to $1.40 as before. I said that the wood alcohol trust was urging this repeal mistakenly for their own interest. I believe that the untaxed use of methylated spirits would make a larger demand for their product than now, and I cite the following opinion of one of their own agents in support of that claim:

NEW YORK, March 11, 1896.

MY DEAR MR. MERRITT: I have your favor of the 10th. Concerning methylated grain alcohol, my opinion is that the best interests of the Government and the consumers will be obtained by following the foreign custom of adding about one-tenth of wood alcohol to the grain, making methylated spirits for commercial use. By this plan protection is afforded the Government and at the same time the necessary relief to manufacturers who are obliged to use grain alcohol. Besides this, it protects the capital already invested in the manufacture of wood alcohol in this country.

I am convinced that the cheapening of varnishes by the use of methylated spirits would increase the consumption of shellac varnish about 50 per cent, and this, I figure, would increase the demand and consumption of wood alcohol over the present basis.

It seems unwise and unjust that our Government should put such an unwarranted and enormous tax on such a necessity as grain alcohol for the arts, and the plan of methylated spirits has the benefit of a long and favorable trial in foreign countries, which our Government would do well to study.

Very truly, yours,

W. F. ARMSTRONG.

MR. CHARLES H. MERRITT,
Danbury, Conn.

Mr. Armstrong represents the New York Shellac Company, who are agents for refined wood alcohol made by F. J. Bayless & Co.

But whether this is so or not is of little moment, for there are other and graver reasons than mere profit and loss for discontinuing the use of the article in any manufacturing process where men inhale its fumes or it comes in contact with the person.

The first time that this subject was brought to my attention was upon the complaint of the employees and not of the manufacturers, and the question of profit was not considered, but only its injurious effect upon the workmen. There were submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means petitions of employees in large numbers against its use, and certificates of reputable physicians that it produced blindness and general destruction of health. If necessary such testimony could be multiplied to almost any extent, and I have personal knowledge of the truth of some of the statements made. In my judgment the use of wood alcohol should be forbidden by law in all cases where its fumes are inhaled by employees. Even the committee say on page 7 of their report that "it is poisonous and not usable as a beverage, and is, therefore, not taxed. It is not as good as grain alcohol nor so cheap as free alcohol for manufacturing purposes, but amply suffices in many cases." In that single sentence the committee have given away their whole case. "Poisonous," therefore not taxed. More expensive than free alcohol, but will answer as a substitute. If you are going to tax either, let it be the inferior, dear, and poisonous article, and give to the manufacturers of the land the best, the cheapest, and the healthiest one.

Another reason given by the committee why this law should be repealed was that the "damage to existing industries would be greater than any possible benefits which could be derived from putting section 61 in operation," and the existing industry cited is wood alcohol. I was glad to hear a leading member of the Ways and Means Committee a few days ago, when announcing his opposition to the tax on "filled cheese," declare that he never would vote to tax one industry to sustain another, and I declare to the members of this House now that, aside from carrying out Democratic methods of taxation, there is not one valid reason for refusing to enforce this law, and if repealed it will be at the insatiable demands of the wood-alcohol and whisky trust, that they may be supported at the expense of nearly 50 per cent of the other industries of this land. The wood-alcohol trust claimed before the committee that they had 100 factories in the United States employing 10,000 workmen; that they produced fifteen to twenty thousand tons of acetate of lime and 2,500,000 gallons of wood alcohol. The committee in their report have reduced the number of employees from 10,000 to 1,000, but, with an enthusiasm that knows no bounds, have increased the capital to "several million dollars"; forgetting that the entire product claimed is only $1,750,000.

As a matter of fact, there are 53 factories in the whole country, and their total product, by the census of 1890, was only $1,885,459, consisting of 11,061 tons of acetate of lime, valued at $315,430; 949,733 gallons of crude spirit, valued at $613,607, and 917,605 gallons of refined spirit, valued at $956,432.

Why, in the Fourth district of Connecticut, in hatting alone, from ten to twelve thousand men and women are employed, turning out a product of nearly $8,000,000, and the census reports show for the entire industry in this country 810 establishments, with a capital of $19,575,876, with 32,490 employees, receiving $16,319,693 in wages, and making a product of $46,107,044; and this industry, large as it is, is insignificant compared to the aggregate of industries which use either alcohol or some inferior or cheaper substitute therefor in their manufacturing processes. This is not a local question. In the single industry of fur felt hats, where once a few towns in two States monopolized the production, to-day Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri compete with each other to the benefit of the consumer and to their own advantage in the employment of their people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

To-day Chicago has the largest shoe factory in the country, Alabama fixes prices on iron and steel, Florida on cigars, and South Carolina and Georgia on cheap cotton cloth. The increase on all textile products in 1890 over 1880 was 17 per cent in New England, 52 per cent in the Middle States, 47 per cent in the West, and 144 per cent in the South. The actual center of the manufacturing industries of the United States is rapidly moving westward, and, whatever may be the significance of the fact, is located to-day a little distance south of the city of Canton, in the State of Ohio. [Laughter and applause.]

order with reference to the income tax returned last year from manufacturing and mercantile corporations, taking the highest ten only:

First Illinois	$504,000	First Missouri	$222,000
Fifth New Jersey	462,000	Connecticut	200,000
Third Massachusetts	297,000	First Pennsylvania	186,000
Twenty-third Pennsylvania	291,000	First California	106,000
Second New York	235,000	First Ohio	97,000

And though adding the returns from individual manufacturers and merchants would make some slight change in the order, it would not wrest the supremacy from the First Illinois district, so that he who votes upon this bill with the idea that he will help or hurt a single section of the country only will make a very great mistake.

Another peculiar feature of this whole thing is that, while it seems to be impossible under a Democratic Administration to frame regulations for the use of the American product, there is no trouble whatever in regard to the foreign article, and, while we are taxing our own citizens 700 per cent. under section 22 of the same bill, we are permitting foreign alcohol to be imported, used in manufacturing processes in this country, and exported again, all free of duty, so that the same man can manufacture for foreign trade with foreign alcohol at 28 cents a gallon, and for the American consumer he must pay $2.35 a gallon, and yet a Republican Congress is seriously asked to vote for such a thing as that as protection to American industry and to help enlarge the market for American farmers' grain products. But even worse than this is shown by the testimony of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, of Bridgeport, Conn., that before section 61 was enacted "alcohol was withdrawn from distillery warehouses in the United States, shipped in bond to Canada to be used under their liberal laws in the manufacture of fulminate of mercury, and said fulminate of mercury subsequently returned to the United States, thus enabling Canada to build up a prosperous industry at the expense of this country. Is not this Administration satisfied with the absolute surrender by the Wilson bill of the markets of the United States to the natural products of Canada that they should now demand such legislation as to encourage and strengthen her manufacturing industries also?

It is also claimed that the Government might as well have the revenue, because if the law is enforced and the tax rebated the few manufacturers and not the many employees or the still larger body of consumers would get the benefit of it. I want to say that this same cry, that the manufacturer was getting all of the benefits of protection and the workingman little or none, was what elected Grover Cleveland in 1892, and that it actually needed the Wilson bill to convince by a hard and bitter experience that no greater mistake was ever made, and to-day the most enthusiastic and almost uncontrollable advocates of Presidential candidates are those very men who are now, without regard to any other issues, demanding protection to American labor.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS], who submitted this report, is four years behind the times, and while his statement may be and undoubtedly is entirely true that the consumer would get no benefit from a reduction of the tax upon the Blue Grass whisky for which his State is famous, it is absolutely wrong in its relation to the useful industries of the country.

There is no business man, no manufacturer upon the floor of this House, and no man anywhere who is at all familiar with the course of trade, who does not know that in the keen competition of business for the past few years in all lines of staple industries every improvement in processes of manufacture and every reduction of cost instantly inures to the benefit of the consumer and that the reduced prices are fixed long before the goods are made, and based wholly upon an estimated cost from which percentages for possible economies are taken off rather than margins for profit added, as in former years. I challenge contradiction of this statement.

Because one hat manufacturer who retails his own product at a fixed price, and certain dealers in whisky, under the guise of "bitters," testified that the repeal or enforcement of this law would make no change in their prices to consumers, is no proof whatever against the general proposition that all staple products of manufacture are constantly cheapening to the consumer in precise proportion to the cost of production. I can take the members of this House into the largest hat factories of Philadelphia, Orange, Brooklyn, Yonkers, South Norwalk, Danbury, Fall River, and Haverhill and show them thousands of dozens of hats being made and sold to-day on less profit per dozen than is represented by the increased cost of alcohol alone under the Wilson bill. And yet this Republican House is asked to unite with a Democratic Senate and Administration and put upon these men taxes which the law says shall be remitted, forsooth, that the Canadian lumber and farm products may come into free competition with Maine and Michigan, and so assist in keeping the Dingley revenue bill, which they refuse to vote for, pigeonholed in the Senate; for bear in mind this is not a question whether public money shall be given to home industries, but rather the reverse, whether home industries and the American consumer shall be taxed, to give freer competition to the foreign manufacturer. And yet this committee talks of this rebate as "the bestowal of a bounty to one set of industries to enable them to destroy another." Bounty, indeed! The bounty in the Wilson bill is given to Canada and Great Britain, and that they leave untouched, but hasten to load upon an American industry, almost crushed now, an additional burden of $2,750,000, or $1.10 extra cost upon 2,500,000 dozen of fur hats, to say nothing of far greater interests involved in other lines. I can see the bounty in permitting bourbon whisky to remain in bond eight years without payment of the tax, and making an allowance for leakage and shrinkage while it improves by age, but when a manufacturer advances the tax and only gets it back when he proves that the pure spirit has been used in an honest industry, I can see no bounty there.

This proposed legislation is in utter violation of every Republican principle, and, however strongly urged by a bankrupt Democratic Administration, should be opposed by every Republican here, as it has already been by nearly every one in the Senate. [Applause on the Republican side.]

This is not a question of individual members of Congress being affected by the action of the House, though in the aggregate, perhaps, that is more important than the geographical location of a Presidential nominee. It is simply and solely a question of the principles of taxation. If the Republican party is right in its teachings, its members here can not vote for the unconditional repeal of section 61. If free trade is the best policy, this is a firm step in that direction, and a long step in advance of even the English system. As for me, I am ready to tax alcohol when used for drinking purposes, as I would wine or any other luxury, but I can see no more reason for taxing alcohol when used purely for manufacturing and the arts than for putting 700 per cent tax on the grain from which it is made, or on pig iron, leather, wool, or any other domestic product. Rather than reverse the principle involved in section 61, I would vote to abolish the entire internal-revenue system, with its spies and detectives and the infamous brood of parasites that have fastened themselves upon our courts because of it, and by so abolishing it take the Government out of the rum business and dissolve forever its unholy partnership with the whisky trust. [Loud applause.]

Wood alcohol, the poisonous product of the wild woodlands of the country, is distilled and put upon the market free of tax, while the corn of the South and the wheat and rye of the West, the laborious products of honest toil, are punished by putting upon grain alcohol the largest tax known to our laws.

Mr. Chairman, this House will soon adjourn and its members will engage in the discussion of the issues of a national election. One of the two dominant, overshadowing questions will be again, as it was in 1894, protection or free trade. Pass this unconditional repeal and every Republican speaker's mouth is stopped and every argument gone, for deeds speak louder than words and recorded votes outweigh fair promises. I vote for free American alcohol in the industrial arts and sciences, and for giving it at least an equal chance with the foreign product.

Where is the Republican that can dispute the justice of that vote? Where is the Republican that can explain to his constituents a vote for the exact reverse of this? On the one side is a free-trade President, a Democratic Senate, and a minority of this House; on the other the disheartened and discouraged industries of this country, and joined with them the thousands of men and women who are only asking the poor privilege of an equal opportunity to compete on equal terms with the labor of other lands. On which side will this great Republican majority be found?

Mr. Chairman, no man can hold in higher esteem than I do the distinguished gentlemen who compose the Ways and Means Committee of this Republican House. Charged with the grave responsibility of providing revenue for the maintenance of the Government, at the same time they must guard with jealous care the welfare of that magnificent system of manufactures which under Republican protection has made the United States the leading industrial nation of the world. To the one solitary, lonely representative of those interests upon that committee, my colleague [Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut], who through all this session has stood for right and justice in the consideration of this bill I have only words of hope and courage. To the six lawyers upon that committee who represented the Democratic party I extend my congratulations upon the ability and skill by which they have, in this report, won a strong indorsement for the underlying principles of the Wilson bill, for which they were responsible. [Applause.] To the ten remaining lawyers who make up the balance of the Republican committee I have this to say: If the unconditional repeal of section 61 is a foretaste of what you have in store for the industries of this land when the Republican hosts shall have marched again to a hard-won victory in November next, see to it that you write it clear and large upon the party platform at St. Louis on June 16 that high internal-revenue and low customs duties will be the guiding principle of the next campaign, for an honest declaration is better far than any false pretense. But if you would have us fight again the battle which we fought and won in 1894, send back this bill to the Democratic Administration from whence it came, or, better still, amend it to an enforcement on protection lines, and from each so-called doubtful State every Republican nominee, from governor down to sheriff, will once more give to you a true Republican greeting, as they do now. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill H. R. 3282, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 4910) granting a pension to Cyrus Thomas; when the Speaker signed the same.

MARTIN VS. LOCKHART.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Elections No. 2 to present the report in the contested-election case of Martin vs. Lockhart, from the Sixth Congressional district of North Carolina. The majority report in favor of seating Mr. Martin, the contestant, and I ask that the report be printed. I presume there ought to be a time fixed when the minority shall present their views if they desire to do so, as the day of adjournment is probably near at hand.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] intends, I believe, to prepare a statement of the views of the minority, and I ask that he be allowed until Saturday to do so.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. That is too late.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the views of the minority may be filed on or before Saturday next.

Mr. KEM. I object, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter.]

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I suggest that the minority file their views by Thursday.

Mr. MAGUIRE. My reason for naming Saturday was that the gentleman from Texas is to be absent for two days; but if the chairman will make it Friday, that will probably be satisfactory.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Very well.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Friday is agreed upon between the chairman of the committee and myself, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Then, if there be no objection, the minority will be allowed until Friday to present their views.

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM] objects. [Laughter.]

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman is preventing a proceeding which would probably tend to seat a member of his own party.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM] objects.

Mr. KEM. If it be in order, I would like to reply to the gentleman at this time.

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order.

Mr. EVANS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LEISENRING, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LEFEVER, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BRUMM, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. RUSSELL of Georgia, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SPERRY, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BULL, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. TRACEY, for ten days, on account of important business.

The motion of Mr. EVANS was then agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SEWELL. I present the memorial of Chapter II, Colonial Dames of America, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the adoption of Senate bill No. 3087, to incorporate the National Society of Colonial Dames of America, which is now before the Senate, for the reason that the purposes and aims of the original society as set forth in its charter and constitution are similar to those proposed in the bill now pending. The memorial is brief, and in view of the fact that it comes from some of the most highly respected ladies in the country, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

2007 DE LANCEY PLACE, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the Fifty-fourth Congress:

GENTLEMEN: Mrs. George McClellan, president; Mrs. Thomas Balch, first vice-president; Mrs. Richard McCall Cadwalader, second vice-president; Mrs. George Brinton Phillips, secretary; Mrs. N. Chapman Mitchell, treasurer; Miss Elise Willing Balch, Mrs. James Bowden, Miss Anne Sophia Penn Chew, Miss Guilielma Penn-Gaskel Hall, Mrs. George Woolsey Hodge, Mrs.

Charles B. Penrose, managers; Mrs. Henry J. Hancock, historian; Miss Ursula Rose Boudinot, Miss Mary Swift Buckley, Miss Katharine Buckley, Miss Elizabeth Brown Chew, Mrs. Brinton Coxe, Miss Charlotte Drifton Coxe, Mrs. Horace Binney Hare, Miss Emelyn Storey McClellan, Mrs. Robert Morris, Miss Lucie Marshall Morris, Mrs. Thomas Fleming Parker, Miss Sallie Roberts Smith, Mrs. John T. Spencer, Mrs. James William Wallace, Mrs. William Herbert Washington, Mrs. Richard Tilghman, Mrs. Theodore Wright, Miss Elizabeth Cox Binney, officers and managers of Chapter II, Philadelphia, of The Colonial Dames of America, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of New York, respectfully and earnestly protest against the adoption of Senate bill 3087, entitled, "To incorporate the National Society of Colonial Dames of America," for the reasons following:

I. "The Colonial Dames of America," of which the above named constitute "Chapter II, Philadelphia," was organized May 23, 1890, as a national society, and on April 13, 1891, was duly incorporated under the name of "The Colonial Dames of America," with power to form chapters in the several States.

II. Prior to the incorporation of this, our society, no other society of similar name had been incorporated; and the purposes and aims of this original society, as set forth in its charter and constitution, are similar to those proposed in the bill now pending before your honorable bodies. Its members are residents of all parts of the United States.

III. The adoption of the same name as that of the original society by the corporation proposed to be organized by the pending bill will create difficulty, confusion, and conflict, and will inflict grave injury upon the rights and interests of the society which originated and first used the name "The Colonial Dames of America."

Your honorable bodies are therefore earnestly requested to refuse your sanction to this bill.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report back with amendments the bill (S. 1552) for the further prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia, and I submit a report thereon. I desire to state that this is the bill known as the vivisection bill, concerning which there is a great deal of controversy and a very marked difference of opinion, both on the part of physicians and the general public.

I wish to ask in this connection that as a part of the report a lengthy hearing held before the Committee on the District of Columbia may be printed as an appendix. I desire further to request that 2,000 additional copies of the report may be printed for the use of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is proper I should state in this connection, so as to correct a misapprehension that is being very industriously circulated, that the bill does not propose to prohibit vivisection, but that it proposes to restrict and regulate it according to law, and that is all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

FRANCIS E. HOOVER—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the bill (H. R. 1094) granting a pension to Francis E. Hoover and the veto message of the President of the United States, to submit a favorable report in the case, and to recommend that the bill be passed, notwithstanding the objections of the President of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill, with the accompanying message and report, will be placed on the Calendar.

MRS. WILLIAM LORING SPENCER.

Mr. GALLINGER. Some time ago the Senate passed a bill granting a pension of $75 a month to Mrs. William Loring Spencer. The House of Representatives did not act upon the Senate bill, but passed a House bill granting a pension to the same claimant at the rate of $30 per month. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to report back the bill (H. R. 4020) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. William Loring Spencer with an amendment, making the amount correspond to that passed in the Senate bill, and as it will take but a moment to pass the bill, such a measure having been once passed by the Senate, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "seventy-five"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place upon the pension roll the name of Mrs. William Loring Spencer, as widow of George E. Spencer, late colonel First Alabama Cavalry Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $75 per month in lieu of the pension which she now receives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. PALMER, and Mr. BAKER were appointed.

HENRY R. WALTON.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1421) for the relief of Henry R. Walton, administrator of John Walton, deceased, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Walton, administrator of John Walton, deceased, be referred to the Court of Claims for findings of fact under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, such findings to include any facts bearing upon the question of loyalty or disloyalty of said John Walton during the war; any appraisement made in behalf of the Government of a part or the whole of property appropriated for the use of the Army; what, if any, compensation has been paid therefor, and to whom and for what the value of real property when appropriated and the deterioration thereof when surrendered at the close of the war, together with the value to said John Walton of fencing, fruit trees, and fruit, and report to the Senate in accordance with section 14 of said act.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 8469) to authorize the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company of Maryland to enter the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 8672) conferring jurisdiction upon the supreme court of the District of Columbia, having general equity jurisdiction, to decree the sale, lease, or surrender of any lease of real estate in said District belonging to insane persons, for purpose of reinvestment, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 4910) granting a pension to Cyrus Thomas; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. CULLOM. Now, if there is no further morning business——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask that the resolution heretofore reported by me from the Committee on Rules be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate, as a part of the morning business, the resolution of the Senator from Oregon, coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, to amend Senate Rules Nos. XXV and XXXIII, relating to standing committees and the privilege of the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The resolution has been read. I ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to hear it read.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I can state in a word the proposed changes.

Mr. CULLOM. It is reported from the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is reported from the Committee on Rules unanimously.

The change in one rule is simply to make the standing and select committees conform as to number of members and name with the changes that have been made during the present session.

The proposed changes in the other rule relate to the privilege of the floor. One amendment is as follows: The rule as it stands today provides that the officers of the Senate shall be admitted to the floor. The change proposes to admit officers and employees of the Senate "when in the actual discharge of their official duties."

The next suggested amendment proposes to admit ex-Sergeants-at-Arms of the Senate to the privilege of the floor.

The third and last proposed amendment is to admit the chief deputy of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, and the deputy of the Clerk of the House.

Those are the changes suggested by the Committee on Rules, and those are all.

Mr. HILL. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon whether line 24, on page 6, should not read:

Ambassadors and ministers of the United States.

It simply says "ministers of the United States."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Undoubtedly the words "ambassadors and" should come in preceding the word "ministers." I ask that that change be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MRS. ELEANOR CARROLL POE.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 804) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor Carroll Poe, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted insert "seventy-five"; and the House agree to the same.

J. H. GALLINGER,
JOHN L. MITCHELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
HENRY F. THOMAS,
F. C. LAYTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

ADA J. SCHWATKA.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 710) granting a pension to Ada J. Schwatka, widow of the late Lieut. Frederick Schwatka, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted insert "twenty"; and the House agree to the same.

REGULATIONS CONCERNING FILLED CHEESE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8008.

Mr. CULLOM. If it is in order to say a word on the subject, I will state that there are, I understand, three or four conference reports now ready to be acted upon by the Senate. I have one in charge that has been before the Senate three or four times, and it is on a long bill, needing some attention by the Executive when it gets to him, if it ever does. There are also the conference reports upon the sundry civil bill and the Indian appropriation bill ready for action.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me make a suggestion, if I may be permitted to do so.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me the Senate ought to dispose of these conference reports before taking up any disputed question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not agree with the Senator on that point; but I will state that if the Senate, by unanimous consent, will agree to take up the bill defining cheese immediately after the disposition of the bond bill I shall be content. I do not want to be struggling here for its consideration.

Mr. CULLOM. I am entirely friendly to the Senator's bill and I want to see it passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that that arrangement may be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PEFFER. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request is to proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read by title.

Mr. BERRY. What is going to be done with the conference report?

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to have it considered immediately.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senate will by unanimous consent agree that the bill in respect to cheese shall come up after the bond bill, as it is called, is disposed of, I shall give way at once.

Mr. HARRIS. We can make no agreement about the bill. The Senator will get it up by a vote of the Senate when it comes up.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I hope the Senate will take up the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the motion of the Senator from Ohio to proceed to the consideration of the bill, which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8008) defining cheese, and also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of filled cheese.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to a point of order. The conference report has precedence over the motion of the Senator from Ohio, if the Senator from Illinois presents it.

Mr. SHERMAN. A motion to take it up has precedence.

Mr. MILLS. It does not make any difference, the question of precedence governs in every phase of the matter. If the Senator from Illinois presents his conference report it has precedence over all other motions, at least over all ordinary parliamentary motions.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is simply in regard to a motion to proceed to the consideration of a conference report.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not sure whether I have the right of way or not under the ruling as against the motion of the Senator from Ohio. However, I suppose I have a right to make the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is unable to hear the remark of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. ALDRICH. I submit that all discussion is out of order, and that the motion of the Senator from Ohio is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate was proceeding by unanimous consent. The Chair will submit to the Senate the motion of the Senator from Ohio. The Chair has no doubt that that motion is now in order. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio to proceed to the consideration of House bill 8008.

Mr. SHERMAN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], but I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. I vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], and therefore reserve my vote.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Iowa can transfer his pair to my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE]. I should vote "nay," if I were not paired.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. CHILTON (when Mr. MARTIN's name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] is necessarily absent, and is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEAR. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and vote "yea."

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]; but I see that he has entered the Chamber, and I vote "yea."

Mr. THURSTON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]; but as I understand this is not a political question, I desire to record my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CARTER (after having voted in the affirmative). Being paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] and observing that he has not voted, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 14; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8008) defining cheese, and also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of filled cheese.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I am advised by wire of sickness in my family, which makes it necessary for me to leave immediately for home. As I probably can not be in the Senate again, if final adjournment is to take place within the next few days, I ask unanimous consent for three or four minutes of time in which I may state my position as to two or three measures which may be brought before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. THURSTON. I merely wish, Mr. President, to state my position. As it will be impossible for me to vote upon these measures which may come up between now and the date of adjournment, I shall content myself with a mere statement as to how I would vote upon the subjects if present.

The bill called up by the Senator from Ohio and now pending I should desire to support. The joint resolution which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has given notice that he would call up, proposing an amendment to the Constitution so as to provide for the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people, I should desire to support. The bill which the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] has given notice he wishes to call up, reported from the Judiciary Committee, defining contempt of court, making a classification between direct and indirect contempt, I should support, and had proposed to move an amendment thereto, giving to a party charged with an indirect contempt of court the absolute right of trial by jury upon his request.

The bill which has lately been under consideration by the Senate prohibiting the issuance of bonds except by further consent or direction of Congress I should have supported had it come on for a vote at a time in the session when reasonable opportunity would have been given for legislation by Congress. I desire to say simply that at this late hour of the session, with the apparent impossibility of any further action on the part of Congress, I believe it would create altogether too great a danger for us now to withdraw from the Administration any power of providing for a monetary crisis in the affairs of Government between the present time and the next session of Congress.

Therefore, while I had desired to support the measure if it could have been considered earlier in the session, and while I may desire to support a similar measure at the next session of Congress, I do not believe it is wise to jeopardize the credit of the United States at this time by the passage of the bill; and were I present when the vote is called upon that measure, I should feel compelled to waive my own individual views and vote for what I consider to be a temporary necessity by placing the credit of this Government beyond all question and beyond all attack.

With these statements, in order that the Senate may know my position and that the Senator with whom I am paired may be in a situation perhaps to vote on some of these measures, I shall be content.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 265) extending relief to Indian citizens, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it does not lead to any debate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think it will lead to no debate. The bill has been read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 265) extending relief to Indian citizens, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the bill be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill as amended on the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BATE. That seems to be a very important bill. It seems to affect many Indians and to levy taxes on the property of those Indians. I ask that it may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to the request of the Senator from South Dakota. House bill 8008 will be proceeded with.

Mr. DUBOIS. I offer an amendment to the pending bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following as a new section:

In order to raise revenue to meet the various expenses of the Government the sum of 75 cents shall be levied and collected, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, on every barrel of lager beer, ale, and porter manufactured in the United States in addition to the tax now imposed thereon.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has called the attention of the country a number of times to the necessity of raising revenue in order to meet the current expenses of the Government. He has stated that it would be a disgrace, an infamy, if we did not do this, and he has said that the Senate would be especially censurable. But when he is pinned down he proposes to provide revenue only through the Dingley bill—an unjust, an unfair, a sectional measure which can not pass the Senate; and no one knows that it can not pass the Senate better than the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment which I propose will bring in a revenue of about $25,000,000 a year, almost enough money to make up the difference between the receipts and the expenditures. It will not hurt anybody in particular. It might be of some disadvantage politically in certain sections of the country, but if it imposes any additional burdens upon any class, those burdens will fall on gentlemen who have accumulated large fortunes in the manufacture of beer. I submit that it is fairer that these gentlemen should pay a little more into the Treasury instead of that the poor farmer and miner and sheep raiser should be compelled to pay it.

When the Senator from Ohio or any other Senator on this floor undertakes to censure the men sitting upon this side of the Chamber who voted against the Dingley bill, he loses sight of one very important fact. We represent constituencies which are in favor of the free coinage of silver, and yet in order to vote for the Dingley bill you would have compelled us first to vote down the substitute for it which provided for the unlimited coinage of silver. It was a trap, transparent and unfair. At that very time the silver substitute which we had passed through the Senate as a substitute for the bond bill was being considered in the House. The silver substitute for the bond bill was defeated in the House, as everyone knew it would be; and we silver men in this Chamber were called upon to vote against a free-coinage bill in the Senate at the same time, and we were asked to cast this vote against silver in order to reach a bill which was unfair and unjust to our own people.

It is utterly out of the question to talk about passing the Dingley bill. If the Senator from Ohio is willing to raise revenue by fair measures, the gentlemen on this side who voted against considering the Dingley bill will meet him fairly. If he is not willing to do that, or if the Senators on this side of the Chamber are not willing to consider a fair revenue bill, I insist that they shall quit posing before the country as the only patriots, as the only ones who are anxious to raise revenue for the Government.

We stand here ready to join in any proper method to raise revenue, but we will not allow a sectional tariff bill like the Dingley bill, which protected the Eastern manufacturer amply but gave no protection to the South or the West, to pass. There has not been a Senator on this side of the Chamber who has combated the arguments presented by the gentlemen who voted against the bill, showing that it was a sectional, unjust, unworthy, unmeritorious measure. They state on every occasion that it is not a proper bill. We state on the other hand that it is very improper, very sectional, and unjust to our part of the country. We state in addition that a protective tariff bill without free coinage will not avail, and insist that a protective tariff measure and a free-coinage bill should be passed together at the same time.

I offer the amendment which will raise $25,000,000, and state that it will not raise the price of beer to the consumer; it may diminish a trifle the great profits of the manufacturers.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not intend to answer the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. So far as a tax on beer is concerned, I might in a proper revenue bill, if it were pending before us, vote for levying such a tax, although I think the article of beer, yielding us a revenue now of over $30,000,000, has a pretty heavy tax on it for an article which is very useful and comfortable. I do not know whether I would vote for it, because I think that the consumers of beer pay already a very large sum.

But I rose more to appeal to the Senate to allow this bill to pass. It is supported, I believe, by the farmers of our country—North and South, East and West, and if it is passed it will prevent filled cheese or any other article or compound made out of lard and other materials from being sold for cream cheese. It is to prevent fraud. It seems to me it is one of those simple propositions which ought to meet with the assent of the Senate without being embarrassed with these various amendments.

Without going at all into the question of the Dingley bill, or any other tariff bill, or any other measure whatever, for I do not like to do that, I will state that I would vote against the Dingley bill as an amendment to the pending bill. The friends of this bill must see that the only way they can give this relief to the farmers of our country is to vote down all amendments. This is not in the broad sense a revenue bill. It is not expected that the bill will furnish more than a half million dollars, or something like that, a year. The precise amount we can not tell. It is proposed as a relief bill, as the oleomargarine bill was passed; and the oleomargarine act has proved to be a great success, satisfactory to the manufacturers of oleomargarine and satisfactory to all who were in favor of the bill. It has worked very well. But I do not want to embarrass the pending bill by a general question of taxation. I therefore move to lay upon the table the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Ohio will allow me to ask him a question before he does that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. If the amendment shall be agreed to and the additional tax of 75 cents upon a barrel of beer shall be passed into a law, will the tax, then, upon the alcohol contained in the lager beer be more than half so high as the present tax imposed upon all other alcoholic beverages?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not a competent judge. I know that in whisky there is about one-half alcohol. I know that in beer it is said to be from 3 to 5 per cent. Therefore it would take an enormous tax to make the tax on beer equivalent to the tax on whisky.

Mr. HARRIS. I refer to the alcohol contained in those beverages, and I state as a fact that even if 75 cents shall be added to the present tax on beer, it will fall very far short, I may almost say immeasurably short, of the tax on other alcoholic drinks.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to go into the question as to the difference between the tax on whisky and the tax on beer. They both yield very large incomes. The tax on whisky at a dollar a gallon produced over $100,000,000. The tax on beer yields us $30,000,000, and I do not want to disturb those taxes. We can provide other taxes. I move that the amendment be laid upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to lay upon the table the amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

Mr. MILLS and Mr. DUBOIS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARTER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I do not know how he would vote on this question. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS (when Mr. SMITH's name was called). I announce the pair of the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PUGH. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] has been in the Chamber during the roll call, and I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN. I announce my pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ALDRICH. I call attention to the fact that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], who is paired with my colleague [Mr. WETMORE], has voted. I suppose he did so inadvertently.

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the negative). I beg to state, in response to the suggestion of the senior Senator from Rhode Island, that if he regards this as a political question I will, of course, withdraw my vote.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no doubt that my colleague, if present, would vote "yea" upon this question.

Mr. BACON. I will state that my agreement with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] is that upon matters not political we are at liberty to vote in our discretion; and I added in my former statement that if the senior Senator from Rhode Island would say in behalf of his colleague that he would regard this as a political question, of course I would withdraw my vote.

Mr. ALDRICH. It has certainly been made so by the vote, and I should say it is a political question. Senators upon the other side——

Mr. BACON. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CARTER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know what notice the Chair has of a pair with my colleague [Mr. MANTLE].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks no such announcement has been made. If a pair has been announced with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE] it has escaped the attention of the Chair.

Mr. CARTER. Understanding that my colleague [Mr. MANTLE] is paired generally with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and the pair with the junior Senator from Virginia having been transferred to some other Senator, I desire to protect my colleague by transferring to him my pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. I desire to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON. It is proper to state that the transfer of the pair of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] was made because I was assured that he was in agreement with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. I counseled with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] in regard to the matter, who assured me that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE] would vote in the negative, and hence I arranged the transfer of the pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] to another Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—25.

So the Senate refused to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

Mr. SHERMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VILAS. I desire to make a single remark on this question before the vote is taken.

Mr. DUBOIS. Debate is not in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is in order.

Mr. VILAS. I addressed the Chair before any name was called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin addressed the Chair at the moment the roll call commenced.

Mr. VILAS. I addressed it before any name was called.

Mr. DUBOIS. I suggest that the roll call has commenced.

Mr. COCKRELL. Debate is not out of order until there is an answer.

Mr. GALLINGER. There has been no response.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the Senator from Wisconsin addressed the Chair just at the moment and before a name was responded to. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I wish to make only a very few remarks on this subject. If Senators choose to adopt a tax on beer because they desire to kill this most meritorious measure designed to prevent the continued perpetration of injurious and shameful fraud upon a class of citizens at least as deserving of legislative consideration as any other, then to add this measure will undoubtedly effect the result. It is perfectly certain there can be no question that we can not expect to convert this bill, designed only to impose a tax upon filled cheese for a limited and special end, into a general bill for the raising of revenue; and if any general bill for the raising of revenue were thus to be framed we know it would not be passed at the present session of Congress.

Therefore this is a skillful scheme, if that be the object of those who vote for a tax upon beer, to defeat utterly and entirely this, as I said, most meritorious measure, in my opinion.

But if this be regarded as a deliberate expression of the judgment of the Senate as to whether there should be a tax upon beer, if that be the question which is now being considered by Senators, I desire to say a few words. I shall not detain the Senate, because I will not contribute to the purpose of defeating this bill by any lengthy argument.

But I desire to say with reference to the tax imposed upon beer, first, that the tax now charged for beer is the same per barrel that was put upon it when the necessities of war first taxed that article which, by the usage of so large a portion of our people, is one almost of necessity, like an article of food. The tax then laid upon beer was but little more than half the same percentage of tax it is now, because at that time beer was worth and sold in the markets for almost twice what it sells for now, if I am correctly informed in respect to it.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question right on that point.

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I am told that the manufacturers of beer practically dispense with hops and barley, and consequently they are making it for very much less, although it is very injurious. They are making beer with much more profit. It costs them but a small percentage of what it formerly cost. I should like to know, if the Senator represents a city where they manufacture a great deal of beer, whether the manufacturers have relieved themselves of the tax of using hops and barley. If they have they can stand this tax.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Nevada knows, perhaps, quite as much as I do and a good deal more in respect to making beer or of the recipe which is used by beer makers. I know nothing of it, but I understand that the beer of the large makers of beer is made in the most careful manner of the most genuine material—barley and hops—and is as useful and healthy a beverage, decently and reasonably taken, as it is pleasant on a hot day; and that is about the only time I am in the habit of drinking it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. Mr. President——

Mr. VILAS. I will listen to my colleague, but I can not spend my time on these side remarks with the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I understand that the manufacturers of beer are required to make oath as to the ingredients of the beer. I think they are honorable men.

Mr. VILAS. I am not discussing the question of the manufacture of beer or whimsical suggestions of that kind. I call attention to the fact that the percentage of tax now charged upon this beverage is very much greater than that which was laid upon it by the necessities of war. It has never been diminished or removed since the war time, and it is a tax that must be paid by the consumer. Whatever, from morality or otherwise, you will think of that, I care not, but the truth is that the consumers who pay this tax are, in fact, the large body of laboring, hard-working, wage-earning classes of our communities. You put this charge upon them when you increase the tax on beer.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] asked what the proportion of alcohol is in beer. What consequence is it? We are not taxing alcohol by the proportionable percentage in which it is found in different articles in the world. We are taxing liquors for the purpose of raising enormous revenues from them. We are holding a tax upon beer even now as we have held it through all the period of peace, at the same nominal specific rate, but at a much greater precentage than in time of war.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will not deny that our policy has been and is to tax alcohol which is contained in those luxuries known as beverages, and it applies as well to beer as it does to whisky or to any other article that contains alcohol.

Mr. VILAS. It is taxed in other articles into which it enters only because it happens to be in a certain sense a raw material of which those articles are composed, and it pays its tax as alcohol and not as a percentage of something else.

I do not desire to spend any time about it, as I said. I point to these two single facts, and if Senators choose to put a tax upon beer under the circumstances, the whole measure of the proposed act, in its effect grossly injurious and wrong to a class of people who are little deserving of being singled out for taxation, ought to be understood.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, this is really a ludicrous situation. All the Senators on the other side of the Chamber are censured almost daily because they will not vote to raise revenue. Some of us on this side of the Chamber are censured because we will not vote to raise revenue. The Senate by a majority vote affirms that it will vote revenue by placing a tax on beer. Senators on this side and some on the other side object. They say in substance we desire to raise revenue, but insist that the minority, who have some peculiar notions and who desire to make some political capital for themselves, shall determine the method of raising revenue, and they censure the majority because the majority will not submit to the dictation of the minority. They are out of patience with the majority and will not consent to any plan except their own. If I do not state the situation correctly will those Senators who are in the minority state precisely whether they really desire to raise revenue, and if so, what method they suggest? It is the strangest spectacle and the most transparent attempt to make political capital for a section of the country that I have witnessed since I became a member of the Senate.

Mr. GRAY. In other words, we are all in favor of raising revenue, but opposed to the tax.

Mr. DUBOIS. We are all in favor of an increased revenue, but we must do so only in the manner in which the minority want to raise it. The consumer will not have to pay this tax. You can get beer in almost all the cities in the country now two glasses for 5 cents.

Mr. TELLER. And the consumers will not have to pay any more for it.

Mr. DUBOIS. They will not have to pay any more for the beer if this tax is levied.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I should like to ask the Senator where you can get two glasses of beer for 5 cents? [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, the question presented for the consideration of the Senate is whether we shall tax for the benefit of certain cheese manufacturers, or whether we shall tax for the benefit of the public Treasury of the United States. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] is opposed to a tax which will bring a revenue into the coffers of the Treasury and he is opposed to this bill.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator ought not to misstate my position. He knows well that there is no Senator on this floor who is more sincerely in favor of taxes to be so laid as to bring revenue into the Treasury and to put no proceeds of the taxes anywhere else except in the Treasury than I.

Mr. MILLS. Then you will not vote for this cheese bill.

Mr. VILAS. Then I will vote for this cheese bill.

Mr. MILLS. The Senator answers himself. The Senator thinks that I am doing an injustice in stating the principle so broadly. I will state that the Senator from Wisconsin is opposed to the tax—not a tax, but the tax—that will bring revenue into the Treasury now proposed to the Senate. It is admitted by everybody that the tax on beer will bring some millions of dollars into the almost empty coffers of the Treasury. It is stated by advocates of this bill who have it in charge and the distinguished and venerable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that this bill will not bring any revenue to the Treasury, or substantially that it is not a revenue bill, and is not intended as a revenue bill. That is not denied. This bill is intended to raise the price of cheese to the consumer; this bill is intended to destroy competition; this bill is intended as a burden upon the people who use food to live, and the Senator from Wisconsin is in favor of imposing that burden upon the food of poor laborers and increase the price of another kind of food for the benefit of the manufacturer, but he will not vote for a tax to increase the price of beer either to the manufacturer or the consumer and at the same time bring revenue to the public Treasury.

Mr. President, I belong to a party which declared in its national platform in 1892 that taxation for any other purpose except to bring revenue to the public Treasury was a fraud and beyond the rightful power of Congress to lay; that it was the prostitution of a constitutional power; that it was seizing a power placed in Congress by the Constitution for the purpose alone of raising revenue to support the Government.

It has been said over and over again that the taxpayer is the forgotten man. He is always the forgotten man. Here we are, grave and deliberate Senators, on both sides discussing whether this is a political question or not. Mr. President, if the power to tax for the benefit of the public Treasury alone is not a party question in this country, there never was a party question. From the beginning of our Government those who formed the party to which I belong, and to which others on this side of the Chamber belong, demanded a strict construction of the Constitution in order that its powers should not be perverted to any other purposes except that for which they were intended.

What becomes of the poor people who eat this so-called filled cheese? Have they not a right to eat filled cheese? It was once said by a distinguished leader of the Republican party that cheap things and cheap clothes were nasty. Has that become the doctrine of the Democratic party too? Are the Democratic leaders, the national representatives of the Democratic party, standing before the country and leading this great party into the woods, demanding that the power to tax shall be used to the detriment of the poor people, to increase the price of food to the poor, and admitting at the same time they do that that not one dollar of that taxation comes to the public Treasury? I am not surprised at the Senator from Ohio and Senators on the other side of this Chamber advocating this tax. They believe in using the power of taxation to build up private industries. We do not; we never have believed in it, and we have said over and over again from the foundation of our party until the present time that the power of taxation must be used for the purpose of putting money into the Treasury, and for that purpose alone.

Now, here is a beer tax. It will bring money into the Treasury. Nobody doubts it. Why shall we not vote for it? We have been admonished over and over again that the Treasury needs money. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has told us that we ought not to leave here without putting more money into the Treasury. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] offers an amendment to put twenty-five or thirty million dollars more money into the Treasury by a tax on beer; yet it is opposed upon the ground that the tax is burdensome; but the tax on food, the tax on cheese, which the poorest of our poor people have to consume, is not an objectionable tax to us, and at the same time it is admitted that that tax is for the purpose of increasing the price of other cheese, and for the purpose of extinguishing competition, and for building up private industries at the expense of the people of the country.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear this morning an official declaration from the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], speaking for his party, that the Democratic party is in favor of imposing an increased tax upon beer. That was shown not only by his speech, but by the vote just taken to-day. The Senator from Texas had charge of a tariff bill a few years ago, while in the other House, which bore his name and became rather notorious in the country. That bill did not contain an increased tax upon beer. Several times subsequent to that, in the history of this country, Democratic tariff bills have been framed; notably last year we had a bill, which was called the Gorman-Brice bill, which passed the Senate, and there was no suggestion then made that the Democratic party was in favor of increasing the tax upon beer. There has never been up to this moment any suggestion that anything of that kind was contemplated. It has been generally understood that the brewers of the country have supported the Democratic party and supported it not only by their votes but in a more substantial way, and that as a return for that support the Democratic party was opposed to increasing the tax upon beer.

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not at present.

It seems now that a change has taken place. I do not know whether it is in consequence of prospective action at Chicago, or what it may be, which has brought about this change in Democratic tactics and Democratic policies; but I am sure the people of the country will look upon this movement with a great deal of curiosity.

Mr. MILLS. Only a word. The Senator from Rhode Island states that I had charge of a bill a few years ago proposing to raise revenue to support the Government without adding any increased tax on beer. Such a tax was not then necessary. We put a tax on other articles which was sufficient. It is demonstrated now that there are not revenues enough in the public Treasury, and we have got to select something which we will tax to bring those revenues into the public Treasury. I will agree with the Senator from Rhode Island, if he prefers that to a tax on beer, to put a tax on incomes, or I will vote to put a direct tax on manufactured products which are already protected. I will select that which will bring revenue to the Government and at the same time bear as lightly as possible upon the taxpayer.

That is all I desire to say.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, coming from the Northwest and from a community of farmers, it seems to me passing strange that whenever the farmers of this country or other aggrieved classes of the community come before the Senate of the United States for protection and relief, there is always an attempt made to sidetrack them in some manner by indirect methods.

Now, what are the plain facts in this case? The facts are these, Mr. President: An industry has grown up in this country of recent years, the manufacture of filled cheese, which has operated injuriously and damaging in several directions. It has destroyed the dairy industry among the farmers of the Northwest; it has destroyed our export trade in cheese, and has been the means of deceiving the consumers of cheese to such an extent that even in the very restaurant below us here they have sold and we have eaten filled cheese as the genuine article—as full cream cheese.

The main purpose and object of this bill is not so much to raise revenue as it is to provide for honesty and integrity among the people of this country in the matter of the sale and consumption of cheese. We want, first of all, to protect the consumers of cheese so that whoever buys it, if he desires filled cheese, may know that he is getting it, and whoever desires the genuine article may know that he is getting that.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will ask the Senator whether the State of Minnesota, as a State, has attempted to suppress the sale of this objectionable cheese?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly. The State of Minnesota has passed laws to that effect, and so have Wisconsin and a great many other States; but the work of the different States can not be carried out effectively, as I know from my own experience, unless it is supplemented by legislation of the Federal Government.

The manufacture of filled cheese is carried on at the great creameries where they make butter. They have a process, derived from Denmark in the first instance, by which they separate all the cream, the butter fat, from the milk when it is brought to the creameries. The cream or butter fat is separated from the milk and made into butter. Then that milk, at these large creameries, is heated and supplied with an amount of neutral oil—oil extracted from the leaf lard of the hog—and from these ingredients the filled cheese is made. In other words, to use plain language, the butter fat or cream that is extracted from the milk is supplied by fat taken from the hog and injected into the milk by means of a jet of steam, and from that the filled cheese is made. To every 100 pounds of this skimmed milk, if I may so call it, is added 3 to 4 pounds of what they call a neutral oil. The oil is extracted from the leaf lard of the hog; by the use of a steam jet this oil is injected into and mixed with this milk, and then the two are boiled and mixed and made into this filled cheese.

The manufacturers sell this cheese unbranded and unmarked to the wholesale dealers, and sell it for what it is, but at a large profit, while the wholesale dealers have it branded and labeled in various ways to suit the tastes, the notions, and the demands of the retail trade. They brand and label it "Full-cream cheese," "Wisconsin dairy cheese," "New York full-cream dairy cheese," and other fancy names. In this way and under such colors it is passed to the retail trade, who in turn sell it to the public as genuine full-cream cheese at nearly the same price, or pretty near the same price, as genuine cheese, while it costs less than half of the genuine article in the first instance. The consumer is defrauded in a twofold way—he is deceived into buying a sham for a genuine article, and he is compelled to pay the price of genuine cheese. In other words, both his purse and his stomach are defrauded.

It costs from 4 to 5 cents a pound to manufacture filled cheese, according to the price of the skimmed milk and the lard that enters into it, while it costs from 10 to 11 cents a pound to make the genuine full-cream cheese. The wholesalers make a large profit out of it from the retailers, and the retailers make a large profit again from the consumers. There is a temptation all around to deceive, and to work it off, if I may use a slang expression, among the public as genuine cheese at full prices.

What has been the result of this filled-cheese industry that has grown up in this country within recent years? It has destroyed our cheese export trade by bringing American cheese in disrepute abroad. Our filled cheese has led them to regard all our cheese as of that kind. Let me give you some figures.

Exports of cheese from May 1 to April 30.

Practically the cheese trade has been reversed, and the quantity of cheese that we exported from New York in 1879 is now exported from Montreal, and the export from Montreal in 1896 is nearly as great as the export from New York in 1879.

In view of these facts and under these conditions it is very strange—it is the oddest thing of all—to see Senators on the other side indirectly vote in favor of filled cheese, especially when a large bulk of this fraudulent cheese is sent down South and marketed there. I wish Senators on the other side would take the time to read letters from retail dealers in the Southern States about this matter, which are incorporated in the hearings of the committee. They would then find that, aside from the cheese that is exported to foreign countries, the bulk of this sham and fraudulent cheese is sent down to the Southern States and there palmed off at full price as genuine cheese.

This is a plain, simple proposition for relief. It is, first of all, to prevent fraud and deception in trade. In the next place, it is to protect the dairy farmers of the Northwest, whose industry has been ruined by the fact that the export market has been destroyed; and the next object of the bill is to protect the consumer and honest retail dealer, so that they may all know whether they are buying a sham cheese, a lard cheese, or a real, genuine full cream cheese.

Under these circumstances, upon as plain and simple propositions as these, why should Senators seek to inject the tariff question or the silver question or party politics into this bill? Must these burning questions, at all the time afloat between the parties, be injected into every scheme of legislation that is brought into this Chamber to secure relief for the American public? But some of you come and say: "We have no right to legislate in this way." It is unconstitutional, you say. That is the old cry whenever it is attempted to protect the people. There are always some constitutional lawyers who come to the front and say: "You have no right to pass such legislation as this." Why, gentlemen, it is a principle of the common law which is older than the Constitution, and injected into it, that every man must use his property in such a way as not to injure his neighbor. We have a right to restrain and regulate every man's calling if it is of a nature which is calculated to work an injury and a damage to the public.

I want to call attention in this connection to the case of Plumley vs. Massachusetts, a case which was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. The State of Massachusetts had enacted a law prohibiting the coloring of oleomargarine so as to resemble butter.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask the Senator whether that was a State or a Federal law?

Mr. NELSON. I am coming to that, if the Senator will be patient. I said the State of Massachusetts; and if the Senator had listened he would have heard.

Mr. LINDSAY. We can not hear the Senator on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. NELSON. The State of Massachusetts enacted a law prohibiting the coloring of oleomargarine so as to resemble butter. A case was brought under that law, and it was held to be constitutional. It was finally brought to the Supreme Court of the United States and that court held that the law was clearly within the police power of the State, and was no infringement upon any principle of the Constitution of the United States. I want to read from the opinion of the court in that case; it is very apt and germane and covers one feature of this case:

> It will be observed that the statute of Massachusetts, which is alleged to be repugnant to the commerce clause of the Constitution, does not prohibit the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine, but only such as is colored in imitation of yellow butter produced from pure unadulterated milk or cream of such milk. If free from coloration or ingredient that "causes it to look like butter," the right to sell it "in a separate and distinct form and in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character" is neither restricted nor prohibited.

So in this case, Mr. President—

> It appears that oleomargarine in its natural condition is of "a light yellowish color," and that the article sold by the accused was artificially colored "in imitation of yellow butter." Now, the real object of coloring oleomargarine so as to make it look like genuine butter is that it may appear to be what it is not, and thus induce unwary purchasers who do not closely scrutinize the label upon the package in which it is contained to buy it as and for butter produced from unadulterated milk or cream from such milk. The suggestion that oleomargarine is artificially colored so as to render it more palatable and attractive can only mean that customers are deluded by such coloration into believing that they are getting genuine butter. If any one thinks that oleomargarine not artificially colored so as to cause it to look like butter is as palatable or as wholesome for purposes of food as pure butter he is, as already observed, at liberty under the statutes of Massachusetts to manufacture it in that State or to sell it there in such manner as to inform the customer of its real character.

And that is this bill.

He is only forbidden to practice in such matters a fraud upon the general public.

And that is the object of this bill.

The statute seeks to suppress false pretenses and to promote fair dealing in the sale of an article of food.

That is all this bill proposes to do, and that is the real meat of it.

It compels the sale of oleomargarine for what it really is by preventing its sale for what it is not.

Can it be that the Constitution of the United States secures to anyone the privilege of manufacturing and selling an article of food in such manner as to induce the mass of people to believe that they are buying something which in fact is wholly different from that which is offered for sale? Does the freedom of commerce among the States demand a recognition of the right to practice a deception upon the public in the sale of any articles, even those that may have become the subject of trade in different parts of the country?

That is all there is to this case. There is no use of beating around the bush. The chief object of this bill is not to raise revenue. That is only a collateral issue. The revenue features of the bill, if I may use the expression, are merely for the purpose of putting the manufacture and sale of filled cheese upon the State hook, upon the Federal hook, as it were, for the purpose of controlling and regulating the manufacture and the trade. That is all. The main issue, the main gist of the bill, is to protect the manufacturers and consumers and to enforce honesty and integrity in the manufacture, sale, and consumption of one of the chief articles of food. That is all there is of it. It is not a mere matter of revenue; it is for the purpose of putting the business under control in order that the Federal Government may have a supervision and control of the manufacturer and the dealer, and in that manner be able to protect the public against fraud and deception.

Mr. MORGAN. I should be glad to ask the Senator a question, if he will allow me.

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator says the chief object of this bill is not to raise revenue.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; certainly I did.

Mr. MORGAN. "The chief object" was the language of the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. "The chief object was not to raise revenue," was the language of the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Yes, I think so; but I will say to the Senator, and he knows it, and we all know it, that the mere matter of revenue in this bill is collateral and cuts but a small figure. The chief object is to obtain relief against fraud and deception.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to ask the Senator whether or not he is willing to put that declaration in the bill so that the Supreme Court may pass upon it?

Mr. NELSON. I put my declaration here. It is not necessary to put my personal opinion into the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I want to put that declaration in the bill.

Mr. NELSON. You can put it wherever you like. I am satisfied with the bill as it is. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I shall not take up the time of the Senate any further. I simply want to say in conclusion, as I have said at the outset, here are the farmers of the Northwest, here are the great dairy interests of the Northwest, here are the consumers, and here are the honest retail dealers and merchants everywhere asking for this relief. Why should they not have it without injecting into it either a barrel of beer or the silver dollar? The people of the United States—the farmers—can not be deceived by that. If you want to raise revenue from beer, introduce your bill in a manly way and let us have a vote upon it. If you gentlemen who are in favor of the free coinage of silver want that, let us bring that issue up; but pray do not inject all these questions into a little matter of relief that is brought in here on behalf of the farmers of the country.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], as other Senators upon this floor have done, has very candidly confessed that this is not a revenue bill; that it is not intended to raise revenue; that it is intended to suppress what they call fraud in the States.

Mr. LINDSAY. A common-law fraud.

Mr. GRAY. A common-law fraud, if you please, I think the Senator from Minnesota characterized it. Now, as it is not a revenue bill, is not intended to raise revenue, and will not raise revenue, except in such an insignificant amount as to make it unworthy of the time and attention that is being given to it on that score, the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] is an exceedingly opportune and germane one. He has introduced an amendment which unquestionably will raise revenue; and if this bill, which seems to have so many friends, will pass, as it is likely to pass, then I say let us strip the bill of the false pretenses which it seems only intended to deal with in another phase, and put upon it a revenue-raising feature which will come to the relief of the Treasury and save this Government from some of the perplexities and troubles which now environ it on every hand.

Mr. ALDRICH. If this is not a revenue bill, as the Senator agrees and as the Senator from Minnesota has agreed, and there is a general agreement on that point, then certainly the amendment of the Senator from Idaho is out of order.

Mr. GRAY. No, Mr. President.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly it is.

Mr. GRAY. The bill on its face is a revenue measure, and that is the fraud that it commits upon the American people. It is a bill, say the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Ohio, meant, conceived, framed to prevent fraud, and yet upon its face it commits a fraud upon the American people by pretending that it is an exercise of the taxing power of the United States when it is only covertly an attempt by indirection to accomplish a purpose that it is not within the power of Congress to accomplish.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator from Delaware a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Was not the same argument which the Senator is now making made on the passage of the oleomargarine bill, and has not the Supreme Court decided that that bill is constitutional and is a revenue measure?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly the same argument was made; and I expect as long as I have the honor of a seat in this Chamber to protest, as I protested against the oleomargarine bill, that it was a fraud because it was labeled a revenue bill; and when the Supreme Court come to pass upon this bill, as it did upon the oleomargarine act, they are concluded by the ostensible object of the bill being stated to raise revenue, and they can not inquire into the motives of Congress. They can not——

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. In one moment. To quote the language of the Senator from Minnesota, they say here is a bill which ostensibly upon its face and in its framework was meant to raise revenue, and however insignificant that revenue is, and however much we may suspect the motives of those who have passed it, the judicial power of the United States can not put its hands upon it and declare it unconstitutional because it is the exercise of one of the granted powers.

Mr. DAVIS. If my friend from Delaware will allow me, it is true those arguments were made as to the oleomargarine bill as they are to this, but the fact is that the oleomargarine act has produced over $10,000,000 revenue since it was enacted, and it produced last year a million and a half.

Mr. GRAY. I do not doubt that.

Mr. VEST. It was not the intention.

Mr. DAVIS. I am speaking merely of the result, and this evil assails an industry as large in its provisions as the industry of butter, out of which such results in revenue have sprung.

Mr. GRAY. I believe it to be the fact, as stated by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], that it has produced more revenue than was expected or than was intended by the act, but that does not alter the duty we owe to a measure of this kind. Whether the Supreme Court is able to pass upon this bill or not, we owe a duty to the Constitution ourselves. We owe it to the oath we have taken and the view that we take of the Constitution to conform our action here to what is our duty as we conceive it to be under that obligation, thus voluntarily assumed.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. LINDSAY. My recollection is that the Supreme Court sustained the constitutionality of the tax upon the issue of State banks on the ground that the act purported to be a revenue measure. I ask the Senator how much the Government raised on that tax?

Mr. GRAY. I did not hear the question of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LINDSAY. I wish to ask the Senator, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota, what amount of revenue was raised under that particular supposed revenue measure?

Mr. GRAY. We all know that not a cent was raised.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to suggest that the Supreme Court did not support the tax on State banks by reason of its being a revenue measure. They supported it by reason of its being within the rightful power of Congress to suppress any other currency other than that which had been provided by Congress for the people of the United States, and that the exertion of the taxing power was merely a means to the accomplishment of a rightful end within the power of the Congress to attain.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me?

Mr. GRAY. The case of Veazie is the one to which the Senator refers me in support of his contention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I simply want to suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that there are two decisions of the Supreme Court; one of them on the ground stated by the Senator from Kentucky and the other on the ground stated by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Georgia is mistaken. The second decision explains that the first one went upon the ground I have stated.

Mr. LINDSAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether in his opinion this is a revenue measure or a measure to suppress fraud?

Mr. GRAY. I should like to hear the Senator from Wisconsin answer that question.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I have not the least particle of difficulty with the question. Congress has the power, under the clause for regulating interstate commerce, to suppress such iniquitous and outrageous frauds as the one now sought to be suppressed is in its nature. Not only that, but Congress has the duty imposed upon it to do it, for the reason that the States are prohibited by the interstate clause, as construed by the Supreme Court, from enacting legislation which will protect themselves. The State of Minnesota, the State of Wisconsin, and other States in the Union have enacted to the extremity of their State power legislation to suppress this evil. It requires and demands the exercise by Congress of its authority, which alone is competent to reach a business of this description, interstate and foreign in its nature. For the purpose of exerting that rightful power, for the purpose of accomplishing that end which the Constitution has put upon Congress to accomplish, it proposes to exert another power within its authority as the most convenient and suitable means to that end—the taxing power. We are not using the taxing power to accomplish fraudulently an end not given to us to accomplish by the Constitution, but we are simply working to attain an end which the Constitution imposes upon us to seek——

Mr. GRAY. I think the Senator from Wisconsin has now answered the question.

Mr. VILAS. And that very question was decided by the Supreme Court in the Head Money cases, in the ninety-eighth volume of the Federal Reports, in which they said that the tax levied upon passengers was not a tax in a strict sense, and therefore the taxing power was not sought to be exerted, but it was an imposition, though under the form of a tax, for the regulation of interstate commerce.

Mr. GRAY. I am familiar with the Head Money cases.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator from Delaware permit an interruption?

Mr. GRAY. In one moment, as soon as I allude to something the Senator from Wisconsin has said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware declines to yield.

Mr. GRAY. I will yield to my friend from Minnesota in one moment.

Mr. President, I am not one of those who have tried to be ingenious to evade the obligations which the Constitution places upon me in the exercise of my duties in this high place. I have not sought to participate in the exercise of powers of legislation that were not granted by that charter of our Government. I am not careful to defend myself against the charge of being one of the constitutional lawyers whom the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] speaks of with something of a sneer. I do not pretend to be a constitutional lawyer further than that the Constitution has always been, so far as I could understand it, my guide in my public action and the measure of the duties and activities which I could exercise in this high place.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. One moment, if the Senator from Missouri will pardon me. The Senator from Wisconsin comes to the aid of this fraudulent bill by declaring that it is an exercise of the power conferred by the commerce clause of the Constitution, and yet there is not one syllable or one line within the four corners of the bill that refers to interstate commerce. I know how wide the jurisdiction is that is claimed and asserted by the Congress of the United States under the commerce clause, but never yet has it been sought to be exercised except the jurisdiction was obtained by declaring that the duties or the restraint imposed by the bill were meant to be imposed upon the objects or upon the processes of commerce between the States, or commerce between the States and foreign countries.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GRAY. I promised first to yield to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS. I merely want to contribute another suggestion to the controversy for the consideration of our friends, that under the undoubted authority of the taxing power Congress long ago imposed a tax of 2 per cent upon the circulation of State banks.

Mr. VEST. Eight per cent.

Mr. HARRIS. Ten per cent.

Mr. COCKRELL. Ten.

Mr. VEST. I have the decision of the Supreme Court before me.

Mr. DAVIS. No one ever pretended that the object of that tax was revenue; its object was to drive the issue of State banks out of circulation; and yet that act was sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, that power was sustained, as the Senator from Wisconsin, I think, said it was sustained. I never believed it was constitutional. But it was not sustained under the taxing power.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Delaware will now permit me, in this very connection I have before me the decision of Justice Miller in the head-tax cases referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin. He alluded to it as a decision involving the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution. It was, in fact, a decision based upon the exclusive power of Congress to regulate immigration. What is known as the head-tax statute imposed a dollar tax upon every foreigner over a certain age coming into any port of the United States, and it was attacked upon the ground that it was unconstitutional. The money to be raised from that tax went into a fund to provide for indigent and diseased persons who came over as immigrants and were unfortunate upon shipboard or immediately after landing in this country.

Mr. MILLS. It was imposed by the State.

Mr. VEST. It was a United States statute. The head tax was a United States statute passed by the Congress of the United States, and Justice Miller, of the Supreme Court, emphatically declared that because the Congress of the United States had exclusive jurisdiction over the question of immigration they had a right to put a tax of $1 upon immigrants. If the Senator will read the language of Justice Miller he will find that it covers the entire question.

Mr. GRAY. I will read as the Senator from Missouri suggests:

If this is an expedient regulation of commerce by Congress, and the end to be attained——

Mr. VILAS. I ask the attention of the Senator to the very first words of the Supreme Court:

If this is an expedient regulation of commerce——

Mr. VEST. Of commerce with foreign countries.

Mr. GRAY. I trust the Senator from Wisconsin will not interrupt me while I am reading.

Mr. VEST. Justice Miller goes on to say that it is commerce with foreign countries.

Mr. GRAY—

If this is an expedient regulation of commerce by Congress, and the end to be attained is one falling within that power, the act is not void, because, within a loose and more extended sense than was used in the Constitution, it is called a tax. In the case of Veazie Bank vs. Fenno (8 Wallace, 553, 549)—

The case referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin—

the enormous tax of 8 per cent per annum on the circulation of State banks, which was designed and did have the effect to drive all such circulation out of existence, was upheld because it was a means properly adopted by Congress to protect the currency which it had created, namely, the legal-tender notes and the notes of the national banks. It was not subject, therefore, to the rules which would invalidate an ordinary tax pure and simple.

Mr. President, I have but a moment before the hour of 2 o'clock arrives. This is a bill that nowhere within its limits refers to the exercise of the interstate-commerce power. It is a bill which confessedly by its advocates was not intended to raise revenue, but a police bill intended to operate within the domain of the States and to regulate matters which by all the authorities and all the acknowledged text writers are peculiarly within the exclusive domain of State legislation. This bill, as its authors declare, is intended to suppress a fraud within a State. It does not lay hold of this alleged deleterious article on its course from one State to another, but in the State forbids the manufacture or sale except in accordance with certain prescribed regulations, and it was intended to suppress it, say the authors of the bill.

Mr. President, who contends that the Congress of the United States can reach its hands within the borders of a State and seize upon those reserved police powers which confessedly by all the decisions of the Supreme Court and by the acknowledgment of all constitutional writers belong exclusively to the States and not to the General Government? I do not contend that this is not a thing that ought not to be regulated. The Senator from Minnesota has stated a case which perhaps would appeal to the legislature of my own State or of his.

Mr. VEST. His own State excludes the sale of it entirely.

Mr. GRAY. But all I am contending for here is that we should not seek by indirection to exercise the police powers of a State, and to draw from the quiver of constitutional powers granted by the Constitution of the United States a weapon there placed and use it for a purpose for which it was never intended.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. I merely wish to say that when the bond bill is disposed of I shall seek to bring the pending bill before the Senate again.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 8469) to authorize the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company, of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 8672) conferring jurisdiction upon the supreme court of the District of Columbia having general equity jurisdiction, to decree the sale, lease, or surrender of any lease of real estate in said District belonging to insane persons, for purpose of reinvestment, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAY ROUTES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2928) to extend the routes of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and of the Belt Railway Company, of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments of the House and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. PROCTOR were appointed.

MARITAL AND PARENTAL RELATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1659) to amend the laws of the District of Columbia as to married women, to make parents the natural guardians of their minor children, and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, section 3, after line 7, to insert:

SEC. 4. A married woman may contract and sue and be sued in her own name in all matters having relation to her sole and separate property, in the same manner as if she were unmarried, and her husband shall be joined with her when the cause of action is in favor of or against both her and her husband.

On page 2, section 3, after line 7, to insert:

SEC. 5. Neither the husband nor his property shall be bound by any such contract, made by a married woman, nor liable for any recovery against her in any such suit; but judgment may be enforced by execution against her sole and separate estate in the same manner as if she were unmarried, but she shall be entitled to all the benefits of all exemptions to the heads of families or householders.

Change section 4 to section 6, change section 5 to section 7, change section 6 to section 8, change section 7 to section 9, change section 8 to section 10, and on page 3, section 8, after line 3, to insert:

SEC. 11. That sections 727, 729, and 730 of the Revised Statues of the United States for the District of Columbia be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

REGULATION OF BOND ISSUES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me? I hold in my hand a speech made——

Mr. PRITCHARD. I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. STEWART. I was just going to ask to have it printed. I ask to have it printed as a document.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I ask the Senator to withhold his request for the present.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, before casting my vote in behalf of the pending measure I wish to say a few words as to why I am in favor of preventing the issuance of bonds in time of peace for the purpose of raising revenue to meet the current expenses of the Government. I understand that it was not contemplated by the framers of the act of 1875 that the power to issue bonds was, under any circumstances, to be used for the purpose of raising revenue with which to pay the ordinary current expenses of the Government. I desire to quote from a speech delivered by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], in the Senate, January 3, 1896:

> The Wilson law has produced a deficiency in every hour and day that it has been on the statute books, while the McKinley law has always produced a surplus until after the incoming of this Administration, and if administered since that time by friendly agents would have furnished the Government all the revenue needed.
> The deficiency of revenue was the primary cause of the demand for gold for United States notes. The gold hoarded for resumption purposes was not separated from the money received for current revenue, and this revenue being insufficient to meet expenses, the gold accumulated for redemption purposes was drawn upon to make good deficiencies. This created a doubt of the ability of the Government to maintain the parity of United States notes with coin, and led to their presentation for redemption in coin. The draft on the Treasury for coin during this Administration has been greater than the amount of deficiency of revenue during the same period. In every aspect in which the subject presents itself to my mind I come to no other conclusion than that the deficiency of revenue and the consequent encroachment upon the redemption fund is the cause of our present financial condition, and that the only remedies are either a radical reduction of expenditures or an increase of taxation, and perhaps both. I do not believe that the condition requires a suspension of public works or a postponement of measures now in progress to strengthen the Army and Navy.
> It is strange that the President, in dealing with our financial condition, should ignore entirely the pregnant and controlling fact that during his term of office thus far three issues of bonds have been made, amounting in the aggregate to $162,315,400, to meet current expenses in time of profound peace. He attributes all our financial difficulties to the continued circulation of United States notes and Treasury notes, debts bearing no interest, amounting to nearly $500,000,000. His statement of the origin and history of the United States notes is strongly tinged with prejudice, for, though these notes were irredeemable for a time, they were convertible into bonds bearing interest payable in coin. They replaced notes issues by banks chartered by the several States.
> It is a practical fraud for the Government to use these notes for such purposes, and it never has been done except during this Administration. Every dollar thus taken in is an impairment of the redemption fund. It is the misapplication of a fund specially created by law for another purpose. The effect is to destroy confidence in the credit and safety of our paper currency. It has led to the demand for gold coin for United States notes. I do not believe that has been the design of the executive branch of the Government, but that has been its effect and should be prevented by the immediate action of Congress. The resumption fund is the safeguard of the money of the people, and its use for any other purpose is a practical repudiation of the public faith. The President complains that the notes are presented and paid, reissued, and paid again and again, making a continuous circuit. When did this circuit commence? The only answer is, When this Administration, supported by the last Congress, created a deficiency. Why does the circuit continue? It is because the deficiency continues. The Government resorts to the financial policy of Micawber. It gives its bonds and thinks the debt paid. But the circuit continues. The money received for current revenue is paid to cover deficiencies and is returned for gold, and then more bonds. The Secretary hopes that in two or three years there will be no deficiency. What is the ground for this hope? It is that a new Administration will provide more revenue, and then the circuit will be broken. Why not apply the remedy now?

This is a graphic picture of the financial situation as it now exists. Among other things, the distinguished Senator from Ohio says:

> It is the misapplication of a fund especially created by law for another purpose. The effect is to destroy confidence in the credit and safety of our paper currency.

Therefore, those who ask us to permit the act of 1875 to remain on the statute book without any safeguards indirectly indorse the misapplication of a fund created by law for another purpose, which Senator SHERMAN says "will destroy confidence and safety in our paper currency." The distinguished Senator also says:

> The Government resorts to the financial policy of Micawber. It gives its bonds and thinks the debt is paid. But the circuit continues. The money received for current revenue is paid to cover deficiencies and is returned for gold, and then more bonds. The Secretary hopes that in two or three years there will be no deficiency. What is the ground for this hope? It is that a new Administration will provide more revenue, and then the circuit will be broken. Why not apply the remedy now?

I say to my distinguished friend that I fully concurred in what he said when he made that speech and that nothing has occurred since then to change my mind in the least. The wholesale misapplication of public funds must be prevented. There are only two ways to prevent it; one is to pass an emergency protective tariff measure, and the other is to take from the Secretary the power to issue bonds and increase the public debt when there is no necessity for such conduct. If the Republican party, either directly or indirectly, sanctions this unwarranted exercise of discretion by the Secretary of the Treasury, we will be estopped in the approaching campaign from condemning the Democratic party for its conduct. Upon examination of the different Republican State platforms of 1894 it will be found that in a majority of the States they declared against the policy of the present Secretary of the Treasury in issuing bonds to meet the current expenses of the Government. We so declared in my State, and I am not willing, after having condemned the policy of the Secretary of the Treasury in every speech I made during the last campaign, to come here and to cast my vote to indirectly indorse the action of the Secretary. The Democratic party is still in control of the Executive Departments of this Government, and, if the Du Pont case is to be taken as a criterion, is also in control of this body. It is the only strictly partisan vote that we have had at this session. While we have a clear majority in the House, it is admitted by all that we have not a majority of votes in this body, and therefore we are not responsible, as a party, for any legislation that may pass this body. The Democratic party had absolute control of all branches of this Government from March 4, 1893, until March 4, 1895, and as a result of their unwise legislation and injudicious administration of the law we are brought to the very verge of bankruptcy, and we should let the responsibility rest where it properly belongs.

Under the provisions of the act of 1875, so long as we had an American protective tariff law on our statute book, the Republican party maintained the credit of the Government, promptly paid all our current expenses, and kept the gold reserve fund unimpaired. When strictly construed and fairly executed in the spirit in which it was enacted it is a very valuable and necessary law, but when perverted and misconstrued it has proven to be a dangerous agency in the hands of those who seek to use it as a means of enabling them to conceal the actual deficiency which has necessarily resulted from the enactment of the Wilson law.

We are appealed to by Democratic Senators in this Chamber, who ask us to aid them in securing such legislation as will enable the Democratic party to extricate itself from the awkward position it now occupies, and thereby prevent this country from going into bankruptcy under Democratic management. The Republican party, in a spirit of patriotism and nonpartisanship, tenders to the Democratic members of this body a measure known as the Dingley bill, which we insist when properly amended will afford ample and sufficient revenue with which to meet the current expenses of the Government and will obviate the necessity of issuing bonds in the future.

The Democratic members of the Finance Committee have refused to support this bill or to offer anything in the nature of a substitute which has for its object the raising of revenue in sufficient quantities to supply the demands of the Government, but on the other hand they have tendered a substitute for the revenue bill in the nature of a free-coinage measure, which they know will not afford the relief they demand. There can be no excuse whatever for offering a free-coinage measure as a substitute for the Dingley bill, in view of the fact that this body has already passed a free-coinage bill during the present session. I am a friend to silver and believe it should be restored to its dignity as a money metal, but I do protest against the policy of certain individuals who attempt to tack it on every measure which comes before this body. Such a policy will result in making free silver odious and can only result in great harm to the cause of bimetallism. If our Democratic friends will come forward and join hands with the Republicans in the enactment of a revenue law which has for its object the creation of revenue sufficient with which to meet the demands of the Government along the lines of protection for the languishing industries of this country and the restoration of the duties on the raw materials and agricultural products, I will withdraw my support from the pending question and vote in opposition to its adoption. The moment you provide a sufficient amount of revenue to meet current expenses there will cease to be an excuse for the exercise of this discretion by the Secretary of the Treasury.

I wish to say in reply to the statement that "this bill means repudiation" that if I so understood the provisions of this bill I would under no consideration vote for it. As the act of 1875 is now construed and executed it can only result in one thing, and that is the bankruptcy of the American people. When I see the power conferred under the act of 1875 being exercised as it is by the Democratic party for the purpose of borrowing money and contracting an enormous debt at the expense of the people I feel that it is my duty as a member of this body to stay the hand which is trying to strike down our credit at home and abroad. The Democrats of this Chamber in one breath defiantly announce to the Republicans that they will not accept any temporary emergency measure we may offer for the relief of the Treasury, and in the next breath they ask us to permit them to continue the suicidal policy which they adopted when in full power in this Government by voting to allow the act of 1875 to remain upon the statute book in order that they may be able to borrow money with which to run the Government instead of taxing the foreigner and thereby creating a sufficient fund "to pay as we go."

In my judgment, the time has arrived when the Republican party should make the issue so clear and distinct that the American people may be able to distinguish between the policies of the two parties. It is not contended by any Republican that the Dingley bill is a Republican measure, and therefore can not be said to be a partisan measure. I have an amendment pending to that bill which restores the McKinley duties on the raw materials and agricultural products of this country, but for some strange and inscrutable reason every Democratic member of this body voted against taking it up for consideration, thereby preventing me from securing the adoption of that amendment as a part of the Dingley bill.

I can understand how a New England Democrat could vote against my amendment, but the conduct of Southern Democrats in voting against the consideration of that measure, when they knew that my amendment restoring the duties on raw materials and agricultural products was pending, is incomprehensible. It can mean but one thing, and that is that when they had an opportunity to befriend the farmers and the Southern people they were not equal to the emergency.

The distinguished Senators GORMAN, HILL, and GEORGE have admitted on this floor that there is a deficiency of revenue and that the Government will not be able to meet its current demands in the future. In view of these admissions, coupled with the fact that the records show an increasing deficiency each month under the operations of the present revenue law, it is the imperative duty of this body to pass an emergency bill. While I realize the fact that the Republican party is in no wise chargeable with the present unfortunate condition of affairs, at the same time I feel that it is my duty as a representative of the people to do all in my power to maintain the credit of this Government. Under the present management of our financial affairs the welfare of the people has been neglected to such an extent as to enable a foreign syndicate to realize in one transaction about $10,000,000 at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States. Now, I am unwilling that our Democratic friends should be permitted to pursue such a disastrous policy. In this connection I wish to say that I have great respect for the President of the United States as well as the honorable Secretary of the Treasury. I do not and can not indorse their policy, and at the same time I do not wish to be classed among those who denounce them as dishonest and corrupt. Every Democratic member of this body as well as every Democrat in this country was fully advised as to Mr. Cleveland's views before he was elected President. The Southern Democrats voted for him with the distinct understanding that he was opposed to the free coinage of silver and that he favored free raw material. It is amusing to hear Democratic Senators from the South denounce the President, after having voted for him with full knowledge of the fact that he said, in his letter of acceptance:

> We believe that the advantage of freer raw material should be accorded to our manufacturers, and we contemplate a fair and careful distribution of tariff burden rather than the precipitation of free trade.

Here was a direct proposition from the President to place the undeveloped wealth of the South on the free list, thereby crippling our Southern people without giving them a single cent of compensation in return. It is universally admitted that in the South there are concentrated greater resources for the development of manufacturing and mining than in any other part of the world. We have cotton, the manufacture of which has enriched New England and Great Britain; coal and iron, which has given such enormous wealth to Pennsylvania and other States; timber, which afforded the basis of the wealth of the Northwest, and added to these natural resources are greater advantages for their utilization than are possessed by any other part of the country. It is an admitted fact that in manufacturing capabilities the South has greater possibilities than all the other States in the Union combined. It has nearly one-half of the standing timber in the country; it has sufficient coal and iron to supply the demands of the world, if this were required, and to do it at the lowest possible cost; and it already raises enough cotton to supply 60 per cent of the 85,000,000 spindles of the world. Under the circumstances this is an opportune time to consider the relative positions of the two great political parties on this all-important question.

The McKinley law, reflecting as it did the patriotic wisdom and statesmanship of the Republican party, stimulated and encouraged every single industry in which the Southern people were interested. The question of placing the raw material of the United States on the free list is one which has been agitated more or less since the days of Thomas H. Benton. In the year 1832, when the question was under consideration in the Senate, Mr. Benton, speaking on Mr. Clay's tariff resolution, called attention to the fact that our domestic manufacturers, having a high tariff on their fabrics, were producing many from raw material from foreign countries, and showed that our flax fabrics were from foreign flax, and he cited wool, hemp, indigo, hides, and furs, of which five articles we had imported in six years $25,000,000. Commenting on the fact, he observed, "This immense sum has been paid to foreigners instead of to American citizens." Among other things he said:

> The farmers and planters of the United States should be admitted into the benefits of the American system and secured in the domestic supply of the raw material to our manufacturers. I hope for this much for the farmers and for the honor of the system. For nothing can be more absurd than to erect domestic manufactures upon foreign (raw) material; nothing more contradictory than to predicate independence for goods upon dependence for materials to make them of; nothing more iniquitous than to give to the manufacturers the home market of goods and not to give the farmers the home market of raw materials.

Then, as now, it was the policy of the speculating and trading classes to secure the enactment of such legislation as would place agriculturists and owners of the raw material at their mercy, and as one means of accomplishing their designs they have striven to separate producer and consumer and make direct intercourse between man and man more difficult or well-nigh impossible. The producer, being widely separated from the consumer, the latter is forced to have recourse to many middlemen in exchange of his product, and they must be recompensed. By combination, the middlemen are enabled to fix the price of what they buy and what they sell, thus securing a large and ever growing share of other men's labor.

As another evidence of the fact that the Democratic party, as now constituted, stands pledged to the enactment of laws which are detrimental to the interests of the common people of this country, the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] declared on this floor, the other day, that he was in favor of placing a tax on tea and coffee, two of the necessaries of life. He prefers that the coffee which the Americans consume shall be taxed in order to raise revenue rather than furnish protection to owners of the raw materials of the South and the agricultural products of this country. In other words, the policy of his party is to enhance the cost of the necessaries of life which come from abroad and which we can not produce and to cheapen the products which our own people have to sell. No party advocating such a policy can ever again receive the approval of the American people. The Southern people are just beginning to realize the fact that the policy of the Democratic party is inimical to the welfare of our section. Under the blighting influences of the policy pursued by the bourbon Democracy our wonderful resources have remained undeveloped, our facilities for manufacturing have not been utilized, and the farmer has not been furnished that home market for the products of his farm which is accorded his brother in all prosperous manufacturing communities. True progress is only possible when the farmer finds the market for his produce in the neighboring towns, and the manufacturer a market for his goods among the surrounding farmers; hence the importance of such a policy to the Southern people as will result in the opening of our mines, the manufacturing of our timber, and the utilization of the unsurpassed water power within our borders.

Mr. President, in referring to the advantages of the protective tariff to the South I wish to call attention to some expressions and statistics upon the subject by C. L. Edwards, of Texas, made some years ago. I have taken the liberty to revise his figures, illustrations, and propositions laid down, and ask the attention of every patriotic citizen to the following which I ask to be incorporated as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The paper is as follows:

The colonels and brigadiers have controlled the politics of this part of the country for a good long time. The captains and majors and brevet colonels have also chimed in, but the voice of the ex-Confederate private has not been heard. One of this long-silent class who answered to roll call and figured in the bullet department now asserts the right to speak out in meeting. Mindful of both the ancient and modern prejudices of Southern people against the doctrine of protecting home industries by duties on foreign products, it is considered advisable to present some of the arguments used by those who favor a protective tariff. Hitherto the people of Texas have heard but little of this side of the question. The free traders have had the field to themselves. An earnest desire to lessen the fund of misinformation encumbering the subject will account for this treatise.

PROTECTION IN THE SOUTH.

Wherever manufacturing enterprises have gained a foothold in the Southern States, right there can be found a community of protectionists. Every factory, mill, foundry, furnace, or kindred establishment brings together a working and wage-earning population. These people must be fed, housed, and supplied with the necessaries of life.

Artisan populations are drawn from the surrounding farms. It is so in Columbus, Augusta, Atlanta, Birmingham, Knoxville, and every manufacturing city in the South. Every time a hand leaves the farm and goes into a manufactory farm production is lessened to that extent. Wages from a new source are drawn to pay other farmers for the supplies of the new consumer. Those who formerly helped to glut the local markets with farm products, after going to the factories, become consumers and sharpen the demand for the produce of other farmers. Hundreds of women and children, who before were a burden to those on whom they depended, find profitable employment and are the better able to supply themselves with necessaries. They now assist and help to a competence those whom they once weighed down. In this way those who live near manufacturing towns discontinue the cultivation of staple agricultural products, such as corn, cotton, and wheat. The demand for the smaller farm produce, as milk, fruit, poultry, vegetables, and the like, causes the owners of land to sell it off in small parcels. These subdivisions are devoted to fruit, dairy, and vegetable productions. The lands, as well as their owners, step out of the line of regular farm industry, are withdrawn from competition with the producers of corn, wheat, and cotton. Instead of helping in the profitless work of overproduction, they in turn become dependent upon the regular farmer for their supplies.

In the meantime lands in all that vicinity increase in value, and besides the better markets thus brought about, the factory, shop, or mill adds to the wealth of the man on the farm. Up to this time, except in a few manufacturing districts, Southern farmers have enjoyed few of the benefits of the protective system. In common with all others, they share the advantage of the decrease in prices of what they buy. But they need a better market to sell in, especially their small products. They have not yet received the benefits of an advance in the values of their lands nor of profitable employment for our people. Only those amongst whom industrial enterprises have become established reap all these benefits. Our time is coming. In Birmingham and a dozen other towns in north Alabama the iron industry has caused an immense influx of wealth and given good employment to thousands who never had it before. Owners of land that had been considered worthless for generations are now possessed of fortunes. So of many localities in North Carolina, Virginia, and Tennessee, where great stores of iron and coal in being brought to light bring with them wealth, employment, and happiness to thousands.

The free-trade element in the South is living on tradition. The one great duty that presents itself to every Southern man who loves his people and loves his country is to strive to disarm the prejudices of the olden time. The building up and development that have so auspiciously commenced will perish in the atmosphere of free trade. It is to our interest that the American policy should continue to prevail. Protective duties upon ordinary manufactures of cotton so high as to practically exclude foreign goods of like quality have doubled the crop. A tobacco duty so high as to protect, even after allowing for the burden of internal revenue, caused the crop to increase at the rate of 21,000,000 pounds a year. Cotton manufactures were first protected for the benefit of the Northern States at their request, and the planter shared only an incidental benefit. The Government placed protective duties on tobacco to enable it to bear the internal-revenue imposts. Other Southern crops receive no protection. Sugar and rice, with mere revenue duties, have all the while languished. Every product of the Northern farmer or manufacturer is jealously guarded by protective duties, because it is demanded. Our farmers have sent men to Congress who got as many Southern products as possible on the free list, and demanded a tariff for revenue on the rest. They are taken at their word, so far as our people are concerned.

Whether right or wrong, the American people believe in protection. Those who have built up under the system desire its continuance. Those who do not believe in it have not built up.

It will not do to fall behind the worn-out plea that we are an agricultural people. The North and Northwest are far ahead of us in agriculture. With them agriculture and manufactures have kept even pace. The factory is the best patron the farm ever had, and they have found it out. We do something in the way of agriculture, and but little else. They believe in protection, diversify their industries, and all prosper together. Let us compare the two States of Texas and Iowa. Both were admitted to the Union in 1845. Their populations were then and in 1880 nearly equal. Neither State was devastated by the war.

Texas has an area some five times that of Iowa, and double the amount of agricultural lands. The climates of the two States are widely different. We seldom have more than a month of cold weather; our spring and fall seasons are long and delightful, and the summers tempered with pleasant breezes. In Iowa the ice king sits enthroned half the year, and often more. Her prairies are the home of the blizzard from October until April, and the rallying ground of the storm god the rest of the year. When her people are muffling themselves in woolens and furs against the rigors of winter, ours go in their shirt sleeves and sleep under sheets; yet, strange to say, we raise sheep and cry out against the duties on wool and woolen goods, while the people of Iowa, who buy and use them, believe in protection and make no complaint whatever. Those who can remember as far back as the glorious free-trade era of 1860 know that those necessaries cost more then than now. The figures below are taken from the Compendium of the Eleventh Census, 1890:

	Iowa.	Texas.
Persons employed in factories	59,174	39,475
Value of manufactured products	$125,049,181	$70,433,551
Wages paid	$25,878,997	$18,586,338
Value of farm implements manufactured	$1,570,872	$397,795

Value of farms	$857,581,022	$399,971,280
Value of farm implements and machinery	$36,065,315	$13,746,541

SPECIMENS OF THRIFT.

When a Texas farmer raises a wheat crop, it goes off to hunt a mill, and having found it, the flour is shipped back to him. He pays freight both ways. The Northern miller takes toll for grinding, and out of it pays his employees. Our farmers have not yet learned that their hostility to manufactures keeps away the man who makes wheat into flour along with the man who makes wool and cotton into cloth. They have not yet realized that the distance between producers, consumers, and manufacturers supports the railroads and the ships; nor that wherever a manufactory is located these classes are in a measure brought together and hundreds of freight bills wiped away. In the new States, and even in the Territories of the Northwest, where the doctrine of protection is believed in, the flouring mills are crowding upon the wheat fields. Minnesota farmers raise wheat, and Minnesota millers grind it, giving employment to thousands of people of that State. They, in turn, are able, from the wages received, to purchase other supplies from the same farmers, and all prosper together. Industrial establishments of different kinds spring up in the vicinity of these great flouring mills. There is a large interchange of their respective products, and one sustains the other. To the extent of their mutual dealings, to the extent they supply the people in their vicinity, freight bills disappear. Of the wheat exported, even from Dakota, almost half of it goes abroad as flour. The toll is left with the people of the Northwest. We, on the contrary, oppose a policy which confers benefit upon all who avail themselves of it. Though the waters are troubled, we are loath to step in and be healed. Worse still, is the desire to injure by mischievous legislation those who have been more provident than ourselves. Israel in the desert never lusted more for the flesh-pots of Egypt than do we to return to the old days of low tariffs, foreign goods, high prices, and bills of lading reaching round the world.

The older Southern States have more water power than all New England, but hostility to protection has until quite recently kept the cotton mill far away from the cotton field. Except some thousands of bales manufactured at home, one-third of the cotton crop was burdened with the cost of transportation to the North, the other two-thirds to Europe. The producer foots the larger portion of the freight bills, while the profits of its manufacture are pocketed by other people. Suppose we discontinue our factious opposition and declare for protection, how long before the cotton manufacturing interests would be gainers by the change, and it is time we were learning that men who have sense enough to accumulate money are not anxious to risk it among those who are eternally threatening the destruction of their investments. New England, more than a thousand miles away, has built cities and grown rich by the manufacture of our cotton. Her agriculture has so flourished that she has long since left off raising the staples of the farm. Her cold, stony soil, lying in the grip of winter for more than half the year, has a summer verdure like Eden. Her arable lands, subdivided into stock, fruit, dairy farms, and gardens, have become of marvelous value, and their produce is sold to the people of manufacturing cities at prices that are remunerative away beyond ordinary agriculture. Sixty years ago there was little on her rivers besides some sand, rocks, and water running down hill. These, and the practical sense of her people were the sum total of her natural advantages. They took hold of protection and used it for their benefit. The system that helped them will help us, if permitted. New York and Ohio have prospered exceedingly; so has New Jersey. Pennsylvania has grown rich almost "beyond the dreams of avarice." Black diamonds and iron crowns have been wrested from her rugged hillsides. Cities have been built and palaces reared that would discount the best performances of Aladdin's lamp. Delvers in mine and shop have become lords of mill and furnace. The hand of Midas has been laid upon their industries. Plodding farmers have become wealthy proprietors. So of all the manufacturing States. In Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, and Indiana agriculture and manufactures go hand in hand with each other. In all those States farm hands once received $8 per month for six months in the year. They now get $25 to $30 per month the year round. In Texas, where farm wages are better than in any Southern State, a young man on a farm does well to get a full year's employment at $15 per month, although we have a soil as productive as ever fell from the hands of the Maker. Our farmers make cotton to be sold at a low price and sent off on a foreign tour, while Northern farmers who believe in protection feed the operatives who work on that same cotton.

Ours may have a large surplus of fruits, melons, poultry, butter, and the like, but our towns are small, without manufacturing populations, and small quantities of such products will glut a market. These farmers have never suspected that they are in any manner the authors of the mischief. On the contrary, when politics come round every two years, and a double dose every four, they hie themselves to the political gathering, hoping, as they have vainly hoped for years, that by some turn in the management of public affairs the ills of their condition may be cured. A favorite politician addresses them from the hustings; they listen to anathemas against rich men, railroads, corporations, manufacturing monopolies, and the protective tariff, and shout approval until hoarse. They return to their homes embittered in spirit, strengthened in prejudice, steeped in error, feeling like anarchists; and, for the time, would be right glad, if they could, to accomplish by legislation what the Chicago thug seeks to do by bomb and torch. By such methods hundreds of millions of idle capital that would readily seek investment in the South is kept away. Begrudging a fair profit to the manufacturer, we keep ourselves in the hands of usurers.

Let us look further at results. Some of us remember the glorious days of comparative free trade from 1857 to 1860. Iron used by blacksmiths cost double what is does now. Imported iron was in general use. Some bought imported cast steel in bars to make shovel plows and sweeps. This cost at retail 12½ cents per pound. The smith cut it out and worked it up. Plowshares then costing $1 to $1.50 can now be had at from 30 to 50 cents. Axes, chains, and all farm hardware are reduced in price at least one-half. Calicoes that sold in country stores at 12 and 15 cents per yard can now be bought for 4, 5, and 6 cents. So of the other cotton goods. A better wagon is now sold for $60 than could then be had for $100; and so with a thousand articles entering into the uses of everyday life. These reductions have come with the change from foreign to domestic manufacture; by the competition of Americans who have prospered under protection. Hamilton's doctrine has been more than verified. It requires no statistics to prove these things; they have come under our observation.

There are those who say that improved machinery has wrought these results, and that the foreigner works still more cheaply. Granted, but before we had protection we had few machines, and the foreign manufacturer never did reduce his price lists until forced to do so by our own citizens. Protection gave us the machines, and the inventive genius of the American has continually improved them.

We continue to clamor for sweeping reductions of duties, demanding that numbers of articles grown and manufactured in this country be placed upon the free list, and that duties on imports be reduced to a strict revenue basis. To grant our petitions would plague us sorely, as were the frogs in the fable who prayed for a king. Hundreds of industries that have grown up under the protective system would be wrecked, and nearly all would be endangered. Low rates of ocean freight, the cheaper labor, plant, and capital of foreigners, would enable them to land unlimited supplies of their products on our shores. Wages of American operatives would be reduced; hundred of thousands of them would be thrown out of employment; manufactories, costing in the aggregate hundreds of millions, would be idle. Four times out of five in the history of the country bankruptcy and panic have followed the mischievous legislation of tariff reformers. We have had a touch of such experience under the revenue tariff (so called) of 1894.

The ruin of our manufactures accomplished and the American demand transferred to the foreigner, prices would advance—possibly to the free-trade standard of 1860. In the meantime our own operatives would be driven by swarms to seek employment in agriculture. Instead of buying and consuming farmers' products as they now do, they would help to swell the volume of farm production, which, for want of a domestic demand, would be forced to seek unprofitable foreign markets.

Approximately speaking, nine-tenths of all the articles used by our people are made at home; the other tenth is imported. Of our great agricultural product nine-tenths are consumed at home, and the other tenth is exported. But we do a safe business as a nation. The tenth we send and sell abroad is of greater value than the tenth we buy abroad. And this is the sum of political economy—we sell more than we buy.

In case of a foreign war we may live fairly well at home. A tenth of what we use is the utmost extent of the deprivation an enemy could inflict, even by blockading every port. So long as our protective system remains there is no danger of a return of Confederate experiences. On imported goods—one-tenth of our consumption—duties are laid on a part only. Fully one-third are on the free list; the other two-thirds—about one-fifteenth of the whole—yield the tariff revenue. These used to approximate $200,000,000 annually. The internal revenues, derived almost wholly from excises on liquors and tobacco, average about $120,000,000 a year. Other sources raise the annual income of the nation to $340,000,000, more or less. The aggregate of these revenues is some $50,000,000 a year above the necessary current expenses of the Government after allowing for the sinking fund.

The national income is almost wholly derived from two sources, internal-revenue imposts and tariff duties. The first is a direct, the second is an indirect tax. The American citizen understands and dislikes a direct tax. It is a burden and nothing else. No principle of protection goes with it. All agree that the internal revenue is oppressive. On the tariff opinion is divided. Internal-revenue taxes for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, amounted in round numbers to $143,000,000. Of this, $30,000,000 came from tobacco, $31,000,000 from ale and beer, and $80,000,000 from distilled liquors. These imposts are direct, onerous, and hateful. Relief from a large part of our Federal taxation and an honest application of the accumulated surplus to national purposes are inexorable demands of the people of the United States. What could be better than to strike first and strike hard at internal revenues? Their reduction to the extent of the annual overplus and the final abolition of the system are required by every consideration of statesmanship and of patriotism.

In a speech before Congress in 1884 Mr. Samuel J. Randall said: "With Albert Gallatin I have regarded the excise or internal taxes as offensive to the genius of our people, and tolerated by the framers of the Constitution only as a measure of necessity in the emergency of war, and that just so soon as the occasion for them had passed away they should cease to exist. He and Thomas Jefferson, as the very first act of Jefferson's Administration, secured a repeal of internal taxes and relieved the people from their inequality, inquisitorial annoyances, and hordes of officials clothed with dangerous powers. Only in the latter days have I heard men calmly claim these war taxes are still necessary—a generation after the war which gave rise to them had closed. And it is a very suggestive and suspicious feature of the affair that those upon whom the tax is laid clamor loudly against it being taken off, regarding it no doubt as a protection to the large monopolies against competition."

DIVERSIFY OUR INDUSTRIES.

It behooves us to continue to diversify our industries and cling to the system that encourages a profitable interdependence of our citizens, one upon another. We of the South have only to look back to the dark days of our civil war to appreciate the necessity of a people being able to live at home. We had depended upon foreign nations for supplies; the North upon herself. The one section had stood by a tariff for the encouragement and protection of her industries; the other had not. When the planter's slaves increased and when his granaries were filled, his next neighbor was not prosperous; but when the factory was built in the Northern town, values increased in all the neighborhood, employment was given to idle hands, and money was put into empty pockets. The staying qualities of their prosperity were better than ours. It really seems odd that any Southerner who passed through the deprivations of the war period should need persuasion of the advantages of protection. It is strange that he has not discerned that the free-trade idea in the South is the surviving partner of the institution of slavery. In our business affairs home truths, like home manufactures, have ever met an unwelcome reception. For two generations the protective tariff has been the hitching post of our prejudices, and on this subject reason knocks in vain at the doors of our understanding.

Cotton, sugar, rice, and certain fruits are produced in the South only.

Special advantages of soil and climate above all the world enables cotton to take care of itself. It needs no special protection, because we can produce more of it than the country needs. With sugar, rice, and Southern fruits conditions are different. Nine-tenths of the sugar consumed in the United States is produced abroad. Over three thousand five hundred million pounds a year are imported. Half-clad and half-slave labor produces it. Import duties on foreign sugars used to make nearly one-third of the tariff revenues. Nothing produced by the rich and powerful North yields such a revenue. All it produces or manufactures is hedged by tariff taxes that prevent large importations.

Our sugar-producing area is certainly as well adapted to supplying the people of this country with sugar and molasses as is New England to furnishing them with cotton and woolen goods. There is hardly a cotton plantation or a sheep ranch in all those States. Alabama, Tennessee, and West Virginia are making iron and steel as readily as Pennsylvania. Georgia and the Carolinas can well manufacture cotton goods to the same extent as Massachusetts or Rhode Island. Texas, with its flocks upon a thousand hills and its fine waterpowers in the sheep-growing regions, might well take part in furnishing blankets and woolens for the country. In straining their eyes after the ignis fatuus of free trade our representatives have never thought of the advantages that might accrue to the South by protecting its special products. On the other hand, Northern legislators have at all times and under all circumstances had the interests of their people in view. From these causes their industries have flourished, while ours have languished.

If, as it is insisted, protection has conferred undue privileges upon the Northern States, why do we not fall into line and procure high duties on all our products? Northern people use perhaps four-fifths of all the sugar, molasses, rice, wool, iron, and foreign fruits consumed in this country. We might thus equally make reprisals. With the duty of 3 to 5 cents a pound on imported sugar, they would pay five dollars where we pay one. This $1 would be spent by our own citizens among themselves, while the other $4 would for a time be drawn from the North to the South. So of all our special crops. Such a protection would cause the impoverished South to forget her woes and attire herself in the robes of prosperity, while increased production would soon give a greater and cheaper supply than ever. We would then be "solid" in a sense that would command respect rather than reproach. No one doubts that these benefits could be secured, nor that the Northern States would rapidly concur in these measures if our representatives could forbear tinkering with the tariff and permit the industries to remain undisturbed by meddlesome and mischievous interference under solid protective tariff.

Now, those Northern people are in the majority, and with the help gradually coming in from Southern districts that had begun to prosper under protection the system will again be maintained for years to come. The protectionist has built his house. It keeps him comfortable. He suggests to us that we build one like it and enjoy similar comforts. We dislike the laws that permitted him to build such a house, and want to tear it down. This he prevents us from doing. We then take revenge upon him by standing out shivering in rain and cold, shouting to him continually what a bad man he is for building under such wicked laws. The farce is finished by assuring him with great zeal that we will ever refuse to join forces and join interests with him; but, like Samson, the blind giant, we will one day lay hold of the pillars of the structure, bow ourselves with all our strength, and bring it down in ruins upon his head. Nor do we busy ourselves about what the consequences were to Samson.

The day of free trade in the South is past. It went out with the old system of labor. Old-time prejudices must soon follow. Thousands of young men born since the war will vote at the next election. Let it be hoped that they will not walk blindly in the leading strings of the politicians and that they will not yield readily to the artifices of the demagogues. It is a painful truth that positions of public trust are too often but dividends declared upon the capitalized prejudices and ignorance of our people. The politicians being both stockholders and directors are naturally interested in the perpetuation of their investment. But intolerance of free thought and free speech in politics is yielding in a degree to the lessons of experience and common sense. Factory, furnace, and mill are sounding the glad notes of the new gossip in the South. Prosperity is a splendid converting power. Dollars are eloquent orators and appeal to prejudice as nothing else can. Every mill is a missionary and every furnace a pillar of fire by night. Many and many a Rip Van Winkle is rousing up from his long, long sleep. The experience since 1894 of Southern control and tariff legislation has been a lesson to all of us in its disaster, impoverishment, and distress that should never be forgotten. Hasten the day when the men who lost in 1865 shall, with their children and grandchildren, become participants in the glorious prosperity that now lies just in sight, just up the hill, awaiting the triumphal march of the industrial South hand in hand with the industrial North.

Mr. PRITCHARD. The unprecedented victories which have been achieved within the last two years by the Republican party were won by a comparison of the economic policies of the Democratic and Republican parties.

The McKinley bill furnished employment for 37,285 additional hands; the Wilson bill threw out of employment 101,763. The industrial census for 1894 shows a decrease of 56 per cent of the output of factories as compared with 1892, a falling off of 30 per cent of the number of hands employed, and a falling off of 45 per cent in the amount of wages earned.

The McKinley bill furnished a home market for the raw material of the Southern people, at whose invitation thousands of capitalists from the North came down and settled among our people, investing their millions in the undeveloped resources of the South, assuring to us the blessings which naturally and necessarily follow this development of our section.

It meant a good deal to our citizens. It was the one great agency which was to bring about a complete reconciliation between the North and South, by personal contact between those who had theretofore misunderstood each other. It meant the employment of thousands of laborers and the erection of schoolhouses and other institutions calculated to enhance the material welfare of our section. It was a measure brimful of patriotism and Americanism.

I defy anyone to show me a single sentence or syllable within the McKinley bill which preferred the capitalists of foreign lands to the American citizen. It contained no principle which has for its object the protection of the foreign citizen and the destruction of the American citizen. From the moment it became a law the business interests of this country acquired new impetus, and on every hand could be seen evidences of renewed prosperity.

On the other hand, the Wilson bill had for its object the promotion of the interests of those who live in foreign lands. It preferred the coal of Nova Scotia to that of Kentucky, West Virginia, and Tennessee. It preferred the cheap wool of Australia to the wool of the farmers living in Illinois, Iowa, Ohio, Texas, and the other great woolgrowing states in the Union. It preferred the iron, corundum, kaolin, and marble of foreign countries to that of Vermont, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and Alabama. It preferred the baled hay of Canada to that of Illinois, Tennessee, Kentucky, North Carolina, Ohio, and the other great agricultural States

It interrupted the tide of immigration and capital which was pouring into the South from New England and other sections, under the beneficient influences of the McKinley law, and drove back to their respective homes, in a great measure, that desirable class of citizens who engaged in mining iron, kaolin, talc, and marble which so abundantly abounds in Tennessee, Alabama, Virginia, Kentucky, Georgia, and North Carolina.

By its operation thousands of laboring men were thrown out of employment. It resulted in the withdrawal of millions of dollars from the only avenues of business by which it could be reached by the laboring men of our section. The one great desire of the laboring men of to-day is to again secure employment at wages which will enable them to comfortably clothe and educate their children.

The Republican party of this nation is to-day confronted by a crisis. The future welfare of the party depends in a great measure upon the manner in which they deal with this grave question. I am aware of the fact that there are some who contend it is best to adopt a do-nothing policy rather than to disturb the business interests of this country by tariff agitation. The expression of this sentiment emanates either from those who are enemies of the American system and desire to minimize the tariff question or those whose interest is carefully protected by the Wilson bill.

However, we should bear in mind the significant fact that no such argument has been advanced by the laboring men of this country, nor by those who are the owners and producers of our raw material. This class of people are largely in the majority, and it was their votes which enabled the Republican party to secure such an enormous majority in the lower branch of the present Congress. They voted the Republican ticket with the express understanding that Republican success meant the repeal of the Wilson bill, and that we were to have in lieu thereof such legislation as would be an assurance to our people that we are to be preferred in matters affecting our interest and welfare to the people of any other nation on the face of the globe.

It should be the desire of our party to strengthen, encourage, and establish a permanent and enduring party in the Southern States, and this can be accomplished by giving the people to understand that they are to have their interests protected, and that in future it will not be necessary to borrow money with which to pay the current expenses of the Government.

Mr. LINDSAY obtained the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose the Senator from Kentucky would prefer to go on in the morning, and I should be very glad, if he takes that view of it, to call up a conference report, which I think will take only a few minutes to dispose of. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that I do not care to interrupt him if he prefers to go on now.

Mr. LINDSAY. The trouble I will have is that to-morrow, as soon as the morning business is over, we shall have the filled-cheese bill up again, and it will be in the afternoon before I can go on.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] announced that he did not expect to call up that bill again until the bond question was disposed of.

Mr. PLATT. It will be a good while, I fear, if that is true.

Mr. CULLOM. I will leave it to the discretion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LINDSAY. I believe I prefer to go on now.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well. Then I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for a moment? I desire to ask to have the speech of Secretary Carlisle, made in 1878, printed as a document. I am frequently applied to, as are other Senators, for copies of the speech. I saw a letter from the Secretary saying that it is out of print and that he can not furnish it. I ask that it be printed as a document.

Mr. LINDSAY. I believe I prefer that the Senator from Nevada should have that very antiquated and valuable document presented to the Senate at some other time.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky objects.

Mr. TELLER. What is it?

Mr. STEWART. The speech of Secretary Carlisle made in 1878.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will withdraw the objection, and allow the speech to be printed as a document.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is it a speech made in Congress?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then it has been printed in the RECORD——

Mr. STEWART. But it is out of print, and there are constant applications for it.

Mr. ALDRICH. And I understand the Senate is asked to print it again?

Mr. STEWART. We print papers constantly for general information.

Mr. TELLER. We printed Mr. Carlisle's Chicago speech the other day.

Mr. ALDRICH. As a document?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. If I had been here I should have objected.

Mr. PLATT. What is the proposition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the speech of Mr. Carlisle delivered in the House of Representatives in 1878 shall be printed as a document. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall have to object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. DANIEL. Is there any objection to having the speech printed in the RECORD?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is in the RECORD already.

Mr. STEWART. I want to have it printed as a document, because there are frequent applications for it.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are plenty of copies of that very valuable speech. They are now being distributed, particularly in Kentucky, and if the Senator from Nevada wants some copies I will furnish them.

Mr. STEWART. I should like some copies, because there are constant applications for the speech.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have them.

Mr. TELLER. I have one in my desk now.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me we are going too far in the matter of printing speeches of individuals as documents. I understand the speech of Mr. Carlisle at Chicago was printed, and then the speech of Governor Altgeld was printed to offset it. I think we had better stop there.

Mr. STEWART. I do not know why we should stop printing valuable——

Mr. LINDSAY. I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I will not say the pending measure contemplates the ultimate repudiation of any of our national obligations. I am satisfied the large majority of Senators who look with favor upon the policy it declares would have no tolerance for any proposition involving in their belief a breach of the public faith. It is my opinion, however, that the adoption of this resolution by the two Houses of Congress, and its approval by the President, would bring the country to a suspension of specie payment within the next sixty days.

We have proximately five hundred millions of demand notes payable in coin, about four hundred millions of which are outstanding, and we have a redemption fund of only about one hundred and ten millions, and no means by which the loss of coin can be supplied, except by the use of surplus revenues and the sale of bonds, as provided for by the act of January 14, 1875.

There are no surplus revenues and will be none until confidence is restored and business revived.

Mr. DANIEL. Will it interrupt the Senator from Kentucky if I should ask him a question?

Mr. LINDSAY. No, sir.

Mr. DANIEL. Is not the silver in the Treasury, for which Sherman demand notes were given, a part of the redemption fund for the large sum which the Senator says has only $112,000,000 of redemption money behind it?

Mr. LINDSAY. I will come to the discussion of that point in a moment.

In the face of all this we are asked to take from the Secretary of the Treasury the only means by which the redemption fund can be replenished. If we were devising ways and means by which to invite disaster; if we were considering how we might most certainly abandon both gold and silver coin and bring the country back to the enforced use of irredeemable paper currency, there would be no better course to pursue than to put this resolution in force, and then by an early adjournment leave the speculators and exporters to raid the Treasury until not a dollar of the redemption fund remains. This resolution will not pass, but the support it is receiving and the unconcern with which the necessary consequences of the adoption of such a measure is regarded by leading members of the Senate are, in my estimation, ominous of the future. I sympathize with the opposition to the sale of bonds. I believe steps should be taken to avoid the necessity for such sales. The Government ought to be taken out of the business of supplying gold coin or coin of any kind to speculators or exporters, but as yet Congress has done nothing in that direction, and so far as appearances go intends to do nothing. Notwithstanding all this, it is apparent that an early adjournment is to be had, and the responsibility for the management of the national finances and the protection of the public credit left to rest upon the President and the Secretary of the Treasury from the date of our adjournment until the first Monday in December next.

If our financial system was meeting in a satisfactory way the exigencies of the Government, and the public credit was under such legislative safeguards as to assure its maintenance beyond all reasonable apprehension to the contrary, we might with propriety act upon the advice lately given us by the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] and by adjourning relieve the country of further fears of legislation tending to disturb business security or to excite distrust in business circles. Such, however, is not the fact. The country knows, and we know, that our financial system is far from satisfactory, and that the legislation upon which it rests is as inconsistent as it is ill adapted to the conditions with which we have to deal. We know, and the country knows, that the public credit, so far as it depends upon the continued parity between our gold and silver legal-tender coinage, must be protected, if protected at all, by periodic sales of interest-bearing bonds. We know that the gold reserve is being steadily encroached upon, and have reason to fear that the gold now in the Treasury will be taken out as rapidly as it can be put to profitable use by exporters and speculators. Within a few months the Secretary of the Treasury may be again reduced to the necessity of selling bonds, or permitting a suspension not only of gold, but of specie payment by the Government.

The dangers are such that delay in affording relief to the Treasury can neither be defended nor excused. Congress must either admit their incapacity to remedy the admitted evils or concede their indisposition to do so.

The President has repeatedly recommended such Congressional action as would restore confidence and avert possible disaster, but nothing in that line has been done. I may say nothing has been attempted. By his regular message to this Congress when it convened in December last he recommended that the Treasury be relieved from the duty of supplying gold to those making profit out of its exportation by funding the legal-tender notes of the Government. Foreseeing, as he naturally would, the reluctance of Congress thus to contract the volume of our currency, he submitted the whole question of relief to our unembarrassed discretion by concluding his message with these words:

> I especially entreat the people's representatives in the Congress, who are charged with the responsibility of inaugurating measures for the safety and prosperity of our common country, to promptly and effectively consider the ills of our critical financial plight. I have suggested a remedy which my judgment approves. I desire, however, to assure the Congress that I am prepared to cooperate with them in perfecting any other measure promising thorough and practical relief, and that I will gladly labor with them in every patriotic endeavor to further the interests and guard the welfare of our countrymen whom in our respective places of duty we have undertaken to serve.

On the 28th of December last, nothing having been done up to that time, the President, by a special message, again called the attention of Congress to the difficulties of our financial situation, and in that connection said:

> We are in the midst of another season of perplexity caused by our dangerous and fatuous financial operations. These may be expected to recur with certainty as long as there is no amendment in our financial system. If, in this particular instance, our predicament is at all influenced by a recent insistence upon the position we should occupy in our relation to certain questions concerning our foreign policy, this furnishes a signal and impressive warning that even the patriotic sentiment of our people is not an adequate substitute for a sound financial policy.
> Of course there can be no doubt in any thoughtful mind as to the complete solvency of our nation, nor can there be any just apprehension that the American people will be satisfied with less than an honest payment of our public obligations in the recognized money of the world. We should not overlook the fact, however, that aroused fear is unreasoning, and must be taken into account in all efforts to avert possible loss and the sacrifice of our people's interests.
> The real and sensible cure for our recurring troubles can only be effected by a complete change in our financial scheme. Pending that, the executive branch of the Government will not relax its efforts nor abandon its determination to use every means within its reach to maintain before the world American credit, nor will there be any hesitation in exhibiting its confidence in the resources of our country and the constant patriotism of our people.
> In view, however, of the peculiar situation now confronting us, I have ventured to herein express the earnest hope that the Congress, in default of the inauguration of a better system of finance, will not take a recess from its labors before it has, by legislative enactment or declaration, done something not only to remind those apprehensive among our own people that the resources of their Government and a scrupulous regard for honest dealing afford a sure guaranty of unquestioned safety and soundness, but to reassure the world that with these factors, and the patriotism of our citizens, the ability and determination of our nation to meet in any circumstances every obligation it incurs do not admit of question.
> I ask at the hands of the Congress such prompt aid as it alone has the power to give to prevent, in a time of fear and apprehension, any sacrifice of the people's interests and the public funds or the impairment of our public credit in an effort by Executive action to relieve the dangers of the present emergency.

The recommendations of the President have gone for nothing. His appeals have fallen upon unwilling ears. Our financial system has neither been revised nor amended, and the indications are that "our dangerous and fatuous financial operations" are to continue for an indefinite time, and to continue under circumstances from which the country may fairly infer the consent and approval of the present Congress. Republican leaders may excuse themselves to their partisan followers on the ground that it is good party politics to leave the Administration to struggle with existing embarrassments as best it may. The condemnation of the sale of interest-bearing bonds in time of peace may be made an effective argument, with the unthinking, in favor of restoring the Republican party to power, but it will not deceive the intelligence of the country, and in the event of Republican success it will return to plague those who are now seeking to make it available as a party slogan.

The pretense of relieving the situation through the tariff and bond bills sent over some months since from the House of Representatives was so transparent that no one was or could be deceived by it. The demand was for the means by which to secure the necessary gold to keep up the Treasury reserve. The response was an offer of additional authority to sell bonds, payable in coin, just as the bonds authorized by the existing statute are payable. No one had the right to believe, and, I may safely say, no one did believe or does now believe, the proposed 3 per cent short-time bonds could have been sold at their face value. If the bill had become a law, the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds would have been increased to an indefinite extent, but he would still have been compelled to buy gold with bonds payable, not in terms in gold, but in coin.

The proposed tariff bill had the approval of no one. With it came from the other end of the Capitol the information that it was not a Republican bill. It certainly was not a Democratic bill. I have no information that any Populist, in or out of Congress, gave it the sanction of his approval. It did not have character enough to make its way out of the Senate Finance Committee, except with the incumbrance of a free-silver attachment. Concerning this remarkable bill the distinguished chairman of the Republican national committee, the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], said, in February last, that it was "wholly at variance with all past professions of the Republican party on the tariff question," that it had been and was then "distinctly asserted that it is not a Republican measure," but "a measure to meet an alleged emergency which the Chief Executive Officer of the nation, chosen by the people in 1892, stoutly asserts does not exist at all."

The absurdities of the two bills being apparent and the shallowness of the pretense that they were intended to meet the emergency which unmistakably demands action by this Congress having been thoroughly exposed by eminent Republican Senators, they have faded out of public notice and are to-day sleeping their everlasting sleep.

The Republican majority has declined to do anything. Notwithstanding the repeated assurances we have had from a distinguished Republican leader that the Republican party was ready to take up any nonpartisan measure that would result in increasing the resources of the Treasury to equal its expenditures, we have had yesterday and to-day an illustration that that statement overlaps the disposition of that party to do anything to increase the revenues of the Government unless coupled with further protection to the manufacturing industries.

The Republican party proposes to go before the country upon the record it has made of not only doing nothing, but of failing in good faith to attempt to obviate the necessity for the further sale of interest-bearing bonds.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Has not the President in his message to Congress stated that there was no lack of revenue or trouble about the revenue, and that bonds were only issued for the purpose of buying gold to pay obligations?

Mr. LINDSAY. The President has undoubtedly stated that there was no immediate necessity for more revenue, and the President has stated with equal distinctness that the embarrassments of the Treasury do not arise out of the want of revenue, but out of the difficulty of keeping up the gold reserve for the purpose of redeeming upon presentation the demand notes of the Government.

The complaint I make against the Republican party is not that it has not provided more revenue, but that, pretending to be in favor of providing more revenue, it refuses to take any step in that direction unless coupled with an increase of the protection now afforded to favored manufacturing industries.

The purpose of the distinguished Senator from Virginia I understand to be to direct my attention to the claim that these outstanding demand notes had as well be redeemed in silver as in gold, and that if the Secretary of the Treasury would consent to answer those demands by an offer to pay in silver, then the necessity for a further sale of bonds would be obviated. It is to that phase of the subject under consideration that I now wish to direct my remarks.

We have eminent men of both the old political organizations defending their nonaction on the ground that there is no obligation resting upon the Treasury to redeem the demand notes of the Government in gold coin to the exclusion of legal-tender silver. This is a fundamental doctrine of the Populistic or Peoples' Party, and it would be folly to deny that it has taken strong hold upon the public mind. Whether this contention, if correct, can be applied to the conduct of affairs consistently with the declared policy of the Government to preserve the parity of all our money of ultimate redemption is an important inquiry, and one that can not be answered in the affirmative without the most serious misgivings.

The present Administration has from the beginning been confronted with difficulties inherited from the past. Explaining its policy, the Secretary of the Treasury, in January, 1895, in answer to a question propounded by a member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives as to what "objection there could be to having the option of redeeming demand notes either in silver or gold lie with the Treasury instead of the noteholder," said:

> If that policy had been adopted at the beginning of resumption—and I am not saying this for the purpose of criticising the action of any of my predecessors or anybody else—but if the policy of reserving to the Government, at the beginning of resumption, the option of redeeming in gold or silver all its paper presented, I believe it would have worked beneficially, and there would have been no trouble growing out of it; but the Secretaries of the Treasury from the beginning of resumption have pursued a policy of redeeming in gold or silver, at the option of the holder of the paper, and if any Secretary had afterwards attempted to change that policy and force silver upon a man who wanted gold, or gold upon a man who wanted silver, and especially if he had made that attempt at such a critical period as we have had in the last two years, my judgment is it would have been very disastrous. There is a vast difference between establishing a policy at the beginning and reversing a policy after it has been long established, and especially after the situation has been changed.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if the Democratic party did not always oppose that policy on the part of our Republican predecessors?

Mr. LINDSAY. The Democratic party opposed the establishing of the policy, certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Did it not always denounce it after it was established?

Mr. LINDSAY. It denounced it after it was established.

Mr. DANIEL. Did it not declare when it nominated its President in favor of preserving the double standard?

Mr. LINDSAY. I will come to that. I will show that it never declared against a policy that was so strongly established that the business of the country would be damaged by changing it.

The sufficiency of the Secretary's explanation has been denied and the answer criticised on the idea that the Executive can not bind the Government or pledge its faith or credit by the adoption of a mistaken policy. This may be conceded, but where the statute leaves to the Executive or to any one of the Departments of the Government the discretion to pursue one line of policy or the other as circumstances may demand, a new Administration may properly adhere to an established policy it would not have adopted at the outset. I may rely upon the deliberately expressed opinion of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], whose devotion to the cause of silver coinage no one can question, to sustain me in this position.

On October 6, 1893, Senator TELLER, discussing the bill to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act and commenting upon the custom of the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem with gold the coin notes issued in payment for silver bullion purchased under the Sherman Act, detailed the circumstances under which, on the 14th of November, 1891, the first million dollars of those notes were presented to the subtreasury and redeemed in gold, and said——

Mr. TELLER. What is the date of that?

Mr. LINDSAY. This is from the Senator's speech on the 6th of October, 1893, when he said—and this is exactly in the line of Mr. Carlisle's explanation—

> Had Mr. Foster, the then Secretary of the Treasury, said, "We hold ourselves ready to redeem these notes in gold whenever any citizen or any holder thereof wants to exchange a reasonable amount of Treasury notes for gold, but we do not intend to make the Treasury of the United States the agency through which gold exporters can, without the payment of any premium or what the French call 'adio,' or any expense whatever, come and take our gold and ship it abroad. Therefore we decline to make that kind of payment in gold"—had he said that he would have performed a meritorious and deserving act, and one which it was absolutely within his discretion to have performed.

Continuing, the Senator said:

> If there is blame of the payment of the Treasury notes in gold, I am frank to admit that there is where the blame lies. I am not here to complain that the succeeding Secretary paid in gold just as his predecessors had done.

Continuing, after some further comments, the Senator said:

> Then came the change of Administration, and Mr. Carlisle, as Secretary of the Treasury, was confronted with this very question. Where there had been an inconsiderable amount of gold in the aggregate taken out of the Treasury of the United States, there came to be a great amount taken out during the early months of his Administration. I say here now, believing as I do that the Government of the United States should never have paid a dollar of gold upon these certificates, and certainly not a dollar under the circumstances under which they were paid, that if I had been Secretary of the Treasury I should not have changed the policy of the Government at that time and paid silver on them in the condition in which the market was during the early days of this Administration. It was no more than proper and right.
> I am not going to criticise an officer for doing that which I think under custom which had been established he was in duty bound to do, which was to continue a policy which his predecessors had established in order that there might be no disturbance in financial affairs at a time when financial disturbances were threatened, for while I think the payment of these Treasury notes by Mr. Foster, in the first instance, would not have created a ripple in financial circles, I am free to say that I believe if Mr. Carlisle had paid them in April, May, or June, there would have been a considerable disturbance in financial affairs. Not that we should have gone, as the Senator from New Jersey says, to a silver basis, or anything of that kind, but it would have added to the excitement, and there was no reason why, the policy having been adopted, the Secretary of the Treasury should not have continued it, because we were able to pay in gold.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know whether the Senator intends to read all of my speech or not, but, in justice to me, he should read what I said with reference to the condemnation which I made of Mr. Carlisle. I complained that Mr. Carlisle had attempted to change that policy.

Mr. LINDSAY. I propose to read all of that.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.

Mr. LINDSAY. The Senator continued:

> So I make no criticism of that. My criticism of the Secretary of the Treasury is that he did not say promptly, with that firmness which should have characterized a public officer charged with so great a duty as that of maintaining, as the Secretary of the Treasury is to some extent, the financial security of the country, on the 4th of March or immediately after: "I propose to follow just in the line of my predecessors in this matter."
> I repeat, if he had said that, there would have been no disquietude under the sun with reference to the question whether we were able or willing to continue to redeem the Treasury notes and the greenbacks in gold.—Congressional Record, appendix to part 3, pages 349 and 350, special session Fifty-third Congress.

The criticism was not that Mr. Carlisle followed the custom which had been established by Republican Secretaries of the Treasury, but that he did not announce at the outset promptly and decisively that he intended to follow that custom.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will read the whole of my remarks he will find that I went beyond that. I charged that the Secretary of the Treasury had changed the policy and then backed out of it.

Mr. LINDSAY. Of course I can not read the Senator's entire speech. I will, however, read enough to illustrate my point. The Senator charged that Mr. Carlisle had started to change the policy and then backed out of it. I will say, in justice to Mr. Carlisle, that he denies absolutely and unequivocally that he ever gave any intimation to any man that he proposed to change the policy; but, upon the contrary, he announced, as the Senator says he ought to have announced, that he intended to follow the policy which, under the circumstances, he could not change without disturbing financial conditions.

Mr. TELLER. But that was just the contention between myself and the Secretary. I contended, and I attempted to present the authority in proof of it, that he had notified the subtreasurer in New York that he would make this change; and he had done that, too, without notice to the public, or anything of the kind. The President of the United States had declined to allow that change to be made, and that is the way the trouble in New York began. I think I might say further that in that speech and in others I charged that that was done for the purpose of creating an excitement that would enable the Administration to repeal the Sherman Act.

Mr. LINDSAY. I think I have stated the points in the Senator's speech fairly. The contention of fact between Mr. Carlisle and the Senator I shall not undertake to settle; but as to the other charge, which is collateral to the subject I am now discussing, I attempted on the floor of the Senate to vindicate Mr. Carlisle from that charge, and I am willing now that that vindication, weak as it was, shall go to the country.

If it was proper for Mr. Carlisle to follow the example and pursue the policy of Mr. Foster in regard to the Sherman notes, it was likewise proper for him to follow the example and continue the policy of all his predecessors in regard to the greenbacks, or United States notes. He has followed in the line of his predecessors, as the Senator from Colorado declared he ought to have done, and, in order to follow that policy, has been compelled from time to time to buy gold to maintain "the financial security of the country." This is the sum of his offending.

Carrying out a line of policy this Administration found firmly established, and which, under the surroundings, it could not abandon without danger to the financial security of the country, it has borne the obloquy and endured the criticism which always attend the enforcement of vicious legislation. It has done this, too, in the face of the persistent refusal of Congress to reform the financial system or to make it possible to change or modify the policy it has most unsparingly condemned.

The Republican party has suggested no remedy, except the increase of taxation. The free coinage of silver at 16 to 1 is the only alternative offered on the other hand.

There has been a decided sentiment in favor of the coinage of legal-tender silver since the Government in 1875 fixed the time for and put on foot the measures by which specie payment was to be resumed. At the outset the question of the particular ratio was not deemed a matter of importance. There was a strong feeling in favor of 15½ to 1, because that was the ratio at which silver had been coined by the States composing the Latin Union. In 1878 it was believed by many that we might safely go to free coinage at 16 to 1, inasmuch as silver bullion at that time had declined in its market value less than 8 per cent and there was an apparent reason to hope that the increased demand resulting from the remonetization and free coinage of silver by the United States would restore and preserve the old-time parity. That was the time when Mr. Carlisle made the speech which has been so often referred to, and which Senators are anxious now to make for the second time a part of the record of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. What was the status, will the Senator say, in 1890, when Senator Carlisle voted for free coinage and wrote his celebrated letter to Mr. Smith, of Kentucky?

Mr. LINDSAY. If the Senator desires to make that letter a matter of record, then I shall give my attention to that letter. I am not now discussing Mr. Carlisle; I am discussing the question of the free coinage o silver.

Mr. COCKRELL. You were discussing what Mr. Carlisle did in 1878, and I want to know what he did in 1890.

Mr. LINDSAY. I collaterally referred to the attempt of gentlemen to publish a statement made by him in 1878, but not what he did or forbore to do in 1890. I am not here to defend Mr. Carlisle; Mr. Carlisle would not thank me for becoming his champion; and the Senate knows, the Senator knows, and the country knows that Mr. Carlisle is able upon all occasions and under all circumstances to take care of himself.

The coinage of silver under the Bland-Allison Act did not, nor did its purchase under the Sherman Act of 1890, impede the steady decline in the relative value of silver bullion. The two metals, gold and silver, continued to separate further and further, and in 1893 came the utter collapse of silver as a money metal in all the controlling business nations of the world.

It profits nothing to inquire the causes which produced that result. The demonetization of silver by the leading countries of Europe and by the United States between 1870 and 1876 no doubt contributed to it in a very great degree. Another and still more potent cause was the increased and cheapened production of silver bullion and the general conviction as to the still greater possibilities in the way of increased and cheapened production.

Whatever the causes may have been, we have the fact that, as compared with the currency of the European world and the currency of our own country, silver bullion has depreciated in its market value almost one-half. With this fact admitted, it is now proposed that the United States, by their own separate and independent action, shall open their mints to the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, and, by so doing, undertake the herculean task of restoring the parity between the two money metals. We shrunk from such an undertaking in 1878, when silver had declined only 8 per cent; but it is proposed to take up the work in 1896 with a diminished market value of silver bullion six times greater than in 1878.

In proportion as the difficulties have increased, the seeming confidence of those who call themselves the friends of silver and the advocates of bimetallism has magnified. Neither of the great parties heretofore representing the political differences of the American people considered with favor in 1892 the experiment of free and unlimited coinage. The nominee of the Democratic party was known of all men to be unalterably opposed to any such policy. The platform then adopted by the Democratic party was intended to meet, and did meet, the views of that nominee, and his interpretation of the currency plank was accepted by the party as the correct one. His theory then was, and it was the then theory of his party, that "Every dollar put into the hands of the people should be of the same intrinsic value or purchasing power," and that with "this condition absolutely guaranteed, both gold and silver can be safely utilized upon equal terms in the adjustment of the currency."

The Democratic nominee for the Vice-Presidency was equally explicit. He understood the platform to import—

That every dollar, whatsoever its form, that finds its way into his—

The farmer's or wage earner's—pocket shall be of equal, unquestioned, and universally exchangeable value and of equal purchasing power.

In the Democratic convention, and pending the consideration of a proposed amendment to the platform looking to the insertion of the word "free" in connection with the declaration in favor of the coinage of both gold and silver, Mr. Patterson, of Colorado, who spoke for the advanced friends of silver coinage, declared that all they asked was—

The recognition of the doctrine of free bimetallic coinage as a doctrine of the Democratic party; not the coinage of a 70-cent dollar, but the coinage of gold and silver dollars of a fixed parity, and each dollar containing metal of equal intrinsic value.

Not a parity fixed by law, but that each dollar, whether gold or silver, should contain metal of equal intrinsic value. I shall not stop to consider the criticism of the word "intrinsic." Evidently Mr. Patterson used it as every reasonable man would understand from the manner of its use, that the dollar he demanded the right to have freely coined out of silver was a dollar to contain bullion that would sell in the market for as much as the bullion in the gold dollar.

The bullion value of an American silver dollar, compared with gold, was then about 72 cents. Those for whom Mr. Patterson spoke did not then wish the free coinage of 72-cent silver dollars, but the free coinage of silver dollars equal in intrinsic value to gold.

Democrats had not up to that time turned their faces against the teachings of Jefferson that "the proportions between the value of gold and silver is a mercantile problem altogether"; that legal proportions ought to be disregarded and the average market prices of the two metals in the countries with which we are likely to be principally connected accepted as the ratio at which they may be freely coined. In 1892 no portion of the Democratic party—not even those whom Mr. Patterson especially represented—demanded the free coinage of 70-cent silver dollars. The free coinage of gold and silver dollars of a fixed parity, each dollar containing metal of equal intrinsic value, was the extent of their utmost demand, and no party, other than the Populists, was then ready to give countenance to the proposition of the unlimited coinage of legal-tender silver in the proportion of 16 to 1 of gold.

Of course there were many prominent Democrats who believed in that doctrine; of course there were many eminent Republicans who believed in that doctrine. But the Democratic party as a party did not hold to that doctrine, and the platform adopted, explained by the letters of acceptance of the nominee for President, of the nominee for Vice-President, and by this particular representative of silver coinage makes that proposition plain.

Since 1892 silver bullion has declined in value 30 per cent. The intrinsic metal value of the old silver dollar has fallen from 72 cents in 1892 to 53 cents in 1896; but nevertheless we are now to have unlimited silver coinage without a change of ratio and without regard to the policies of the countries from which we buy, to which we sell, and with which we have our principal trade relations.

Two or three years ago the argument was common that the free coinage of silver by the United States would of its own force restore the former relations between the two metals, and in 1893 it was confidently announced on the floor of the Senate by a distinguished Senator, then and now a member of the Finance Committee, that the day the United States should open their mints to free coinage, that day silver would go to a dollar and twenty-nine cents an ounce in the markets of the world. I do not remember any recent expression of that sublime faith in the superhuman efficacy of an act of Congress. There may be those who still entertain that belief, but in the main it now seems to be conceded that the free coinage of the cheaper metal will drive American gold to Europe as rapidly, at the least, as we may increase the volume of legal-tender silver. As an offset to this it is contended that the increase of gold in Europe will lessen the demand for the supply now on that side of the ocean, and to that extent cheapen its money value and thus increase the prices for which American products may be sold in the European markets. It is at best doubtful whether gold in any quantity could be kept in this country to compete with cheaper silver money freely coined on individual account. The gold that might not be immediately exported would be hoarded for speculation and converted at once into an article of merchandise. The rule in such a state of case is that—

Whenever, under the double standard, there is a variance between the legal and market relations of the metals, the standard would be practically based on one metal, and it the cheaper and more available. There never can be practically two money standards whose units of account differ in value in any country at the same time.

This rule is founded upon the experience of mankind. It is not of my crystallization. It was declared to be axiomatic by the majority report of the Silver Commission created by the Senate in 1876, and that report was the handiwork of Senator JONES of Nevada.

We may take it as a conceded proposition that if we have two standards of different metallic values the standard will practically be based on the metal that is cheapest and most available; that—

There never can be practically two money standards whose units of account differ in value in any country at the same time.

Commencing free coinage at the ratio of 16 to 1, we would have a variance of nearly one-half between the legal and market relations of gold and silver from the beginning, and our standard would be based on one metal, "and that the cheaper and more available one." We would go at the first step to silver monometallism. We would at once be compelled to face the business disturbances which would necessarily follow so radical a change in our financial system. We would have cheap money, cheap in the sense that it would have a reduced purchasing power, but it will be well to consider the fact that cheap money thus secured, we may have, without increasing the volume of our currency and especially the volume of our money of ultimate redemption. If all the available silver bullion in existence and all the future production of silver bullion should be brought to our mints we could not coin it into money as fast as our gold coin would be withdrawn from circulation, and the first and immediate effect of the free coinage of silver would be to contract the volume of our metal or primary money.

The claim is made that the demand for currency would keep our gold at home, but it would not keep it in circulation. It might be held for speculative purposes, but not for use as money or currency. No man would invest his gold in property of any kind until the lowest possible prices had been reached and it had ceased to be profitable longer to hold it.

Mr. William P. St. John, president of the Mercantile National Bank of New York, an able and persistent advocate of the free coinage of silver, whilst testifying in 1894 before the House Committee on Banking and Currency, outlined a bill for free coinage which provided—

That the silver dollar now existing shall be coinable without limit in amount on producing the bullion for it and on the same terms now prescribed for gold.

In answer to the direct question—

Would your theory put this country on a silver basis?—

He replied:

Momentarily it might; I think it would immediately.

He was then asked—

How long would that condition prevail?

He answered:

I would not predict the achievement of actual bimetallism in the United States under the bill earlier than two years; that is, two years at the outside. I should expect it earlier if conditions now existing abroad—existing outside of France—prevail; I would expect it to be accomplished within one year.

I do not quote the opinion of Mr. St. John because he is a banker, but because he is an ardent friend of free coinage and regarded as authority upon the subject by the special friends of silver.

One year at the least, probably two years, of the single silver standard we are to have when we go to free coinage. One year, probably two, of the contraction necessarily incident to the expulsion of six hundred millions of gold from our volume of primary or redemption money.

Those who believe in free coinage insist that the contraction of the currency necessarily results in diminishing prices. Mr. St. John says that—

To enlarge the aggregate of money in the United States is to raise normal prices for home and internationally consumed commodities here. Per contra, to diminish the aggregate of money in the United States is to lower all normal prices.

This is the accepted theory of all advocates of free silver. If Mr. St. John be correct, then the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1 by the independent action of the United States means silver monometallism in this country for one year certainly, and probably for two years. Silver monometallism means the diminution of the aggregate of the money in the United States during those two years of more than 30 per cent. That diminution means the lowering here of the normal prices of all home and internationally consumed commodities. In the present business conditions the lowering of prices by the intervention of a Congressional enactment will drive embarrassed debtors to bankruptcy, alarm creditors and investors, and excite such distrust as may precipitate another business panic. So well satisfied was Mr. St. John that free coinage means temporary silver monometallism that he incorporated in his proposed bill a section providing for what he denominated "emergency currency"; that is, that for the time being and to meet conditions that might arise from the expulsion of our gold from circulation the Government should issue legal-tender money based upon uncoined silver bullion and upon the security of United States bonds. Whether this emergency currency, if issued, would inspire public confidence and preserve public and private credit may very well be doubted, but it was the best substitute Mr. St. John could suggest, and of the necessity for its issue he seemed to entertain no doubt.

The great mass of those who to-day are pressing for the free coinage of silver and insisting that it would be a remedy for all our financial difficulties make no suggestions as to how we are to bridge over the temporary emergency foreseen by Mr. St. John. They shut their eyes to all danger and call upon the American people to join them in the perilous and reckless experiment of free coinage at 16 to 1 without regard to consequences. Mr. St. John, by his bill, proposed that coin certificates should be issued upon the deposit of uncoined gold and silver, and also that such certificates might be issued and loaned upon the deposit of bonds of the United States. Explaining this provision against the consequences of the expulsion of gold from our circulation in case free coinage should have that effect, he said:

If a money panic threatened, the proposed enactment, with a sharp contraction of our aggregate of money, this provision (section 6) would empower the Secretary of the Treasury to issue over $200,000,000 of United States coin certificates against silver coin and bullion already in the Treasury and loan them at 4 per cent and 5 per cent per annum against United States interest-bearing bonds. This issue would reduce the aggregate reserve against silver certificates and Treasury notes to about 62 per cent.

He explained further that his suggested bill proposed in effect—

That the Congress restore immediately the coinage system of the United States founded with the mint in 1792, maintained for eighty years thereafter, and overthrown unobservedly when neither gold nor silver was our current money. It provides the modern convenience of paper substitute for coin on the choice of the depositors of gold and silver at the mint, one and the same coin certificate redeemable on demand in coin, and redeems these coin certificates in gold or silver, at the option and convenience of the United States. It provides an emergency issue of these coin certificates additionally, with "elasticity" unquestionable and with redemptions on demand assured, and the means in the Secretary's hands to stifle any panic in Wall street instanter.

With this explanation Mr. St. John was still apprehensive that the country might go to a silver basis, and was not willing to predict the achievement of bimetallism in the United States earlier than two years; or, at the best, earlier than one year. The possibility of the country being driven to the single silver standard, and the contemplation of a possible money panic, he did not pretend to conceal. He felt that an emergency might follow the adoption of his free-silver proposition, and that to meet it there would be a necessity for an "emergency issue" of coin certificates to take the place of the standard money driven from circulation by the free-silver experiment. Silver monometallism precipitated upon the country by act of Congress, whether for one, two, or ten years, would be equivalent to immediate and "sharp contraction." It would destroy confidence and excite alarm in every quarter. The "money-market panic" which would follow would be beyond the power of any "emergency issue" of coin certificates to relieve against or to mitigate.

Mr. Wharton Barker, another of the free-silver leaders of the East, does not rely on the potency of the so-called "emergency issue." He meets the question squarely, and insists that no contraction will follow free coinage. His theory is that contraction from the expulsion of our gold would be impossible—for any export of gold before silver was coined to take its place in our currency would result in raising prices in Europe and relatively forcing them down in America, with the result that America would become an attractive market to buy in, and for that reason gold would flow back in payment for our grain, cotton, and other produce at their reduced prices. (See the Philadelphia American, May 9, 1896.)

That is a quotation from an editorial in the American, a newspaper published in Philadelphia, a stanch advocate of free silver coinage, edited, as I am informed, by Mr. Barker.

It is encouraging to the American farmer to be told that in any event, during the time we may be coining silver to take the place of gold, we shall be able to keep the latter metal in circulation here by our "attractive market to buy in" consequent upon the forcing down of the prices of our agricultural products.

We are, however, assured that the opening of our mints to free coinage will so increase the demand for silver and diminish the demand for gold that the two metals will come together at their legalized ratio. How many points we may expect silver to advance and how many points gold will decline no one has yet ventured to predict, but the leading 16-to-1 bimetallists confidently claim that silver will rise as gold falls. They confidently assert that the present low prices of cotton and wheat will follow silver in its upward march, so that if silver appreciates 50 per cent, 60-cent wheat will sell for 90 cents and 8-cent cotton for 12 cents. Upon the same principle, high-priced labor will follow gold in its downward course, and the man who depends upon his wages for support will, under the new order of things, be compelled to pay 25 per cent advance upon all the necessaries of life without a corresponding increase in his daily or monthly stipend.

In a table prepared for and published by the American, February 8, 1896, it is shown that while the prices of cotton and wheat declined 50 per cent between 1873 and 1895, the decline in the prices of our great staples, corn and tobacco, was less than 8 per cent, and that the increase in the prices of bacon and beef was from 10 to 25 per cent. It was shown by that table that from 1873 to 1895 cotton cloths had declined in price over 60 per cent, copper ingots and bars 65 per cent, and mineral and illuminating oils 85 per cent.

Taking the farming products actually exported in 1895 at the comparative prices of 1895 and 1873, that table disclosed the following result as to the values in those years respectively:

	1895.	1873.
Wheat flour	$51,651,928	$102,409,534
Wheat	43,805,663	88,583,547
Corn	14,650,707	15,174,743
Bacon and hams	48,736,680	44,085,484
Beef	16,832,860	13,202,356
Tobacco	25,622,776	27,616,810
Total	201,300,674	291,132,474

These figures show an aggregate loss on these six staples of agricultural production, taking the prices of 1873 and 1895 as the criterion, of $99,831,800, which loss is, of course, to be distributed among all the States producing and exporting wheat, corn, bacon, pork, beef, and tobacco.

On the other hand, the table shows that the prices of staples the farmer must buy with the proceeds of the sales of his wheat, corn, meats, and tobacco and which were actually imported into the United States in 1895 had from 1873 declined as follows:

	1895.	1873.
Sugar	$76,461,557	$167,998,466
Tea	13,170,924	32,578,686
Coffee	96,129,326	86,742,907
Tin plates	12,144,080	39,149,028
Window glass	835,730	1,916,955
Salt	680,802	993,044
Molasses	211,143	566,519
Total	199,633,562	330,058,888

We thus had an aggregate saving to the farmers who consumed these seven staple articles in the difference between their prices in 1873 and 1895 of over $130,000,000, or over $30,000,000 more than the decline of the prices of the quantity of wheat, flour, corn, bacon, hams, beef, and tobacco exported in 1895. These figures prove that there are two sides to the question as to the effect the general decline of prices may have had upon the business of the Middle States farmer. It may be, and it seems probable, he saves more in the purchase of those things he must have and can not produce than he loses in the sale of his crops.

In a speech delivered in the Senate September 19, 1893, Mr. MILLS of Texas compared the prices of farm products in 1873 with their prices in 1891, and the prices in 1873 of articles the farmer customarily purchases, with their prices in 1891, and upon that comparison reached these conclusions:

These prices in the table show conclusively that the farmer has been benefited by the general fall of prices, because his products would buy more in 1891 than in 1873. In 1873 cotton was worth 18.8 cents per pound, and 1,000 pounds was worth $188, and at that time it would buy 766 gallons of illuminating oil, or 1,620 pounds of refined sugar, or 4½ tons of pig iron, or 2 tons of bar iron, or 1½ tons of steel rails, or 3,832 pounds of nails, or 1,412 yards of sheeting, or 1,330 yards of drilling, or 970 yards of shirting, or 1,653 yards of standard prints, or 2,810 yards of print cloth; while in 1891 1,000 pounds of cotton was worth $100, and at the prices of these same things at that time it would buy 1,428 gallons of oil, 1,754 pounds of sugar, 5½ tons of pig ore, 2½ tons of bar iron, 2½ tons of steel rails, 5,322 pounds of cut nails, 1,464 yards of sheeting, 1,560 yards of drilling, 940 yards of shirting, 1,666 yards of print, and 3,389 yards of print cloth.

With the exception of shirting, it would buy more of every other article enumerated, and the difference in that was very small. One thousand pounds of beef would buy, in 1873, 281 gallons of oil, 555 pounds of sugar, 1,282 pounds of nails, 490 yards of sheeting, 462 yards of drilling, 338 yards of shirting, 583 yards of prints, or 888 yards of print cloth; while in 1891 it would buy 809 gallons of oil, 982 pounds of refined sugar, 3,010 pounds of nails, 849 yards of sheeting, 873 yards of drilling, 526 yards of shirting, 933 yards of standard prints, or 1,989 yards of print cloth.

One thousand pounds of pork would buy, in 1873, 289 gallons of oil, 571 pounds of refined sugar, 1,319 pounds of nails, 504 yards of sheeting, 475 yards of drilling, 348 yards of shirting, 600 yards of standard prints, or 914 yards of print cloth; while in 1891 it would buy 843 gallons of oil, 1,055 pounds of refined sugar, 3,172 pounds of nails, 863 yards of sheeting, 920 yards of drilling, 554 yards of shirting, 983 yards of standard prints, or 2,000 yards of print cloth.

One thousand pounds of bacon and hams would buy, in 1873, 345 gallons of oil, 682 pounds of refined sugar, 1,564 pounds of nails, 603 yards of sheeting, 598 yards of drilling, 415 yards of shirting, 716 yards of standard prints, or 1,091 yards of print cloth; while in 1891 it would buy 1,085 gallons of oil, 1,157 pounds of refined sugar, 4,086 pounds of nails, 1,111 yards of sheeting, 1,185 yards of drilling, 714 yards of shirting, 1,266 yards of standard prints, or 2,576 yards of print cloth.

One thousand pounds of tobacco in 1873 would buy 413 gallons of oil, 833 pounds of sugar, 1,886 pounds of nails, 721 yards of sheeting, 680 yards of drilling, 498 yards of shirting, 856 yards of standard prints, or 1,307 yards of print cloth; while in 1891 it would buy 1,243 gallons of oil, 1,526 pounds of refined sugar, 4,677 pounds of nails, 1,273 yards of sheeting, 1,357 yards of drilling, 817 yards of shirting, 1,450 yards of standard prints, or 2,949 yards of print cloth.

One hundred bushels of wheat in 1873 would buy 590 gallons of oil, 1,176 pounds of refined sugar, 2,509 pounds of nails, 1,030 yards of sheeting, 964 yards of drilling, 611 yards of shirting, 1,225 yards of standard prints, or 1,840 yards of print cloth; while in 1891 it would buy 1,328 gallons of oil, 1,631 pounds of refined sugar, 5,000 pounds of nails, 1,342 yards of sheeting, 1,453 yards of drilling, 853 yards of shirting, 1,550 yards of standard prints, or 2,784 yards of print cloths.

What was true in this regard in 1891 is true in 1896. The continued decline in prices has affected the farmer as a purchaser equally with the farmer as a seller. If he receives less for the products of his industry, he pays less for his indispensable supplies.

The assumption that the general decline in prices is due to the discrimination against silver as a money metal is without warrant or support in fact. There is no occult connection between silver and wheat, or silver and cotton, any more than there is between silver and the meat product or silver and tobacco. If the alleged demonetization of silver has enhanced the value of gold and because of such enhancement diminished the market prices of cotton and wheat, the same cause ought to operate equally upon every other article of commerce where no exceptional reason intervenes to the contrary. If high-priced money makes low-priced goods, then, all things else being substantially alike, the prices of everything we produce or consume should equally decline. Such has not been the case. An advocate of free coinage had prepared and published in the American of January 25, 1896, a table upon this subject. He took January 1, 1891, as the basis of his figures, and the prices on that day of various articles of first-class importance as the test of the conclusion he proposed to draw.

This table shows that between January 1, 1891, and April 1, 1891, silver as measured by the gold standard declined from 100, the initial number, to 94.25. During the same time breadstuffs increased in price from 100 to 118.31 and live stock from 100 to 116.98. Between April 1 and July 1, 1891, silver increased in price from 94.25 to 98.21, while breadstuffs declined from 118.31 to 103.90 and live stock from 116.98 to 110.38. Between January 1, 1891, and April 1, 1893, silver declined from 100 to 80, while live stock increased from 100 to 125.28 and provisions from 100 to 115.84. October 1, 1894, silver stood at 60.84, live stock at 101.57, and provisions at 97.68. These instances are enough to prove that the price of silver has no immediate or intimate or natural connection with the prices of agricultural products.

A table prepared by Mr. Schoenhoff, a gentleman who was largely quoted in this Chamber during the tariff debate of 1894, shows the following changes in prices between 1850, when free coinage of both gold and silver prevailed this country; 1879, when we resumed specie payment, and 1888, fifteen years subsequent to the so-called crime of 1873:

	1850.	1879.	1888.
Coffee	100	143	166
Sugar	100	55	49
Tobacco	100	156	244
Wheat	100	75	58
Raw silk	100	113	117
Flax and hemp	100	80	66
Tin	100	77	173
Iron	100	77	67

We thus see that sugar fell 51 per cent between 1850, when we had free coinage, and 1888, when we had the single gold standard. During the same period wheat declined 42 per cent, but tobacco advanced in price from 100 in 1850 to 244 in 1888, and 88 per cent of that advance was between 1879 and 1888. Tin ran down from 100 in 1850 to 77 in 1879, and then up from 77 in 1879 to 173 in 1888, or about 225 per cent increase, and that was before it was reinforced by the provisions of the McKinley law.

It is folly to say that the money standard has controlled or does control prices independent of other and more potent considerations. The general decline of prices during the past thirty years can not be attributed to any one cause, much less to the change of the money standard. No man capable of reasoning can shut his eyes to the results which have followed the universal use of improved machinery and labor-saving appliances. The Bessemer process, the development of the power of electricity, the steam plow, the modern reaper and thrasher, reduced rates of transportation, and many other cognate causes have combined to cheapen production and necessarily to lower prices. Our present industrial capacity for the almost unlimited production of all that is useful, all those things that satisfy our wants, minister to our comforts, or gratify our tastes, renders continued high prices practically impossible. The sooner we recognize the changed conditions which thirty years have wrought out, and that the march of events can not be turned back by legislative interference, the sooner we will adjust our business affairs to the new conditions and intelligently deal with the modern situation.

The tendency toward financial stringency was developed about 1890. A general business collapse came upon us in 1893. We have since had periods of apparent relief, but reflecting men understand that "hard times" must run their course, and that business follies and excesses must be atoned for before we can have a return to permanent and general prosperity. We can not improve the situation by experimenting with our money standard. The greatest period of prosperity the agricultural States and the States we call "Southern" have ever had was since "the crime of 1873" and under the operation of what the agitators of the free and unlimited coinage of silver call the single gold standard. Of the truth of this statement the statistics furnished by the census returns of 1880 and the census returns of 1890 are most convincing. I quote from a compilation made by Mr. Richard T. Edmonds, of the Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, Md., printed and circulated in 1895, as follows:

Recent census publications, although three years behind time, make it possible to compare the agricultural and manufacturing advance of the South from 1880 to 1890 with that of the country at large. The result is a remarkably favorable showing for the South. Starting in 1880 with total farm assets, which includes the value of farms, implements, etc., of $2,314,000,000, the South made an advance by 1890 to $3,182,000,000—a gain of 37 per cent. During the same period the increase in all other States and Territories was from $9,790,000,000 to $12,797,000,000, or 30 per cent. In studying these figures it should be remembered that the South had little or no immigration to help to swell the volume of its agricultural products, while other sections had the benefit of a large proportion of the 5,000,000 foreigners who had landed here during the decade, the number that settled on Western farms probably being a large majority of the total.

The total value of farm products of the South in 1880 was $906,000,000, against $1,500,000,000 for the remainder of the country. In 1890 the South produced $773,000,000, a gain of $107,000,000, or 16 per cent, while the gain in the rest of the country was only $141,000,000, or 9 per cent. With just one-fourth as much total assets in farm operations as the balance of the country, the South had $107,000,000 increase in production out of a total of $248,000,000, or nearly one-half.

The South had $3,182,000,000 invested in farm interests in 1890, and the total productions were $773,000,000, or a gross revenue of 24.1 per cent on the capital. All other sections combined had $12,797,000,000 in farm operations and the product was $1,687,000,000, or 13.1 per cent gross revenue, only a fraction more than one-half as much in percentage of production as the South's. It is impossible to get at the net profits, but these figures show how far ahead the South is in the gross product based on the capital invested.

In a much greater degree the manufacturing interests of the South increased between 1880 and 1890. Mr. Edmonds's compilation of the census reports show that—

In 1880 the South had $257,244,561 invested in manufacturing; by 1890 this had increased to $859,008,817, a gain of 156 per cent, while the gain in the entire country was 120.76 per cent. The value of the manufactured products of the South rose from $457,454,777 in 1880 to $917,589,045 in 1890, a gain of 100 per cent against an increase of only 69.27 per cent in the whole country. The factory hands of the South received $75,917,471 in wages in 1880 and in 1890 $222,118,505.

In 1890 the South had $21,976,000 invested in cotton manufacturing. It had 180 cotton mills, with 667,854 spindles and 14,300 looms. Since then this industry has quadrupled, and the capital invested aggregates $107,000,000. Comparing the census reports of 1880 and 1890, and the reports of the Manufacturers' Record for 1894 of the South's cotton manufacturing industry, we have:

Cotton manufacturing in the South.

	1880.	1890.	1894.
Capital	$21,976,712	$61,194,096	*$107,000,000
Number of mills	180	254	425
Number of spindles	667,754	1,712,930	3,023,000
Number of looms	14,323	33,231	68,000
Value of product	$21,038,712	$46,971,503

*Estimated on basis of average capital per spindle in 1890.

In this connection, for fear some one may question the accuracy of this compilation, I will read an extract taken from Mr. Wharton Barker's newspaper, the American, of September 14, 1895. He quotes from the New Orleans Times-Democrat, and gives the quotation the weight of his authority. He says:

The New Orleans Times-Democrat, a paper noted for the accuracy of the statistics which it gathers and publishes from time to time, has lately made a comparative statement of the progress of the South in the past fifteen years.

That is from 1880 to 1895.

By the term South, it denotes the thirteen States south of the Potomac and Ohio, from Virginia to Texas. In this region from the year 1880 to 1895, the manufacturing establishments have increased from 34,565 to 59,176, and the capital invested from $179,336,240 to $559,467,500. The number of hands had more than doubled, and the wages more than trebled.

The cultivated land has increased from 34,679,145 acres to 59,462,672, while the value of farm products has risen in about equal proportion from $611,699,145 to $976,463,500. The number of farms has increased from 1,726,480 to 2,402,672.

These statistics and those relating to the coal and iron of the South are interesting as showing a regular progress and testifying that the change from the primitive dependence upon agriculture alone is giving place to diversified industries without impairing or curtailing the proper progress of agriculture. It is probable that the development of the natural resources of the South will be still greater in the next fifteen years than in the past.

Then Mr. Barker gives his opinion as to what is necessary to make that assurance doubly sure, not to go to the free coinage of silver, but, he says—

What is necessary to secure this is the restoration of the policy of protection to home industry, which the South has, unwisely for itself, so long opposed.

I will now take up a compilation made by Mr. Mulhall, the great English statistician, who, in an article in the June number (1895) of the North American Review, compares the conditions of the United States in 1870, 1880, and 1890, as shown by the census returns of those years.

He shows that the wealth of the New England States between 1870 and 1890 increased from $3,237,000,000 to $5,223,000,000, or more than 60 per cent; that the Middle States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland increased from $9,683,000,000 in 1870 to $17,819,000,000 in 1890, or about 88 per cent; that the Southern States, including the two Virginias, the two Carolinas, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Kentucky, and Tennessee, increased from $2,827,000,000 in 1870 to $9,928,000,000 in 1890, or more than 350 per cent; that the Prairie States, including Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, and the two Dakotas, increased from $7,642,000,000 in 1870 to $25,256,000,000 in 1890, or about 330 per cent; that the Pacific States increased from $656,000,000 in 1870 to $6,811,000,000 in 1890, or more than 1,000 per cent; that the increase in the Southern States from 1880 to 1890 was from $6,448,000,000 in 1880 to $9,928,000,000 in 1890, or more than 50 per cent, and the increase in the Pacific States from 1880 to 1890 was from $2,282,000,000 in 1880 to $6,811,000,000 in 1890, or about 300 per cent. These estimates were made upon a gold basis, the currency of the year 1870 having been treated as equal to 80 cents on the dollar in gold.

His tables also show that the increase in the value of lands from 1870 to 1890 was the difference between $7,410,000,000 in 1870 and $13,279,000,000 in 1890, or nearly 80 per cent; that the increase in the value of lands from 1850 to 1890 was from an average value of $29 per acre in 1850 to an average value of $37 per acre in 1890; and that the increase in the value of houses from 1870 to 1890 was from $9,240,000,000 in 1870 to $21,210,000,000 in 1890, or more than 216 per cent. Also that between 1870 and 1890 there was expended in the construction of new lines of American railway an average of $1,000,000 a day, and that the freight charges of railway transportation in the United States in 1890 averaged only 93 cents per ton per hundred miles, or less than half the customary charge in Europe of $1.90 per ton per hundred miles. In this respect there was saved to the American people $845,000,000 yearly. In his discussion Mr. Mulhall uses this language:

Another large item in the increment of wealth is houses, which represent an annual investment of $12 per inhabitant of the whole Union during twenty years ending 1890. The annual average in Great Britain is $5.50, and as economists recognize the outlay on houses to be the gauge of wealth, it appears that the average accumulation in the United States is double what it is in the mother country.

Whether we include the twenty-year period from 1870 to 1890, or the ten-year period from 1880 to 1890, the comparative results are the same. Our increase in wealth has never been equaled in any country or in any age. It was confined to no section. The claim that the agricultural States have not had their fair share of the general prosperity is disproved by the facts. The popular cry that whilst the center of population has traveled westward the center of wealth has moved toward the east or northeast has no foundation in fact.

From 1870 to 1890 the relative increase in values was:

	Per cent.
New England States	60
Middle States	88
Southern States	350
Prairie States	330
Pacific States	1,000

The real, subtantial, and permanent increase of values was in the Southern and Prairie agricultural States. I make that distinction because the Pacific States have mainly been developed from a wilderness since 1870. The increase was more than five times greater in the Southern and Prairie States than in New England, and four times greater than in the States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, with all their great cities and all their combinations and syndicates of bankers, brokers, and railroad magnates.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would it disturb the Senator if I were to ask him a question?

Mr. LINDSAY. No, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Am I to infer, then, from the Senator's statement of that fact, that the accusation so frequently made that wealth is being aggregated in the East does not seem to be true?

Mr. LINDSAY. Here are the figures.

Mr. GALLINGER. I agree, I will say, with the Senator's observation upon that point.

Mr. LINDSAY. That the times are hard, that the people are oppressed with debt and unable to pay, that universal want of business confidence prevails, and that conditions seem to grow worse rather than better, it is useless to deny.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him if he has any statistics as to the relative advance or retrogression since 1890?

Mr. LINDSAY. The paper from which I read the extract, the Times-Democrat, covers the period between 1880 and 1895.

Mr. BACON. That was not the question I asked the honorable Senator. It is not what is the aggregate from 1880 to 1895, but what is the fact with reference to this matter between the dates of 1890 and 1895? Is it not a fact that between those dates the increase in wealth in the East has been very great, and that wealth has absolutely decreased in other parts of the country?

Mr. LINDSAY. I have no official data on the subject and no data that pretends to be official. I have given the best data I could have access to. My object was not to prove that there had not been a decline in wealth since 1890 in the South, nor to prove that there had been an increase. My attempt has been to show that the single standard did not interfere with the increase of wealth from 1870 up to 1890, nor the increase of wealth between 1870 and 1894.

If that great increase took place under the single standard during those twenty-four years, the single standard did not stand in the way of the increase. If there has been a decrease since 1890, or since 1893, that decrease is to be traced to some other cause than the single standard, under which the country flourished for twenty years as it never flourished before.

Mr. BATE. Will not the Senator admit that, although the proposition may be true that wealth did increase, yet it was concentrated during that time in the hands of a few?

Mr. LINDSAY. If it was, it was concentrated in the hands of the few in the South, and not in the hands of the few in the North or in the East, because the statistics show that the increase in the South was 350 per cent, while the increase in the great States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, etc., was only 88 per cent. I do not know how you distributed your wealth in Tennessee, but what I mean to say is that during twenty years you increased under what you call the gold standard, which you now claim is the cause of all our sorrows, as you never increased before.

Mr. BATE. But while the products in the agricultural States have increased during that time the proceeds have been concentrated in the hands of others who live elsewhere, and I think principally in the East and in the North.

Mr. LINDSAY. The figures are against you. The products of the agriculturist declined and the products of the man who buys from the agriculturist declined in equal proportion, not because of the gold standard, but because of the increased and cheapened facilities for production, which will reduce prices, and ought to reduce prices, unless the benefits of increased facilities for production are to go alone to the producers and the consumers are to have no share in the general gain.

Mr. VEST. I do not care to interrupt the Senator, but does he not overlook the fact in his argument in favor of the single gold standard that from 1878 to 1890 silver was partially remonetized in this country under the operation of what is known as the Bland-Allison Act?

Mr. LINDSAY. I will answer the Senator by saying that the proposition now is not to partially remonetize silver; the proposition is not now to remonetize silver upon its commercial value, but to remonetize it at half its commercial value. I am not arguing for the gold standard, and I am not arguing against the Bland-Allison Act. I am arguing against the idea that our past legislation has stood in the way of progress, and I am willing to give, by way of discount, the full benefit of the coinage of 400,000,000 silver dollars.

Mr. GRAY. May I say to the Senator that I think it is agreed among scientific monetary economists that the coinage of silver under the Bland-Allison Act or under the Sherman Act was not remonetization of silver in the proper sense of that term at all?

Mr. LINDSAY. It has been compared on the floor of this Senate——

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that we always contended that the increased amount of money that was put in circulation was an aid and a help.

Mr. LINDSAY. I concur in that, that you have always argued that the increase in the quantity of money would tend to the increase of prices; but you have contended all the time, and still contend, that the Bland-Allison Act did not remonetize silver and that the silver coined under the Bland-Allison Act stood upon the same footing as bank notes or United States notes redeemable in coin.

Mr. GRAY. Or half dollars and quarters.

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes.

Mr. VEST. That statement is entirely incorrect. It has never been stated within my knowledge—and I have had some experience in regard to the discussion of this matter here and elsewhere—by any intelligent silver man that the Bland-Allison Act was a full remonetization of silver; but no intelligent silver man has ever stated that it was not a step in that direction and that it did partially remedy what the Senator has called the crime of 1873.

Now, I do not want to have any personal controversy with the Senator from Kentucky, but he is rather stringent and bitter in his denunciation——

Mr. LINDSAY. I have avoided denunciation absolutely.

Mr. VEST. Of the idea that we can have free coinage of silver in this country without great disaster unless there is an intrinsic commercial parity between the two metals. Is that the position of the Senator?

Mr. LINDSAY. I say it is a dangerous experiment, and I quote Mr. St. John to show that he so regarded it.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator—because every one of us must stand now in this desperate struggle upon his record—whether in 1887 he did not advocate the free and unlimited coinage of silver, when the intrinsic or commercial value of silver was but 73 cents as compared with gold?

Mr. LINDSAY. I do not think the Senator will find any evidence of that. In 1877, I think, I did believe that free coinage would have restored the parity as conditions then appeared, and I then believed it would preserve the parity.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator what in 1877 was the difference in the intrinsic or commercial value between gold and silver when he advocated the free coinage of silver?

Mr. LINDSAY. I will answer the Senator. In the first place, I am put in a false attitude when it is said I advocated it.

Mr. GRAY. You were not in public life then.

Mr. LINDSAY. I was not in public life then. I expressed the opinion that silver ought to be remonetized at 16 to 1. I believed then—and everything indicated it to be a reasonable belief—that the increased market for silver which would come from free coinage by the United States would increase the value of silver as much as 8 per cent, and put the two metals at a parity, and, except for the extraordinary changes which have taken place since then, which no man could foresee, would have kept the two metals at a parity.

Mr. VEST. Let me ask the Senator if the causes which he now says in 1877—and those causes can be embraced in one cause, namely, free coinage of silver—would have restored the parity then would not do so now?

Mr. LINDSAY. If the Senator believes it will do so now, why did he propose to change the ratio in 1893 to 20 to 1?

Mr. VEST. All the world knows that when the gold men declared that they were willing to have bimetallism if there was more silver put into the dollar, the silver men in both Houses of Congress, with great unanimity, tendered to them every ratio from 16 to 24, and then tendered them the Bland-Allison Act, and they rejected every one of those propositions, showing that they were opposed to bimetallism at any ratio. I declared then, as I have always declared, that I preferred the old ratio, but that, above all, I wanted bimetallism at some ratio. The difference between the Senator and myself is that I have always advocated bimetallism. He advocated it in 1877 and turns against it in 1896.

Mr. LINDSAY. No; I have not turned against it. I stand where the Democratic party stood in 1892, and at that time there was no party in the United States which advocated 16 to 1 except the Populist party.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was there any party advocating the single gold standard?

Mr. LINDSAY. There was a party advocating the single gold standard, or its commercial equivalent.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was there anyone then or had any Democrat of any respectability ever declared in favor of the single gold standard? Is there one word, one line, or one sentence in the platform of 1892 which squints at a gold standard?

Mr. LINDSAY. No; and I am not to-day advocating the gold standard, and I have never intimated that I was opposed to the coinage of silver. My whole contention has been that an attempt under present conditions to go to free coinage at 16 to 1 would be a dangerous experiment, one so dangerous that it is likely to bring upon the country greater calamities than it has ever suffered.

Mr. PASCO. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PASCO. I ask the Senator if he believed that it was not safe to attempt the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1, why has he not and why has not the Democratic Administration recommended some other feasible scheme which would have brought about a realization of the platform formulated at Chicago four years ago?

Mr. LINDSAY. I have unfortunately been in the minority on this side of the Chamber and could not shape Democratic propositions. I might retort by asking my friend, why did you not propose some reasonable and feasible plan for the free coinage of silver? Upon the contrary, you have sat here and done nothing except talk in favor of free silver and threaten the country with free silver, and vote for it when everybody knew that the bill could not pass and never press it when anybody suspected that it could pass.

Mr. VEST. When was it that anybody suspected that a bill could pass?

Mr. LINDSAY. At the last session of Congress, two days before the adjournment, when it was attempted to put aside the consideration of an appropriation bill to take up a report from the Committee on Finance for the free coinage of silver at less than the commercial ratio.

That all or any considerable portion of our economic evils are traceable to the effect upon business of the existing money standard, the history of the country and of its progress from 1870 to 1890 abundantly and overwhelmingly disproves. This being the case, no change of the money standard can meet or overcome the difficulties by which the country is beset. The free coinage of silver at less than the commercial ratio will aggravate the situation. It can not relieve it. In the end it will give us cheaper money, for the all-sufficient reason that it will bring us to silver monometallism. With our great resources we may, through free coinage at 16 to 1, enhance the market price of silver bullion, but we can no more bring about the relations existing between gold and silver prior to 1871 or to 1873, by free coinage, than we were able to do by the act of 1890.

We then supposed, and it was generally believed, we had by that act supplied a market for all the silver that could be produced. That is all that free silver coinage can do. The act of 1890 enhanced the market value of silver bullion throughout the world 10 per cent, and fortified my belief in 1877 that free coinage would have enhanced it throughout the world 8 per cent. It raised the market value of the bullion in the silver dollar from 79 cents to 80½ cents, but at the end of a year this bullion had receded to 72½ cents, and at the end of two years to 65 cents. If free coinage by the United States should increase the bullion value of silver 30 per cent, or three times the temporary increase resulting from the act of 1890, and we should prove strong enough to maintain that increase, our silver dollar would be worth, in gold, 70 cents.

Upon that basis of values business would necessarily readjust itself, and the difference of exchange between this country and the European countries with which we have our principal trade relations would be 30 per cent. There are those who are bold enough to say that this apparently fatal difference in exchange would prove a blessing rather than a curse to the agriculturist and the laboring man. They claim that—

The difference of exchange between silver-standard countries and gold-standard countries is equivalent to a bounty equal to the difference between the value of gold and silver, in favor of the products of silver-standard countries exported to gold standard countries and a corresponding tariff against the products of gold-standard countries exported to silver-using countries.

I am not responsible for this statement of that claim. This extract is taken from the declaration of principles prepared and announced by representative silver men from all parts of the country at Washington in January, 1896. In his comments upon that declaration the editor of the American—Mr. Wharton Barker—said that—

An American policy—

And I commend this to Democrats—of bimetallism and protection must be adopted, for an alien policy of gold monometallism and free trade will surely destroy the industrial classes of our country and enslave the people.

The effect of free silver coinage in Mexico on the trade of that country was discussed by the Mexican minister, Mr. Romero, in the June number, 1895, of the North American Review. He contends that the silver standard is a great stimulus in developing manufactures in that country, because foreign commodities have to be paid for in gold, and that owing to the high rate of exchange the price of such commodities has become so high that it pays well to manufacture them at home. To use his language:

The fact that foreign commodities have to be paid for in gold makes them so high that it operates as a protective duty against them.

And further that—

Importations are considerably reduced because foreign commodities almost duplicate their price when sold for silver, and are, therefore, beyond the reach of the middle classes.

In a published interview in the Manufacturers' Record about September 1, 1895, President Diaz, of Mexico, in discussing the condition of that country, is reported to have said:

Commerce and industry have continued their progressive march, notwithstanding the fact that in 1892 and in 1893 crops were short through want of rain, and that silver, our principal export, has suffered a notable decline in foreign markets.

Respecting this last point, President Diaz said:

I believe that in reality the detriment has not been of the magnitude that was anticipated, and this decline has been a benefit to general industries in the country, and this is easily explained. The depreciation of silver has produced a rise in foreign exchange, and therefore has raised the price of imported goods—

Something which the Democratic party has been trying for fifty years to bring down in this country—which actually means an advantage to the industries of this country.

Whatever may be the advantage of the single silver standard to Mexico as a nation, it is evident that its tendency is to keep down the wages of labor and the rents of real estate, and to operate so successfully in the way of a protective duty against foreign commodities as to almost duplicate their price when sold for silver, and, in that way, to put them beyond the reach of the middle and poorer classes of the Mexican population. These results are not such as to commend the policy of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 to the American laborer, or to the American landowner, or to the American consumer.

In 1892 the Democratic party not only did not declare for free silver coinage at 16 to 1, but did declare in the most emphatic terms that protection was a fraud—

a robbery of the great majority of the American people for the benefit of the few—

And that it was—a fundamental doctrine of the Democratic party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties except for purposes of revenue only.

The leaders of the silver movement now tell us that—the first step toward the reestablishment of a true protective system must be the restoration of bimetallism—

And that—protection must be united with bimetallism.

I take from the issue of January 18, 1896, of the Philadelphia American, which is laid upon the desks of Senators every Monday morning, this extract:

In Mexico to-day the fact that foreign commodities have to be paid for in gold makes them so high that it operates as a protective tariff against them.

If a protective tariff is a fraud and the robbery of the great majority of the people for the benefit of the few, as the Democracy declared in 1892, it will be none the less a fraud, none the less the robbery of the many for the benefit of the few, when it comes from an act of Congress establishing the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1 than when it came from an act of Congress establishing that "culminating atrocity of class legislation" commonly called the McKinley tariff law.

In Mexico Mr. Romero says importations are reduced—

Because foreign commodities almost duplicate their price when sold for silver, and are, therefore, beyond the reach of the middle classes.

We know from long experience that when foreign commodities duplicate their prices from any cause domestic commodities follow closely upon their heels. When we come to the free coinage of silver and the necessary difference of exchange between this country and Europe we may find that the hopes and aspirations of the manufacturer have been fully realized by the fact that foreign commodities have been placed "beyond the reach of the middle classes," and the American consumer turned over to the tender mercies of those who for more than a third of a century have been enriched by the class legislation against which the American people revolted in 1892.

Congressional legislation may double the cost of European goods to American consumers, as Mexican legislation has doubled it to Mexican consumers, but no Congressional enactment can add one cent to the selling price of American products when put down for sale in the European markets. Balances there will be settled in European currency, and the trouble, annoyance, and expense incident to the adjustment of the differences in exchange will fall upon the American seller and not upon the European buyer.

A prize essay, written by Mr. George Jamison, British consul-general at Shanghai, China, on the subject of bimetallism, has been extensively circulated and greatly relied on by the silver propagandists to show the advantages to inure to American manufacturers from the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1. I shall not quote at length from what he says by way of illustration; but I ask the Secretary to read the quotation which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GIBSON in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Suppose two cotton mills working, the one in England and the other in Japan or China, and competing with one another for the sale of their productions, and contrast the position of the two in 1873 and in 1893. Let us assume that in 1873 they were competing on even terms—that is, that each realized to the owners the same profit. In 1894 each employs the same amount of labor as it did in 1873, which the English pays for in gold at the old rates, and the Japanese in silver, also at the old rates. The Japanese mill owner still pays his men, as he used to, 18 to 20 cents a day, and his women 8 to 10 cents a day. In 1873 that meant 9 pence to 10 pence per day for men, and 4 pence to 5 pence for women. Now it means just one-half—that is, 4 pence to 5 pence and 2 pence to 2½ pence. Multiply this over 2,000 mill hands and see what the saving will be on labor alone. But this is not all. The same advantage accrues on the coal bill. Japanese coal costs them, say, $4 to $5 a ton, which meant 16 shillings to 20 shillings. That still can be got at $4 to $5 a ton, but that now only means 8 shillings to 10 shillings. The same thing applies to rent, wages, taxes, and all fixed charges whatsoever. They are all payable in silver, and have nowise varied with the rise in gold. Only in the single item of raw material is the old equality maintained. Both are free to buy that wherever they can find it cheapest on the world's market, the only advantage being proximity to the best source of supply and, consequently, economy of transport.

Now, so long as the gold price went on falling and the silver price consequently kept steady there was no great manifest advantage resulting to the Japanese manufacturer from a fall in exchange. He continued to get the same prices for his products, and his outlay was the same year by year, both being in silver. Any improvement he could effect by economy of management or by getting his raw material cheaper would be so much extra profit; otherwise his position was unaffected. In any case exchange fluctuations would not trouble him.

The English manufacturer, on the other hand, has to meet the same fixed expenditure from ever-decreasing returns. He is able to buy his raw material cheaper, owing to the general fall in commodities; but his wages bill, his rent, his interest on borrowed capital, his rates and taxes, have all to be met as before. His profits begin to dwindle. It is only by the greatest economy of management that he can keep open at all. The best mills only manage to pay a fair profit, the worst struggle to the verge of bankruptcy, always hoping for a turn of the tide, and finally are forced to close.

Suppose, in the second place, that the silver price rises and, as a consequence, the gold price remains steady.

The gold manufacturer is, for the time being, in an easier position, his returns do not fall off, and though his expenses are the same he is in a position to profit by any economy of manufacture or management.

But the silver manufacturer is, so to speak, in clover. All his working expenses are on the old scale, and he is a clear gainer by the extra price he gets for his products. If silver prices have risen, say, 10 per cent, his profits will be increased by just 10 per cent on his turnover. The natural result of this will be to attract more capital, more mills will be built, and the output will increase. Competition will lower prices and the gold manufacturer will again be driven into a corner.

Whatever happens, the manufacturer in the silver-standard country has a great advantage, and simply for this reason, that he can obtain his labor at half the cost, relatively to gold wages, which he formerly paid. And this advantage must remain to him (unless silver can in the meantime be brought back to something like its old value) until either wages in gold countries have fallen 50 per cent or till they have risen 100 per cent in silver-using countries, or till some common meeting ground has been found between the two. In other words, the old equilibrium will not be restored until the standard of living and comfort among the working classes in England has greatly fallen, or till the standard in silver-using countries has greatly risen.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, in the gold-standard countries Mr. Jamison says the manufacturer has to meet the same fixed expenditure—his wage bill, his rent, his interest on borrowed capital, his rates and taxes, have all to be met upon the gold basis.

But the silver manufacturer is, so to speak, in clover. All his working expenses are on the old scale, and he is a clear gainer by the extra price he gets for his products. If silver prices have risen, say 10 per cent, his profits will be increased by just 10 per cent on his turnover.

And whatever may happen he—has a great advantage; and simply for the reason that he can obtain his labor at half the cost relatively to gold wages, which he formerly paid.

He says that advantage will continue with these eastern countries until their labor has advanced 100 per cent or the wages of English labor have fallen 50 per cent.

The argument in Mexico in support of the policy of free coinage is that it operates as a protective tariff against foreign commodities by so increasing their price as to put them beyond the reach of the "middle classes." The argument of Mr. Jamison is that under the benign influences of free coinage the manufacturer may reduce the price of labor the difference between the commercial value of gold and silver bullion, or nearly 50 per cent, and thereby reduce the cost of production.

The American farmer has heretofore relied on foreign competition to keep down the prices of the manufactured articles his necessities compel him to buy. The wages of the American workingman have steadily increased under the existing money standard, and are paid in the best money known to the business world. These two great classes of our people are now to decide whether they will take the chance of destroying foreign competition in manufactured goods and of cutting down wages one-third or one-half in order to enhance the price of silver bullion.

I am not one of those who have confidence enough to dogmatize upon this most important economic question. The difficulties in the way of reaching correct conclusions I do not deny.

Considering, however, the question from every point of view, the conclusions I am about to state seem to me, to comport with the lessons of experience and the dictates of reason:

Free silver coinage will reduce the wages of labor in the proportion it may increase the cost of the necessaries and comforts of life.

It is problematic whether it will in any event or at any time increase the net proceeds to the farmer or planter of the products of his labor, while it is certain to add to the cost of all his necessary supplies.

It will enhance the profits of the manufacturer by reducing his wage accounts and by giving him additional protection against foreign competition.

Its first effect will be contraction, with such a loss of business confidence as to drive embarrassed debtors to immediate bankruptcy, and it may precipitate a business panic, from which the country will not recover until there has been a general liquidation of all existing indebtedness.

From 1876 to 1890 we constructed in the United States over 130,000 miles of railway. Mr. Mulhall estimates that from 1870 to 1890 we expended a million dollars a day in railway construction. We probably expended an equal sum in establishing new towns and cities and in extending to their present magnificent proportions our older towns and cities. To accomplish all this we borrowed vast sums of money from abroad. Not content to rely upon the surplus means of our own people, we made available the wealth of the world wherever we found it seeking investment. While these great works were in progress and these vast sums of money being paid out for labor, material, and supplies, the labor of the country found steady employment, the merchant ready sale for his wares, and the manufacturers and farmers an apparently exhaustless demand for the products of their industry.

These vast and continued expenditures of borrowed capital begat extravagance and profligacy in the use of money and reckless indifference in the contraction of debt. For the time, accruing interest was paid out of the money borrowed, and counties, cities, corporations, and individuals acted upon the assumption that the day of reckoning would never come. The country was improved beyond the demands of the present or of the immediate future, and investments which a few years ago promised rich returns have resulted in nothing more substantial than blasted hopes and disappointed expectations. The boom towns and cities of the other day are now remembered only to be scoffed at, but the obligations of those who invested in their evanescent existence remain unpaid and beyond the investors' ability to pay.

The day came when there were no more railways to construct, no more towns and cities to build, and relatively no more unoccupied territory to develop. With the coming of that day foreign capital ceased to fill our coffers, and those who had been hiring labor, supplying customers to our merchants, and consumers to those whose products enter into daily use, have had to turn their attention to keeping down the interest and arranging for the ultimate payment of their foreign indebtedness. Not only is this true as to individuals, but as to counties, towns, cities, and every municipality or corporation that had the power to bind itself or its constituent for the payment of money.

The act of 1873 demonetizing silver did not bring about these unfortunate conditions. Its repeal will not relieve against them. To pay what we honestly owe we must economize our expenditures. This suggestion is a homely one, but it is consistent with common prudence and common honesty, and has stood the test of human experience. It requires fortitude and demands sacrifice, but honestly and manfully applied it has never failed and will never fail any man or any community.

We can not pay our creditors by act of Congress; we can not reduce the sum of our indebtedness by legislative enactment. We can make no more profitable use of our time, labor, or means than in the payment to the uttermost farthing of all we owe in strict accordance with the spirit of our contracts and in money as good as that in use when our creditors parted with their property or their money.

The act demonetizing silver in 1873 may have been a crime. The failure to fully remonetize that metal in 1878 may have been a mistake, but those with whom we have had business relations since 1879, when specie payments were resumed, are in no way responsible for either the crime or the mistake. They had the right to deal with us upon the faith of the statutory assurance that it was our established policy to maintain the parity between our gold and silver coin. That parity good faith demands we shall preserve as to all debts contracted since specie payments were resumed.

If the controlling majority of the American people have deliberately concluded to return to the free coinage of silver, no opposition will be sufficient to defeat their will. With the authoritative expression of that will opposition will of course cease, but the details of the new policy will, or at least ought to, remain open for discussion, and the general good may still prevail against the special interest of the silver miners and of the holders and owners of silver bullion.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Kentucky pardon a question?

Mr. LINDSAY. If the Senator will speak loud enough for me to hear I will yield.

Mr. BUTLER. I notice the Senator refers to the special interests of silver-mine owners; and only this morning I saw the same thing in a leading editorial in the New York World. I suppose the Senator indorses that sentiment, from what he says. The World says that the special beneficiaries of the free coinage of silver would be the Western mine owners. I want to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he believes that the silver-mine owners will be the special beneficiary of the free coinage of silver? I want an answer to that question.

Mr. LINDSAY. Is the Senator through?

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator answer yes or no?

Mr. LINDSAY. I will answer the Senator when he gets through. I have the floor, and I propose to make my own answer.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield further to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BUTLER. No; if the Chair will pardon me, the Senator said when I was through he would answer me. Then I wish to continue the question.

Is it not a fact that the silver-mine owner has lost less by the demonetization of silver than either the cotton farmer or the wheat farmer has lost? The cotton farmer has lost at least 50 per cent; the wheat farmer has lost as much; while the mine owner has lost probably only about 25 per cent. The mine owner to-day can dig his silver from the mines and make a profit where he has anything like a fair mine, because labor has fallen in price and the agencies which they use in mining silver have fallen in price. The demonetization of silver has hurt the men the mine owner employs as laborers more than it has hurt the mine owner. If you will remonetize silver to-day the advantage would be twice as great to the farmer of the South and the farmer of the West as it would be to the actual owner and operator of mines. I state that as a fact which can be proven. I state it as something I think the Senator from Kentucky will not deny; and if he does deny it, let us arrive at the truth.

Mr. LINDSAY. That may be a question in North Carolina, but it would be regarded as a stump speech in Kentucky. If the silver miner can make money mining silver when selling 30 pounds of silver for 1 pound of gold, and we remonetize silver so that 16 pounds of silver will buy 1 pound of gold, it occurs to me that there will be a direct gain to the silver miner. But I am not here to balance losses between the wheat farmer and the silver miner, nor to balance possible gains between the silver miner and the wheat farmer. My object has been to prove that the demonetization of silver was not the moving cause of the reduction of prices, and that the remonetization of silver will lead us through a vale of tears and sorrow before it can bring us to a material increase of prices.

As I was proceeding to say when interrupted, it will still be in order to insist that the silver dollar shall be made the commercial equivalent of the gold dollar, and that no unnecessary risk—and that is the point I put it on—that no unnecessary risk shall be taken of bringing the country to silver monometallism in the adjustment of the legal or mintage ratio. It is immaterial whether gold has enhanced or silver depreciated in value. It is certain that for commercial purposes 30 ounces of silver are now equal to only 1 ounce of gold. It is practically certain that free coinage at 16 to 1 by the United States alone will break down the present parity of the two metals, whilst it is at least possible that free coinage at the present commercial ratio may give us real bimetallism and enable us to maintain and preserve it in the future. If the experiment of free coinage must be made, let us take none of the chances for evil that can possibly be avoided. It is the general good we are to care for, and the special interests of the producers and holders of silver bullion are entitled to no consideration when their demands conflict with the common welfare.

The comments of an illustrious predecessor of mine in the Senate, Mr. Beck, upon a free-coinage proposition in 1878 are worthy of being repeated to-day.

What is commonly known as the Bland-Allison bill passed the House of Representatives in the fall of 1877 at a called session of the Forty-fifth Congress, at the time when I believed free coinage would bring the two metals together. It contained a provision for the free coinage of standard silver dollars. When it came to the Senate, Senator Beck, on the 4th day of January, 1878, moved to insert the following amendment, in lieu of the free-coinage provision:

> And the Secretary of the Treasury is directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to purchase from time to time silver bullion at the market price thereof not less than $3,000,000 per month, or as much more as can be coined at the mints of the United States, and cause the same to be coined into such dollars; and any gain or seigniorage arising from this coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury as provided under existing laws relative to subsidiary coinage: Provided, That whenever the market price of silver bullion is such that it can not be purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury as herein provided at less than par with legal-tender notes of the United States, he shall give public notice of that fact, and then any citizen of the United States who is the owner of silver bullion may deposit the same at any United States coinage mint or assay office, to be coined into such dollars for his benefit upon the same terms and conditions as gold bullion is deposited for coinage under existing laws.—Congressional Record, second session Forty-fifth Congress, volume 7, page 725.

Whenever silver bullion could not be bought at a discount in legal-tender notes, then the mints might freely coin silver on account of the individual who might bring the bullion to the mint for that purpose.

In the course of the debate Mr. Beck said:

> In the second place, I desire so long as silver bullion can be purchased for less than par in legal-tender notes that the people of the United States shall have the benefit of the seigniorage or gain, and that it shall not go to private individuals.—Congressional Record, second session Forty-fifth Congress, volume 7, page 726.

Mr. Beck evidently thought the benefit would go to the silver miner. Again, on February 15, 1878, he said:

> I prefer that the Government of the United States should have whatever seigniorage there may be—and when I say "the Government" I mean, of course, the people—in the purchase of bullion so long as it is worth less than legal-tender notes. It is said to be now 8 per cent or 10 per cent below par. If it is, I am unable to see why any man in Europe or America or any European government shall have the right to furnish bullion to our mints and demand coin for it, when we can buy it 8 per cent cheaper than they offer it in open market.—Congressional Record, second session Forty-fifth Congress, volume 7, part 2, page 1004.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Did Mr. Beck in that debate express any opinion as to the probability that the coinage act which he proposed would bring the two metals to a parity?

Mr. LINDSAY. I do not remember that he did. I do not remember the entire speech. He voted for free coinage, however, after making the speech, as Mr. Carlisle voted for the Bland-Allison Act, after making his speech. So Mr. Beck and Mr. Carlisle may set off against each other.

Mr. GEORGE. I inferred from the expression the Senator quoted from Mr. Beck that he believed that that was probable.

Mr. LINDSAY. I think he did believe it.

Mr. GEORGE. At that time.

Mr. LINDSAY. I think he did believe it; but I do not remember that he expressly stated it.

Again, on the same day, Mr. Beck said:

> I spoke fully to this question before, and said then that I did not want the people of the United States to feel the Senate of the United States has allowed any man in California or Nevada or anywhere else, who had an immense amount of bullion, to take possession of the mints of the United States and make a seigniorage of 6 per cent or 8 per cent; and especially I did not want to allow the German Government or any foreign power or citizen to take possession of our mints and have the benefits of that seigniorage, when we could obtain and apply it for the benefit of the taxpayers of the country.

In 1878 Mr. Beck advocated the free coinage of silver, when it could not be purchased in the market at less than par with legal-tender notes, and objected to its free coinage in any other contingency. He did not see why "any man in Europe or America, or any European government," should "have the right to furnish bullion to our mints and demand coin for it, when we can buy it 8 per cent cheaper than they offer it in open market."

Mr. Beck was the friend and champion of silver coinage. I commend his words to the consideration of those who now insist that all owners of silver bullion shall have the right to furnish it to our mints and demand coin for it when it can be bought 47 per cent cheaper in the open markets.

Mr. President, I am free to say to-day if I believed with reasonable certainty that the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1 would bring the two metals together, I would yield my judgment to what may be the better judgment of those with whom I am politically associated. But I do not believe free coinage at 16 to 1 will bridge the chasm that now lies between gold and silver, and not believing that it will, it is my duty as a Senator to give to the Senate and to the people I represent my best judgment upon this great question. I am not here to make a record, but if I were engaged in the business of making a record the only record I think any man would look upon with pleasure in the future would be that which comes from honest dealing on his part with those for whom he is commissioned to act.

This great question will be settled this year, I hope. One party or the other will declare for or against free silver coinage at 16 to 1 in unmistakable terms. The people at the polls, enlightened as best they may enlighten themselves, will pass upon that great question, and when their judgment has been pronounced and their will declared, then that obedience which follows the deliberately expressed will of the people in the American Government will be yielded.

My object has been to show that the contention that low prices come from the present standard is not warranted by the facts and to show, as I believe the truth to be, that the legislative step from our present standard to the unlimited coinage of silver at 16 to 1 is an experiment so reckless that the American people ought not to be asked to make it if there be any ratio at which silver may be freely coined which is reasonably secure against the dangers I apprehend.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the following report:

> The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 38, 142, 309, 310, and 314.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 12, 13, 19, 108, 109, 144, and 313, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Three laborers, at $840 each; twenty-two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$120,784"; and the Senate agree to the same.

All proceedings pending, returnable, unexecuted, or unfinished at said date before any such commissioner shall be continued and disposed of according to law by such commissioner appointed as herein provided, as may be designated by the district court for that purpose. It shall be the duty of the district court of each judicial district to appoint such number of persons, to be known as United States commissioners, at such places in the district as may be designated by the district court, which United States commissioners shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as are now imposed upon commissioners of the circuit courts. The appointment of such United States commissioners shall be entered of record in the district courts, and notice thereof at once given by the clerk to the Attorney-General.

"That such United States commissioners shall hold their offices, respectively, for the term of four years, but they shall be at any time subject to removal by the district court; and no person shall at any time be a clerk or deputy clerk of a United States court and a United States commissioner without the approval of the Attorney-General: Provided, That all acts and parts of acts applicable to commissioners of the circuit courts, except as to appointment and fees, shall be applicable to United States commissioners appointed under this act.

"Warrants of arrest for violations of internal-revenue laws may be issued by United States commissioners upon the sworn complaint of a United States district attorney, assistant United States district attorney, collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, or revenue agent, or private citizen; but no such warrant of arrest shall be issued upon the sworn complaint of a private citizen unless first approved in writing by a United States district attorney.

"That United States commissioners and all clerks of United States courts are hereby authorized to administer oaths."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 306, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the section proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

That no marshal or deputy marshal, attorney or assistant attorney of any district, jury commissioner, clerk of marshal, no bailiff, crier, juror, janitor of any Government building, nor any civil or military employee of the Government, except as in this act provided, and no clerk or employee of any United States justice or judge shall have, hold, or exercise the duties of the United States commissioner. And it shall not be lawful to appoint any of the officers named in this section receiver or receivers in any case or cases now pending or that may be hereafter brought in the courts of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 307, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the section proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

For the examination and certificate in cases of application for discharge of poor convicts imprisoned for nonpayment of fine or fine and costs, and all services connected therewith, $3; for attending to a reference in a litigated matter, in a civil cause at law, in equity, or in admiralty, in pursuance of an order of the court, $3 a day; for taking and certifying depositions to file in civil cases, 10 cents for each folio; for each copy of the same furnished to a party on request, 10 cents for each folio; for issuing any warrant under the tenth article of the treaty of August 9, 1842, between the United States and the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, against any parties charged with any crime or offense set forth in said article, $2; for issuing any warrant under the provision of the convention for the surrender of criminals between the United States and the King of the French, concluded at Washington November 9, 1843, $2; for hearing and deciding upon the case of any person charged with any crime or offense, and arrested under the provisions of said treaty or of said convention, $5 a day for the time necessarily employed.

"Such commissioners shall keep a complete record of all proceedings before them in criminal cases, in a well-bound book, which record book shall be delivered to and preserved by the clerk of the district court for such district on the death, resignation, removal, or expiration of term of the commissioner, for which record the commissioner shall receive no compensation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 308, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 22. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to make an investigation as respects the compensation to be paid, by salary or otherwise, to clerks of the United States circuit and district courts; and he shall report on the first day of the next session of the present Congress a plan for fixing such compensation for the clerks of the several courts of the United States as he may deem just, and he shall also recommend with his report such provisions as may to him seem proper touching their appointment and the performance of their duties."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise for the purpose of asking the Senator from Illinois if he will conclude to allow the report to go over? It is now 5 o'clock, and I want to move an executive session, because there are some matters that ought to have consideration, and it may take some little time to dispose of them.

Mr. CULLOM. I would be glad to accommodate the Senator, but I am not sure that I can be here to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no personal interest in matters ahead of us.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it will take but a little while to dispose of the report.

Mr. HARRIS. I waive all objection and acquiesce.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senate will allow me, I will state that the report, except as to two or three items, has already been read.

Mr. HARRIS. Perhaps the Senator can point out those items and obviate the necessity of reading the report.

Mr. CULLOM. That I propose to do. The amendment numbered 38 is the first one, I believe, which was in controversy when the report was before the Senate some days ago. I can state what the amendment is. It is the amendment in relation to the copyright provision, which was under consideration here, and the judgment of the Senate, I think, was that it ought not to be in the bill. The Secretary can read that amendment very quickly if it is desired.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is receded from.

Mr. CULLOM. I was going to say that amendment is receded from. The amendment in relation to New Mexico was changed in this respect. The amendment as previously agreed to fixed the time for the meeting of the legislature as the third Monday of February. The amendment as agreed to by the last conference fixed the time as the third Monday of January.

Then in the provision in relation to commissioners of United States circuit courts, the time when their terms shall expire is extended from the 1st day of January, as agreed to heretofore, to the 30th of June, 1897. In the clause providing that the places shall be designated by the Attorney-General where commissioners shall be appointed, the words "Attorney-General" were stricken out and the "district court" inserted in lieu.

Then in section 20, where the words "or deputy clerk of the circuit court or district court" occur, they were stricken out, so that they, as well as the clerks, may, with the approval of the Attorney-General, act as commissioners as well as be deputy clerks.

Those are practically all the changes which are made by the last conference report. Those provisions can be read if the Senate desires them to be read, but that is all there is in controversy between the two Houses at this time, except that the whole conference report, of course, has to be concurred in, because the provisions as to clerks and many other matters about which there has been no controversy between the two Houses for some time are involved in the report, inasmuch as the report was rejected by the Senate last time. I hope the subject will be disposed of without delay.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have section 19 read as it will read if the conference report is adopted.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 19. That the terms of office of all commissioners of the circuit courts heretofore appointed shall expire on the 30th day of June, 1897; and each office shall on that day cease to exist; and said commissioners shall then deposit all the records and other official papers appertaining to their offices in the office of the clerk of the circuit court by which they were appointed. All proceedings pending, returnable, unexecuted, or unfinished at said date before any such commissioner shall be continued and disposed of according to law by such commissioner appointed as herein provided as may be designated by the district court for that purpose. It shall be the duty of the district court of each judicial district to appoint such number of persons, to be known as United States commissioners, at such places in the district as may be designated by the district court, which United States commissioners shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as are now imposed upon commissioners of the circuit courts. The appointment of such United States commissioners shall be entered of record in the district courts and notice thereof at once given by the clerk to the Attorney-General. That such United States commissioners shall hold their offices, respectively, for the term of four years, but they shall be at any time subject to removal by the district court; and no person shall at any time be a clerk or deputy clerk of a United States court and a United States commissioner without the approval of the Attorney-General: Provided, That all acts and parts of acts applicable to commissioners of the circuit courts, except as to appointment and fees, shall be applicable to the United States commissioners appointed under this act.

Mr. PLATT. No change has been made in the rest of the section, and it is not necessary to read further.

Mr. CULLOM. No.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I am opposed to the conference report and shall vote against it. I am opposed to it for the reasons which I briefly stated the other day, and which I beg the liberty of repeating.

I am opposed to any change in the time for the meeting of the legislature of New Mexico. The change originally proposed was from the first Monday of December until some time in May. It has now been modified by repeated conference reports until the third Monday in January is fixed upon. I am opposed to it for the reason that I do not think there is any necessity for the change. No good reason has been given for it. It is, in my judgment, political in its character and ought not to have been entertained at all, or at least it should not have been entertained on an appropriation bill.

In the second place, I am opposed to the wholesale removal from office of United States commissioners. The mere change of date, declaring that the removal shall not take effect until June, 1897, instead of December, amounts to nothing. It is the fact that every four years these commissioners are to apply to the United States district judge for reappointment. I do not think it is a wise policy. The plan now proposed to be entered upon will not, in my judgment, prove satisfactory.

A modification has been made so that a clerk of a United States court can be appointed United States commissioner, and a deputy clerk can also now be appointed, with the approval of the Attorney-General. I had hoped that it might provide that one approval would be sufficient, but it has been left by the conference committee so that an approval has to be obtained every four years.

These in brief are my objections. I explain them so that they may go upon record. I do not care to call for the yeas and nays unless some other Senator desires it. I will content myself with voting against it, and I presume probably at this stage of the session the report will have to be adopted. Whatever disposition the Senate shall make of it I shall be content, and I shall simply vote against concurring in the report.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, for the reasons so well though briefly stated by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] I wish in some way to declare my opposition to the provision relating to the wholesale removal of commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States. I think it is unparalleled in the history of legislation, and it can only be done in the Senate, in my judgment, because it has been put upon an appropriation bill, and we can not support the Government unless we accede to the provision.

Legislating out of office with one sweep of the pen 500 commissioners, most of whom are not only reputable men but valuable officers of the United States, and providing that their places shall be filled by a different appointing power, as I believe, in many instances by utterly inexperienced men, it seems to me is the most reprehensible legislation on principle that I have almost ever known, indeed ever known, in the Senate. But I recognize the situation. It only illustrates more forcibly than I have ever been able to illustrate in language the vice of general legislation upon appropriation bills. I do not care to call for the yeas and nays, but I wish it understood that I am opposed to the action of the conference committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are to legislate all these commissioners out of office without one particle of reason assigned. No specific fact is assigned for this wholesale decapitation. It has been suggested by Senators who have advocated this clause that some commissioners somewhere are old fogies; that they have become decrepit; that they have got into old ruts, and ought to be got rid of in some way. That is the sole suggestion which has been made. There has not been a single commissioner called by name—not one. There has not been a part of the country mentioned where the commissioners are who ought to be legislated out of office, and on this general statement, absolutely general, that somewhere there are commissioners who ought not to remain in office, we must make this wholesale removal.

Every one of the commissioners can be removed to-morrow by the circuit court which appointed him, and there is the place to go for reform in this connection. It is an imputation upon the circuit judges of infidelity to duty and of cowardice to say that they do not dare remove these commissioners, and that objectionable commissioners, somewhere in this country, nobody knows where, are more powerful than the circuit judges. It is a cowardly act on our part to make the wholesale removal in this way by a clause upon an appropriation bill, and I wish that the Senate would vote down the conference report and instruct the conferees to insist upon it that so great an injustice to this very excellent body of men over this country shall not be perpetrated if the Senate of the United States can prevent it.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask if the provision with reference to the fees of commissioners has been kept in the bill as now reported?

Mr. CULLOM. The provision in reference to fees is not exactly as it came from the other House. It has been changed by the Senate, and especially, I think, by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and the Senate conferees take it in that shape.

Mr. VILAS. I am a member of the Judiciary Committee, and was never aware of that.

Mr. CULLOM. There are very few changes in relation to fees, however.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I will state that there are only two changes which amount to anything, and those were made at the request of the Attorney-General, who appeared before the Appropriations Committee. They were as to the per diem.

Mr. VILAS. What is the change as to the per diem?

Mr. TELLER. In one case it was $1.50 and it was made $3, and in another place it was $3 and it was made $5. Otherwise the fees are fixed by the Attorney-General.

Mr. PLATT. They do not differ very much.

Mr. VILAS. The fees are as they have been in the past?

Mr. PLATT. They do not differ greatly from the fees at present allowed.

Mr. TELLER. No; I understand they do not differ very materially.

Mr. VILAS. It seems to me a very extraordinary way of legislating to affix a new fee measure upon an appropriation bill of this kind.

Mr. TELLER. It is.

Mr. VILAS. What changes in the present law in reference to commissioners are made by the amendment except to legislate out of office all those who are now in and to provide that the district judge shall appoint for four years, instead of leaving the power of appointment and removal as it now is, with the circuit judges?

Mr. CULLOM. There is not very much change. The present law provides for the appointment of commissioners by the circuit court. The Senator knows that nearly all the business of the circuit court and the district court in the several districts is now conducted by the district judge. He acts as the district judge and circuit judge on the same day, in many instances, and nearly all the business of the commissioners comes under the eye and the supervision of the district court. Therefore it was that the committee believed it was better to change the law so as to provide for the appointment of the commissioners by the district court instead of by the circuit court. The House passed the bill—if I may be allowed to refer to the House—fixing the time on the 1st day of July of this year. The Senate in the first instance changed the time to the 31st day of December of this year. In the last consideration of the bill by the conferees of the two Houses we extended the time to the 30th of June, 1897, a year from the coming June.

Those are all the changes, except that the original provision required that—

It shall be the duty of the district court of each judicial district to appoint such number of persons, to be known as United States commissioners, at such places in the district as may be designated by the Attorney-General.

The conferees thought it was not necessary that the Attorney-General should have the power of designation, but that it belonged more properly to the district court holding the court where the commissioners are serving. That is the only change that has been made by the conferees of the two Houses since the bill was first reported and passed, except as indicated in reference to fees by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who is one of the conferees.

As I said a while ago, there was some complaint that it was very convenient to have deputy clerks act as commissioners; that they made very good commissioners, and ought to be eligible to appointment as commissioners, as heretofore, as well as clerks; and the conferees in the last consideration of the matter not only provide that clerks shall be eligible to be appointed as commissioners, but that the deputy clerks of the United States courts shall also be eligible upon the approval of the Attorney-General. That is the way the bill stands now.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to make a statement?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senate ought to understand exactly the history of the provisions respecting commissioners.

The other House sent to us a very sweeping provision for a change as to district attorneys, marshals, and commissioners. The Committee on the Judiciary, which took the question of fees under consideration, I think pretty generally were opposed to touching the matter of commissioners at all. The Appropriations Committee were unanimously opposed to it. We struck it out of the bill. But we found when we came to deal with the conferees on the part of the House that it was one of the things they would insist upon. We found also that, while we had prepared a provision to the effect that the Attorney-General should report to Congress a suitable list of fees for commissioners, the present fee measure as it is now in the bill was prepared at the Attorney-General's Office. We made the two changes I have mentioned, raising the per diem in two cases at the suggestion of the Attorney-General. We found the House determined to adhere to that, and we were reluctantly compelled to accede. We attempted then to get rid of the term of four years, which was somewhat objectionable, as we knew, in the Senate, and we found the House conferees determined not to yield upon it. We undertook then to get rid of the objectionable feature, as stated by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], legislating these people out of office. We found that that was a matter which the House conferees were determined not to yield.

So far as I am concerned as a member of that committee, I was in favor of trimming the provision in the way suggested by the Senator from New York, the Senator from New Hampshire, and the Senator from Connecticut, if I could have had my way. I do not know whether we could secure a change if we should hang out long enough, but it did not seem to me as if we were getting any nearer to it by the efforts we made. We finally thought that if we postponed it for a year the probability was that all the good officers would be reappointed and would continue in office, and if there were any poor and inefficient ones they might be dropped out.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Colorado whether the other House had provided salaries instead of fees for commissioners?

Mr. TELLER. No. They have compiled a list of fees, and in the two exceptions I have mentioned we raised the fees from $3 to $5 per diem in one case, and from $1.50 to $3 in another.

Mr. GRAY. Was it not alleged that in certain sections of the country there were abuses of the fee system running up to $20,000 a year in some cases?

Mr. TELLER. There were complaints, but it was thought that if the commissioners were put under the control of the district judges, who are close to them and know something of their work, there probably would not be very much more abuse. It seemed utterly impossible for us to deal with the subject and to fix their salaries. We did not know how to do it; I do not know how we could do it, and the Department of Justice was not willing to assist us in doing that, at least. I do not see that we are liable, if the report is rejected, to come any nearer to obviating the objections that are raised here than we are now.

Mr. VILAS. I am entirely unable to see from the statements made by the distinguished Senators who have managed the conference on the part of the Senate any substantial gain or advantage that is to be expected from this legislation or any reason why the Senate should yield that reasonable position which it took when, objecting very strenuously to the legislation, it insisted that it should not find its enactment upon an appropriation bill. Nor do I see any reason why the House should be yielded to in respect to a matter of this kind.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me?

Mr. VILAS. Let me add a word.

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. VILAS. If I understand it, the provision simply means that we first declare to be legislated out of office on the 1st of July next all of the present commissioners, but we leave it to the judges to reappoint them?

Mr. CULLOM. Undoubtedly.

Mr. VILAS. In fact, the district judges have always made the appointments?

Mr. CULLOM. Probably that is true.

Mr. VILAS. The same authority is simply asked once in four years to reappoint the same men. If they ought to be removed, as was well stated by the Senator from New Hampshire, there exist now in the judges both the obligation and the power of removal. Perhaps it is in the circuit judge under the law now. It is true that the district judge usually holds the circuit court now.

I wish to remark, in this connection, that the legislation which was enacted in 1891 for the circuit courts of appeals in this country, seems to me to have worked one very unfortunate result. It has practically deprived the circuit courts of the country of the useful and advantageous service of the circuit judges. When we had only one circuit judge in a circuit we used to have our circuit courts held by circuit judges, and occasionally the justice of the Supreme Court assigned to the circuit participated in holding the court; a very great advantage to the administration of justice. Now, by this system, as the circuit judges have seen fit to construe it in operation, they have deprived the circuit courts of any circuit judges, and they have limited themselves, as I understand it, to the duty of holding the circuit courts of appeals. We have relieved the Supreme Court, not by creating one additional court to take off the extra business, but we have set up nine different courts throughout the United States to do the business only of the surplus accumulation of the Supreme Court, and instead of having one court which will hold a uniform line of decisions, we have now nine separate courts falling into differences of opinion.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to indorse what he has so well stated in this connection. I think we made a great mistake when we organized the circuit courts of appeals in the way we organized them. In my judgment, the time is not far ahead of us when we will have to make some reformation in that particular.

In the first place, we have nine courts. They are not always agreed as to the decisions they make. Sometimes one makes a decision in one way, and another in another; but we are met now, I think, with the simple question whether under the present conditions the district judge must not hold the court, and there does not seem to be an opportunity for the circuit judges. I do not think they are trying to shirk duty or anything of that kind; but there is work enough put on them. There is more appellate work than there would be if the cases had to come to the Supreme Court of the United States, and there is work enough put on these judges in their various circuits, so that I think they are occupied practically all the time. We shall never have the benefit of the circuit judge any more unless we increase their number very materially.

Mr. VILAS. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I understand the main reason why the circuit judges now decline to hold any circuit courts is because of that provision in the act constituting the circuit courts of appeals which forbids the judge who tried the case below to sit in banc when the case is heard there on appeal or writ of error.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know how it is in other circuits, but I do know as to the eighth circuit, which I know more about than any other. I do not think the circuit judges have the time to hold circuit courts there. It may be otherwise in other circuits. I will say for the judges of that circuit that if they give attention to appellate duties it is all they should be asked to do.

Mr. CHANDLER. In view of what has been said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] about the injurious results which have come from creating the circuit courts of appeals, it seems to me it would be well to disagree to this conference report and let the conference committee insert some clause which will reconstruct the circuit courts of appeals and cure these defects in our administration of justice. That would be as exactly legitimate legislation upon an appropriation bill as is the clause which has led to this discussion.

I can understand how the conferees on the part of the Senate should yield to the conferees on the part of the House in reference to the fees of United States commissioners, because those fees result in the expenditure of money, and there may properly be a regulation of the expenditure of money upon an appropriation bill. There may be legislation incidental to an appropriation, very broad legislation incident to an appropriation, upon an appropriation bill. We understand that perfectly well. But this clause for the removal of the court commissioners has not an appropriation in it from one end to the other. The first sentence provides for the removal of the present commissioners on the 31st day of December, 1896, and the last clause is a provision that warrants shall not issue upon the complaint of a private citizen without the consent of the district attorney.

There is not anywhere within the four sides of this report an appropriation of a single dollar of money or any reference whatever to the expenditure of money. It is a naked sword blade inserted into this appropriation bill to cut off the heads of the commissioners, a few of whom ought to be removed, whom the judges, it is said, have not the moral courage to remove, and because the judges who appointed them do not dare to remove them, we forsooth, by legislation upon an appropriation bill, are to cut off their heads all at once.

I repeat, Mr. President—and I call the point especially to the attention of the Senate and of the committee—that there can be no objection whatever to the Senate saying absolutely, "We will not agree to this clause, because it has nothing whatever to do with appropriations." The Senate committee could not well have said that, as I have remarked, as against any appropriation where there was a mere difference as to the size of an appropriation, whether it should be large or whether it should be small, or how it should be expended. In that case the Senate committee would not be authorized to say, "The Senate will not agree, and we will let the bill fail unless the House will recede"; but upon a clause of this kind, which is absolutely vicious legislation, which might just as well annihilate the circuit courts themselves—upon a clause of this kind being presented by the House of Representatives, I submit, Mr. President, that a case is given to us where we are at liberty to say, and where we ought to say, "If you do not recede from this anomalous attempt to legislate there shall be no sundry civil appropriation bill at this session of Congress." I think that may be said without any encroachment upon the rights of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLATT. I do not want to prolong this debate, but I want to call attention to one result of the conference report, as illustrating the beauties of legislation by conference reports.

Here are the circuit court commissioners, who, the House says, must be legislated out of office, and the House insists upon it. The Senate insists that it ought not to be done upon this bill, and on another bill I am satisfied the Senate would not permit it. Then the conferees get together and they begin to compromise, and our conferees secure the great boon of having these wicked people continue in office a year longer. That is all the conference committee has been able to accomplish.

If these officers ought to be turned out, why not turn them out? I think the House position was right; if they ought to be turned out, let them go on the 1st of July. What is to be gained, what have the conferees gained, what does the Senate gain, what does the country gain, by wresting from the House conferees the privilege of allowing these wicked officers to continue in office for another year?

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in further discussion of this report. This is the fourth report which has been made to this body regarding this bill, the one before this having been rejected by the Senate. There were modifications of the bill by the last committee of conference, and we did the best we could.

I wish to say again that all this legislation about marshals and attorneys and commissioners was not the seeking of the conferees on the part of the Senate on this bill. Senators have talked about the subject as though the conferees on the part of this body had discovered this legislation, brought it in here, and forced it upon the Senate. They have not done any such thing. The Senate conferees have dealt with the whole subject as best they could. We have, after a good deal of controversy, arrived at an agreement in reference to attorneys and marshals by a compromise as to their fees or salaries.

I hoped at the beginning that we should get rid of the question of commissioners. As Senators know, we have rejected and refused to agree to it two or three times; but finally we have modified it as well as we could, and arrived at an agreement. I hope that this example will be remembered by the Senate, so that hereafter no such general legislation will be allowed to go upon an appropriation bill. That is where we ought to stand, and I think it is where the Senate ought to have stood first.

Mr. CHANDLER. Why not stand upon it now?

Mr. CULLOM. We have come so near to the jumping-off place that there is no occasion to make any further fuss about it, in my opinion. I will say, now that we have come to this point, that I hope the Senate will approve the report and let the bill go to the President.

Mr. CHANDLER. One word, Mr. President. If this report is now adopted, I personally am a great deal worse off than I should have been if the last report had been adopted, because on this last conference the Senate committee has given away the provision for a register of copyrights, which was about the only good thing there was in the former report, and of which I am very much in favor. That is given away, and this clause, to which I am very much opposed, is agreed to by the conferees.

Mr. TELLER. The copyright provision was given away on constitutional grounds.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not understand why the Senate committee felt obliged to give away the copyright provision. I think that was a provision inserted originally by the House of Representatives, was it not?

Mr. CULLOM. No.

Mr. TELLER. By the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. It was our own provision.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very good. That makes the case worse. There does not seem any fair give and take about the conference at all. The provision, which had been carefully drawn up by the Senate for the purpose of restoring order to the copyright department of the Librarian's office—a very wise provision, as I conceive, notwithstanding the constitutional doubts which were raised by eminent constitutional lawyers upon this floor—has gone in this conference. The conferees agreed to it before, but now that is gone—I can not understand how that happened—and this very objectionable provision for cutting off the heads of United States commissioners remains. I can not understand what could have come over the spirit of the dreams of these conferees when they went into this last conference, to be hoodooed by the House members of the conference.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senate rejected the last report by the help of the Senator because that provision was unconstitutional.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose the object is to teach us to vote for the first conference report which we can get, so as not to be put in the condition where, like the Sibylline books, the price is advanced at every offer.

But, in spite of all that, I do not make an appeal here to the Senate not to do this great injustice to these circuit court commissioners, not to put the stigma upon them which will follow every one of them as long as he lives, that he belonged to such a vicious body of judicial or semijudicial officers that they were all removed at one fell swoop by a conference committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to make a report, in order to have it printed and considered to-morrow, from the committee of conference on the Indian appropriation bill. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 66.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following:

"That said commission is further authorized and directed to proceed at once to hear and determine the application of all persons who may apply to them for citizenship in any of said nations, and after such hearing they shall determine the right of such applicant to be so admitted and enrolled: Provided, however, That such application shall be made to such commissioners within three months after the passage of this act. The said commission shall decide all such applications within ninety days after the same shall be made. That in determining all such applications said commission shall respect all laws of the several nations or tribes, not inconsistent with the laws of the United States, and all treaties with either of said nations or tribes, and shall give due force and effect to the rolls, usages, and customs of each of said nations or tribes: And provided further, That the rolls of citizenship of the several tribes as now existing are hereby confirmed, and any person who shall claim to be entitled to be added to said rolls as a citizen of either of said tribes and whose right thereto has either been denied or not acted upon, or any citizen who may within three months from and after the passage of this act desire such citizenship, may apply to the legally constituted court or committee designated by the several tribes for such citizenship, and such court or committee shall determine such application within thirty days from the date thereof.

"In the performance of such duties said commission shall have power and authority to administer oaths, to issue process for and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to send for persons and papers, and all depositions and affidavits and other evidence in any form whatsoever heretofore taken where the witnesses giving said testimony are dead or now residing beyond the limits of said Territory, and to use every fair and reasonable means within their reach for the purpose of determining the rights of persons claiming such citizenship, or to protect any of said nations from fraud or wrong, and the rolls so prepared by them shall be hereafter held and considered to be the true and correct rolls of persons entitled to the rights of citizenship in said several tribes: Provided, That if the tribe, or any person, be aggrieved with the decision of the tribal authorities or the commission provided for in this act, it or he may appeal from such decision to the United States district court: Provided, however, That the appeal shall be taken within sixty days, and the judgment of the court shall be final.

"That the said Commission, after the expiration of six months, shall cause a complete roll of citizenship of each of said nations to be made up from their records, and add thereto the names of citizens whose right may be conferred under this act, and said rolls shall be, and are hereby, made rolls of citizenship of said nations or tribes, subject, however, to the determination of the United States courts, as provided herein.

"The Commission is hereby required to file the lists of members as they finally approve them with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to remain there for use as the final judgment of the duly constituted authorities. And said Commission shall also make a roll of freedmen entitled to citizenship in said tribes, and shall include their names in the list of members to be filed with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. And said Commission is further authorized and directed to make a full report to Congress of leases, tribal and individual, with the area, amount, and value of the property leased and the amount received therefor, and by whom and from whom said property is leased, and is further directed to make a full and detailed report as to the excessive holdings of members of said tribes and others.

"It is hereby declared to be the duty of the United States to establish a government in the Indian Territory which will rectify the many inequalities and discriminations now existing in said Territory, and afford needful protection to the lives and property of all citizens and residents thereof.

"Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians: That all the interest due the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians on March 3, 1896, is hereby appropriated to be paid at once in cash per capita; and hereafter all interest on the permanent fund of said Indians, after deducting the amount expended for education, shall be paid in cash per capita on the 1st day of November of each year.

"Seneca Nation of Indians: That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to ascertain and report to Congress a detailed statement of all the leases made and entered into by the Seneca Nation of Indians, with all persons or corporations, of all lands in the Allegany Indian Reservation in the State of New York, giving an itemized statement of each and every lease now in existence or force, with the date and terms of each lease, and amount or amounts due on each lease."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 64, 69, and 70 the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I venture, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour, to ask the Senate to consider the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill, which has been printed. I think it will take but a few moments.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 7664) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. This conference report is substantially the same report which was agreed to by the Senate a few days ago. The report was voted down in the other House on account of some items it contained. After it was voted down the House took a vote on several matters that were still in controversy, and agreed to certain Senate amendments. The first of these amendments is the one numbered 11, relating to the Los Angeles public building. They agreed also to amendment No. 14, being the St. Albans public building. They also agreed to the amendments of the Senate respecting the Washington City public building. They also agreed to the amendment relating to the Government Printing Office, thus eliminating from future conferences those amendments.

Under the persuasive eloquence of my friend from Florida [Mr. PASCO], transmitted through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the House conferees were convinced that the amendment inserted by the Senate respecting the cemetery in Florida should be agreed to, and instead of the $1,500 which we had compromised on, the House conferees have now agreed to recede from that amendment.

The Senate receded from amendment numbered 183, being the amendment inserted by the Senate relating to the historical publications of General McBride.

The House agreed to recede from amendments numbered 115, 120, 138, 139, 142, 143, and 145, all of which were disagreements in the last conference report and voted down in the other House. The series of amendments I have just named were amendments where we had increased the several items for river and harbor improvements, which will interest the Senator from Pennsylvania and other Senators.

I omitted to mention also that the other House agreed to recede from their disagreement to amendment numbered 190, which is, I think, an amendment relating to the improvement at Mobile, which was also in disagreement in the former conference report.

With the exceptions I have named, I believe all the amendments already agreed to by the Senate are included in this conference report.

Mr. PLATT. What is disagreed to?

Mr. ALLISON. There are a number of amendments still in disagreement, namely, all the amendments, except those I have named, relating to public buildings. I need not enumerate those public buildings. There are perhaps ten or a dozen of them. There are also a number of minor amendments.

The only disagreements of importance, except as to the public buildings, are the amendments proposed by the Senate relating to the lighting and ventilation of the Capitol and the Capitol Grounds. Those are still in dispute.

The Senate also inserted a provision enabling the Government of the United States to take part in the Belgian International Exposition at Brussels, which is to take place next year. The House of Representatives still insists that that amendment should be receded from by the Senate.

There are also the two amendments relating to Garfield and Providence hospitals in this city which are still in disagreement, the House refusing to accede to the proposal of the Senate respecting those two charities.

I believe I have stated all the differences now still pending between the two Houses on this bill.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Iowa to state that the Senate amendments No. 2 in regard to the public building at Boise City, Idaho, No. 4 at Cheyenne, Wyo., and No. 7 at Helena, Mont., are still in conference.

Mr. ALLISON. They are, all of them.

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to say, in the beginning, that we appreciate very fully the position taken by the Senate Appropriations Committee, by the Senate, and by the Senate conferees in regard to these public buildings. We understand that they are very much in earnest in having them taken care of in the conference, but I wish the Senate to give our conferees some substantial support.

The facts are that these public buildings in these three capital towns were provided for at the last session of Congress. At this session the capital of Utah has been added. They were put in deliberately by the Senate because there is not a public building in any one of those States. There is not a member of that conference committee who lives in a town as large as Salt Lake City; there is not a member of either Committee on Appropriations who lives in a town, I think, as large as Salt Lake City, where there is not a public building. There is not a town in this country of 60,000 people, like Salt Lake City, which has not a public building. Those capital towns of ours need public buildings, because they have there United States courts, the land offices, the surveyor-general's offices, the clerks, the marshals, the attorneys, collectors of internal revenue, and the post-offices. It will be a saving to the Government to erect these buildings. As I say, there is not a building in any one of those States.

The Senate has passed on this matter before; and I hope, in fairness and justice and for the best interests of the Government, that the Senate will sustain our conferees in asking that these States—at any rate these capital towns—be provided with public buildings.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to ask were not these buildings started by a provision on an appropriation bill? Did we not make an appropriation to buy the sites and fix the cost to begin the erection of the building?

Mr. DUBOIS. Some eighteen months ago the law was passed and the appropriation was made, yet nothing has been done; and now the conferees of the other House desire to cut out the appropriations for the buildings in the towns I have named.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I want to add a few words to what has been said by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] on this question.

We in the new States appreciate very much the action of the Senate in this matter, and to justify that action and its continuance, and to justify the support of the conferees on the part of the Senate, which is asked by the Senator from Idaho, it is fair to state the circumstances. Utah has no court building. It has cities ranging from 60,000 down. Salt Lake City has at least 60,000 inhabitants. Its post-office does a business approximating $100,000 a year. It has a circuit court, a district court, a land office, a surveyor-general's office, the weather bureau, and the internal-revenue collector or deputy collector. For all these offices the Government pays rent. They are scattered around the city; they are inconveniently located.

The bill proposes to buy a site and to expend this year about $75,000, and it seems to me that economy on the part of the Government and a proper recognition of the claims of all the people residing there justify the request that the conferees on the part of the Senate shall be supported in this matter.

Mr. CARTER. As stated by the Senator from Idaho, these buildings were provided for in the last appropriation act. I am quite sure this matter can not fairly be regarded as a demand for a portion of the public appropriations regardless of merit. In the city of Helena, the capital of Montana, the rents paid by the Government at the present time for buildings, in no sense suitable for the purpose, will amount to from 3½ per cent to 4 per cent interest per annum upon the aggregate cost of the site proposed to be purchased and the building to be erected there.

The limit fixed by the appropriation act one year ago was $150,000 for the site and structure to be erected thereon. When the Supervising Architect undertook the task of providing adequate accommodations for the United States at that point he found that the amount of the appropriation was wholly inadequate to serve the purpose intended. We have the United States circuit and district courts, and the business of the courts in that district is not of a trifling character. Exposed to fire and immediate destruction to-day stand the decrees and records of last year's business relating to something over $300,000,000 worth of property.

We insist that the litigants forced into the United States court for an adjudication of their rights can fairly demand of the Government, when they pay costs and submit themselves to the jurisdiction, reasonable provision for the preservation of the records which form the basis of title in many instances.

We do not ask that these appropriations shall be adhered to as a matter of favor to those States, but we do suggest that the State capital, where the United States circuit and district court business is attended to, constitutes an exceptional case and one of an entirely different character from the ordinary public building provided for the accommodation of the post-office in a country town.

We ask the Senate to insist that these three amendments relating to the three public buildings shall be adhered to by the conferees on the part of the Senate. We think that sound public policy demands that this position shall be insisted upon.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a word or two in detail as respects these public buildings.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to put in another item for him before he is heard on the subject?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly I will.

Mr. HAWLEY. For twelve or fourteen years, owing to my personal acquaintances, being on the Military Committee, visiting, and so forth, I have been well acquainted at Fortress Monroe; and among the affectionate messages that I always bring to Washington is a request for pity's sake give us a decent post-office. The old thing is rotting down; it is indecent; it is inconvenient. There is a growing business there, a very large business comparatively. There is some mail distributed there. The new great hotel is bringing more business. They have their inspector of customs, who needs a room there, and there is other Government business that will occasionally need accommodation. The commissioner used to wonder why he could not have a place, but I suppose he will have to find a place somewhere else hereafter. They ask to have a new building upon Government ground. It is all Government ground there. It is only a little brick building of $15,000. The measure has gone through the Senate several times. Some misfortune always happens to it. There is a small percentage of voters among the patrons of that office, which is perhaps one of the reasons. I wish the conferees of the Senate would just keep in that little item. It is an act of decency.

Mr. ALLISON. As respects these public buildings, two years ago, or perhaps a year ago, we provided for public buildings at the capitals of the three new States of Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming, appropriating a certain sum of money for the purchase of sites and limiting the cost of the buildings to $150,000 each. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported these amendments, and they were referred to the Senate Committee on Appropriations. We were told in the committee that the limit of $150,000 would not provide such public buildings and conveniences for the offices of the Government at those points for courts, and so forth, as would be required there. Therefore we increased the limit of cost, and that is the contention of the conferees on the part of the House of Representatives. They insist that because under the rules of the House an increase of the limit of the cost of a public building is new legislation, therefore they can not consent to these amendments. They explained to us that there were a great many other provisions for public buildings lying behind that could not be considered in the House, and that therefore it would be in the nature of ungenerous treatment to provide for a few public buildings.

Mr. HILL. There is provision made for a public building at Los Angeles, is there not?

Mr. ALLISON. There is.

Mr. HILL. That was agreed to. What is that building?

Mr. HAWLEY. A railroad depot?

Mr. ALLISON. No. The House conferees stated that this is legislation, and they can not consent to its application to the other public buildings I have named. The State of Utah coming in last year, we added in the Senate a building to be provided for at Salt Lake, which they also disagreed to; but they disagree also to the extension of the limit of a public building at Kansas City, Mo., where we have appropriated and expended $150,000.

Mr. GRAY. Is not that enough?

Mr. ALLISON. It does not seem to be quite enough. Under the plans and specifications of the architect of that great building it will require an additional $100,000 to complete it. We believed that in that case, where courts are held and where public offices must be provided for, it would be a wise thing for the Government to complete that building; but they will not consent to it.

The same is true of Omaha and St. Paul, where we have expended large sums of money and where the buildings are very nearly completed. We placed on this bill in the Senate an appropriation for a limited reorganization of the great public building in New York City for the convenience of courts and the members of the New York bar, appropriating $60,000 upon the urgent request of the judges there, and I believe the bar association of New York also concurred in the request.

Mr. HILL. That item has got left, has it not?

Mr. ALLISON. No; it is still in disagreement. We endeavored to impress upon our House friends the importance of those alterations, which they will not agree to.

So of Little Rock, where we appropriated $43,000, not to enlarge the limit, but to build an addition to the public building there, made necessary by the large amount of increasing business at that point.

Now, as to Los Angeles, the House itself receded from the amendment appropriating $12,000 to enlarge the post-office building at Los Angeles. The House also receded from its disagreement to the amendment respecting the post-office building in this city, although we did increase the limit $370,000 by our Senate amendment. It was found to be absolutely necessary to increase the limit in order to complete that building in a way suitable for use. That is the situation as respects these public buildings.

Mr. PLATT. Speaking about the repairs or changes in the New York post-office building, have not the House conferees heretofore made it a rule to agree to repairs and changes where they were necessary? Are they not taking new ground on that point?

Mr. ALLISON. They have agreed in several instances to alterations in public buildings, but they insist that all these matters shall go over for the present.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, regarding this matter of public buildings, in addition to what has been said let me state that it seems to me the House conferees are hardly in a position to insist upon these buildings going out of the bill, especialy the four that have been mentioned at the four new State capitals. They have already agreed to break the limit upon other buildings, notably the city post-office in Washington and the post-office or custom-house building at St. Albans, Vt. At St. Albans was a building that cost originally $85,000, including the site, which has since partly burned down. Notwithstanding the depreciation which has since occurred, the low price of labor, etc., they now appropriated $70,000 to repair and finish when they have the site and a goodly portion of the old building, and so they really appropriate for a new building. They also agree to a direct appropriation for more land for the public printing establishment, and that, too, when no bill has been passed or even introduced in either House.

In the matter of public buildings for Cheyenne, Wyo., Boise City, Idaho, and Helena, Mont., the original law passed, as has been said, several months ago. During the present session the Senate has passed a bill and sent it to the House making the limit even larger than the limit given in this sundry civil appropriation bill by just the amount necessary to buy the sites. In other words, a bill passed for $300,000 at Helena, $250,000 for Cheyenne, and $300,000 at Boise City, exclusive of cost of sites. That bill covering these buildings went to the House. It was there divided and put in three bills, and it is an open secret, if secret at all—in fact, it has been discussed on the floor of the House, so that I can allude to it—that those three bills have been reported favorably from the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or at least have been voted upon and remain in committee ready to be reported favorably.

Now, the House and Senate have once consented in a former Congress; the Senate has in this session consented twice to this measure, while the House, through its committee, has at least once consented. The proposed building at Cheyenne will save the Government enough rent to pay a good interest upon its expenditure. The people of Wyoming and of Cheyenne do not ask the Government to place a building there as a matter of charity or purely as a matter of benefit to that city or State. That city has built a capitol building, at a cost of about $300,000, to do the State business in, and I think I will be able to prove by at least two members of the Senate conference committee on this bill that it is as good a building for the money as has been erected in the United States.

The Government having a large amount of business at these cities and paying a large amount of rent, and having their offices scattered at various places, their valuable papers without vaults or safes, it seems to me a matter of economy and good business that the Government should without delay enter at least into the commencement of these buildings.

I understand the committee are asking for but $50,000 apiece for three of these buildings and $75,000 for the site of another. The immediate appropriation for the whole four amounts to but $225,000.

I say that the city of Cheyenne does not ask, nor does the State of Wyoming ask, as a charity, this building from the Government. Why should it? There is not in the State of Wyoming a poor-house, either State or municipal. There is not in the State of Wyoming a regular, habitual pauper known as such and supported as a pauper in some place of resort. The people of that State may be poor, but they are in a position to be self-supporting. As I said before, Wyoming people think enough of their own valuable public documents and papers and of their own State offices to have already erected a good capital building, a better one than is asked for now from the Government. The Government has to provide for a district and circuit court and all the court officers, land offices, registers and receivers, surveyor-general's office, a weather station, post-office, and in fact all the offices that exist at any one of the capitals.

There has never been one dollar expended by the United States inside of Wyoming on public buildings, unless it be on Indian reservations or at military posts. This would be the first building. The ledger account as between the United States and Wyoming now shows that, notwithstanding the United States has taken millions of dollars from the State for lands sold to the citizens of that State and from other sources, the State has not received a dollar from the United States in the way of investment in permanent improvements of any kind.

We simply ask now that the United States Government shall give whatever benefit to the State that may arise from its showing sufficient confidence in the permanency of the State to erect therein a building for the Government's own use in the safe and orderly conduct of its business.

Only this, and nothing more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments in disagreement and ask for a further conference with the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 26, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal as read will be approved.

Mr. KEM. I object to the approval of the Journal, and call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on the approval of the Journal). The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. KEM. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER (having counted the House). One hundred and eighty members are present—a quorum. The ayes have it; and the Journal is approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EVANS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering revenue bills; and pending that motion, I move that the time for general debate on the bill which was before the Committee of the Whole yesterday be limited to 2 o'clock, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What is the arrangement proposed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the proposition. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of revenue bills; and pending that, he moves that all general debate be closed at 2 o'clock.

Mr. BARRETT and Mr. BARTLETT of New York addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER (to Mr. BARRETT). For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARRETT. To ask if that motion is now in order pending the call for the regular order?

Mr. BARRETT. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that any member of the House heard the gentleman from Kentucky call for the previous question. I certainly did not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair heard him.

The question having been put on ordering the previous question,

The SPEAKER. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. BARRETT. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 91, noes 54.

Mr. BARRETT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. EVANS that the debate be closed at 2 o'clock in Committee of the Whole, on a division (demanded by Mr. BARRETT) there were—ayes 91, noes 30.

Mr. KEM. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of no quorum, as 213 members have just voted.

So the motion to limit debate to 2 o'clock was agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. EVANS that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of revenue bills, it was agreed to.

ALCOHOL IN THE ARTS.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] will occupy the time.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Before the gentleman proceeds, I would like to inquire of my colleague as to how he proposes to divide the remaining time.

Mr. EVANS. I suppose your side has had an hour and a half, while our side has occupied but fifty-five minutes. Suppose we divide the remaining time, we taking forty-five minutes and you taking the remainder.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would like to have a little of the time myself, I would state to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman from Connecticut will see the pressure that is brought to bear upon me——

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. There is the same pressure on me. May I ask how the time has been consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The affirmative have occupied fifty-five minutes, and the negative, the side represented by the gentleman from Connecticut, has occupied one hour and twenty-five minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I would suggest that my colleague on the committee allow the remaining time to be divided equally.

Mr. EVANS. Suppose we take fifty minutes and you take the remainder.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. That would not be sufficient. If the gentleman will permit me, I hope he will make another distribution of the time.

Mr. EVANS. I would suggest that you allow us forty-five minutes, then, and you take the remainder.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. We shall need at least an hour.

Mr. EVANS. If there was that much time I would be willing to do so. I suggest that we occupy forty minutes and you occupy the balance. Would that be satisfactory?

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Well, we will have to submit to it; it is the best we can get.

Mr. EVANS. Then I suggest that we will occupy forty minutes, and the remainder of the time, being thirty-five minutes, will be occupied by your side.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the Chair will regard that arrangement as acceptable to the committee.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that it is necessary for those of us who are in favor of the pending bill to go further in defending the policy of the Ways and Means Committee of the House than to quote the admissions that were made on the floor during the discussion on yesterday by my colleague on the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL]. He said, and that is all that we have claimed, that section 61 of the act of 1894 is "crude and faulty." He says that the repeal of section 61 is justifiable because of the fact "that it is crude and possibly impossible of execution." He admits that section 61 of the act of 1894 is not only crude but it is impracticable and can not be executed, and that it "would cause frauds on the revenue" if this law exempting alcohol for use in the industrial arts from the internal-revenue tax were kept on the statute book.

Now, what more could any man claim in behalf of the bill which is now pending? It is without dispute, measured by the wisdom of both political parties, that this provision for the exemption of alcohol used in the industrial arts from the internal-revenue tax upon distilled spirits is wholly impracticable. That was the opinion of the Republican Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the last Administration. That was the unanimous opinion of the Ways and Means Committee of the Fifty-first Congress, and it is the opinion of the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It was the unanimous opinion of this House in the last Congress, after the Wilson bill had passed, and it is the unanimous opinion, if the admissions made by the gentleman from Connecticut may be counted, of the Ways and Means Committee of the present Congress. That being true, what is the situation of the Government at this time?

We say that this section ought to be repealed because, unless that is done, we are inviting a mountain's weight of claims against the Treasury of the United States. And for whose benefit, Mr. Chairman? Why should this section be retained in the law? Certainly not for the benefit of the manufacturers, because they are required by the section to pay an internal tax and no regulations are in force for the rebate of the tax paid on alcohol used in the industrial arts. It is not for the benefit of the American public, because everybody knows that the uncertainty about the collection of that rebate has prevented the manufacturer from extending to his customers any advantage whatever by reason of this law. The law as it stands helps nobody, and the admission, candidly and fairly made yesterday by my colleague [Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut], that it ought to be repealed ought to be very influential in the settlement of this dispute.

Therefore we say, appealing for the vindication of our judgment to the common opinion of all political parties, of experts of both Administrations, appealing to the judgment of the Ways and Means Committee in every House since the Forty-ninth Congress, that this section 61 ought to be repealed without delay. But my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] comes forward and says to us, if this is repealed—

> Dare the gentlemen from the grain-raising States go back to their constituents and tell them that the only tariff legislation that they have succeeded in passing was to put the highest tax in all the world upon the farmer's grain, and thereby narrow the market which the Wilson tariff bill by accident had broadened?

I will say to my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] that the repeal of this section has no connection whatever with the tariff question. The tariff question is not involved here. The only question is a plain business proposition, as to whether a section of the law of 1894 which we have a prospect of repealing, a section which, by the admission of my friend from Connecticut, is crude, impracticable, and ought to be repealed——

Mr. HILL. I do not wish to be put in that position. I did not say that.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I referred to my colleague on the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut]. The question is whether we ought to be put in the position of leaving that section on the statute book when, by the admission of my colleague [Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut], it is crude, impracticable, and ought to be repealed.

But he says before we repeal it we ought to pass some more suitable measure relative to the matter in order to do justice to legitimate manufacturing interests. I admit fully the force of his contention, and if we were not entirely at the mercy of an opposition Senate and a hostile Executive I would cheerfully follow my friend in his efforts to promote the prosperity of the great industrial interests for which he speaks.

But I undertake to say—and I address myself to Republicans on this floor—that no man of us who really weighs the political situation in which we are placed ought to stand in this House and lecture the Ways and Means Committee, or the Republican majority, for not having tried to move on party lines against the inert Populistic mass called the Senate, and the inert Democratic mass called the President. [Applause and laughter.] It takes at least three branches of Government in this country to put any kind of a political measure through; and at present the Senate and the President are against this House. I will not rail at the Senate. If it had not been for the fact that it requires three branches of legislation to do business in the United States, the programme of free trade, which my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] laments, would have come to fruition in this country twenty years before it did. For all these years the Senate alone stood between the people and the impending threat, and for four of those years, from 1885 to 1889, the Senate alone steadied the business of the American people in the midst of free-trade proclamations from the White House and free-trade majorities on this floor.

I belong to an old-fashioned school of theology which believes that Providence, in all these years, was holding the Democratic party in check, and used Brother Wilson, somewhat diluted and modified by Brother GORMAN, for the purpose of setting up in the United States an object lesson in practical economics that should bring the American people, as the old preachers used to say, to a realizing sense of their lost condition. [Laughter.] Notice, for example, how long the object lesson was put off and postponed. If it had come before the waste and extravagance of the period of the civil war had been repaired, before a disordered currency had been restored, before a promise to pay that still occupies a prominent position on the face of every paper dollar of the United States had been kept, a thousand explanations would have befogged the inquiring citizen, and nobody would have known either the meaning or the purpose of the visitation.

If it had come before we had had a reasonably long experience with the protective tariff, operating upon the basis of a sound currency, the educational effect of it would have been limited, because we should not have been in a position to appreciate the blessings we had cast away. As it was, Providence gave us ten years of protection, from 1880 to 1890, years of comparative plenty, years of industrial growth, years of good markets for the farmer, years of good customers for the factory, years in which American manhood was lifted up into the largest and most hopeful outlook since the primeval benediction, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread."

And yet the clamor still continued in this country. Walking delegates were going in carriages from factory to factory and from farmhouse to farmhouse, preaching the gospel of discontent, and from their easy chairs here in this Capitol, with the studied reiteration of the patent-medicine advertisement, to which so many of our colleagues have lent the light of their countenance [laughter], Democratic statesmen were telling the American people that their case was hopeless and that all that would save them would be the immediate application of the favorite Democratic prescription.

In my own State, for example, a land whose chief industries depend entirely on the farm, a land which I have sometimes thought merits the tribute that Homer paid to Argos when he called it the breast of Greece, because it furnished food for the whole nation, we had, by an accident that sometimes happens even in well-regulated communities, a Democratic governor, Horace Boies.

All his lifetime, even down to old age, he had been a Republican, looking through the dust and cobwebs of a country law office for a place on the ticket, until patience finally was regarded by him no longer as a real virtue, and so he joined himself to that portion of the population which believed that the corkscrew is the most essential device in the mechanism of civilization; and as an anti-prohibition Republican he was selected to lead the Democratic party to victory. [Laughter.] And he led it to victory; a victory "cheap and nasty"; exactly the kind of victory that is not very much better than defeat.

Hardly had he got seated in his office before his horizon began to widen. He saw at once that while a local dispute about the legal status of the town pump was a large enough question to get in on, it was hardly great enough to feed the aspiration of an immortal soul [laughter]; so he enlarged his horizon, or at least shifted it, and at the first opportunity carried his laurels to the city of New York, and laid them down at the annual dinner of the Tariff Reform League. He got from one J. R. Sovereign (a gentleman now grown obsolete as the head of a labor organization on whose assessments he manages to live in a style becoming the leisure he has always enjoyed), certain alleged statistics of the condition of industry in the State of Iowa.

He went to the banquet with the material prospects of our great State done up in a rag bag and sat down between Grover Cleveland and Mr. Carlisle and put the rag bag under his chair. Mr. Cleveland, then a private citizen, was the first speaker; Mr. Carlisle, then the junior Senator from the State of Kentucky, followed, both of them sticking close to the text of tariff reform. To the mind of both of these great men the people and their welfare were separated exactly as "to the Jews old Canaan stood, while Jordan rolled between" [laughter], and with them Governor Boies agreed. Not a word was said about the money question and not a word about silver. When he rose to speak he reached under his chair and took out of his rag bag—then and ever since the faithful traveling companion of his politics—and I will read the conclusion of what he said:

> I have spoken of the condition of agricultural industries in my own State. I have called attention to the fact that for years these industries have been prosecuted at a loss, instead of a profit, and I affirm without fear of contradiction that there is no State in this Union where the great staples of agriculture—the productions that supply the necessary food of man and beast—can be more cheaply produced.

He declared that the tariff had ruined agriculture, and ended by warning his hearers—> to prepare for a storm the consequence of which in both a political and economic sense no man can measure.

I have read his words, not for the purpose of entering into an argument as to the truth of them, but solely for the purpose of showing how graciously Providence, knowing that the people of America were about to throw away the protective tariff, purposed to give them one up to date, with all the modern prosperity-producing improvements. In response to that purpose, I think, the Fifty-first Congress came together. It was a Republican Congress through and through. In the chair sat THOMAS B. REED, great in council, splendid in courage, magnificent in action. [Applause.] At the head of the table yonder, in Ways and Means, sat William McKinley, of Ohio [applause], the colored map of whose political victories, made out, I believe, by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], would seem to indicate that he has carried nearly everything on this continent except the Gulf of California and the Great Lakes. [Laughter.] Around him sat the strong men of his party—Bayne of Pennsylvania, now gone out of the noise of time; McKenna of California, now a circuit judge of the United States; Lafollette of Wisconsin, young and eloquent champion of our cause; GEAR of Iowa and BURROWS of Michigan, fruitful in industry and knowledge, translated now, both of them, to that elysium of our politics where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest [great laughter and applause]; PAYNE of New York and Governor DINGLEY of Maine, still splendid leaders among us—men whose comprehensive grasp of great affairs has won for them a place among the notable political figures of our time. [Applause.] From that committee, not as the product of one man's wisdom, but of the wisdom of all, came the tariff law of 1890.

It passed this House without a dissenting vote. It went to the Senate and was there shaped under the hands of experienced statesmanship. It took on provisions for reciprocity with the commercial world, fresh from the genius of James G. Blaine. [Applause.] It went to the conference committee, was carefully considered, and came back to receive every Republican vote in the House and in the Senate; and afterwards the President of the United States, with a pen that has become an heirloom in the household of our faith, added to it the commanding signature of Benjamin Harrison. [Applause.] It was a courageous thing to do, to pass a law touching every man's business and go to the people in a general election within a month. The Republican party was brave enough to do it. But that little month was long enough to call forth all the legions of calumny and false pretense. Every line of the bill was belied, every sentence of it was distorted, and in the tumult created by the panic-stricken importers, jobbers, and bargain-counters of the country, the splendid political phalanx that stood by the side of REED in his quorum insurrection of 1890 [laughter], and that voted to a man with McKinley on the motion for the previous question on the conference report, melted away into private life, and saw their places taken by the most grotesque assortment of political freaks that ever contributed to the gayety of nations. [Great laughter and applause.]

Even McKinley himself, who gave his name to the bill, had the experience of being burnt in effigy at Sheffield on the same day that the Democracy defeated him for Congress in Ohio. [Laughter and applause.] But the purpose of Providence was not to be turned aside. Hardly had the tumult of politics quieted before business resumed its normal condition. Prices, instead of going up, went down, or at least were equalized; men, instead of losing employment, were happy in new industrial opportunities, and American business in every department of it responded to conditions the most satisfactory that ever existed in the whole history of the Republic if not in the record of the human race. The object lesson of prosperity was complete. It was palpable enough even to create a proper impression on the mind of our friend Governor Boies, whom we left a short time ago in New York sitting between Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Carlisle; for he delivered a message to the legislature of Iowa, January 13, 1892, beginning with words which I wish to read here for the purpose of preserving them in the political records of the day. He said:

A provision in the constitution of our State directs that the governor shall convey to the general assembly information concerning the condition of the State and recommend such legislation as he deems expedient. In discharging this duty it is my pleasant privilege to say that at no time in the history of Iowa have her people been blessed with more general prosperity than they now enjoy. Every form of industry, every branch of business, has felt the influences of conditions so favorable to us. With increased prices for the products of our farms has come a substantial advance in the value of agricultural lands in our State. A marked impetus has been given to the upbuilding of cities and towns. An era of prosperity has come to our manufacturing and mining industries. Our lines of railway have felt the influence of better prices for the great staples we are able to send abroad, and wherever we turn in every branch of industry, trade, or profession in which our people are engaged are to be seen unmistakable evidences of the general prosperity with which our people are blessed.

Mr. McMILLIN (during the reading of the foregoing extract). Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him for a moment, I have been informed by the Chair that the arrangement has been made to give the gentleman from Iowa the time, which I hardly think is fair when it is to be exhausted not in a discussion of the measure before the committee, but in a political discussion altogether foreign to the measure and which is not to be answered on this side. I want simply to enter my protest, and I think the gentleman's sense of fairness will lead him to see the justice of it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to my friend from Tennessee that I recognize the propriety of his suggestion, and that I intend to occupy only a few minutes more.

Think of it! Less than two years—hardly more than one year; yet it was long enough to turn the rags of our misery into the royal purple of prosperity! Now, it would almost seem that the dramatic unity of the narrative would require that I should tell you that Governor Boies, his backslidings having been healed, had been trying to get the people of our State and of the country back over the main traveled road to the industrial conditions which prevailed in 1892. I regret that I am compelled to state that the governor's point of view has again widened, or at least shifted, and that he is now engaged in trying, with more or less local success, to induce the people to change the treatment and wind up our worldly affairs by the unlimited coinage of silver dollars out of material now worth 51 cents, in order that our people may use such of these coins as they can get hold of in going through the motions of paying their debts. [Laughter.] I regret to have to say this, and I have put this message forward only to show how easily a good political leader is able to forget the blunder of 1892 in his new-born interest in the crime of 1873.

Now, a word more. I do not suppose that we can put through this Congress any tariff legislation. It is reasonably certain, however, that we can put through this Congress the legislation which this bill proposes. And I do not think that we should hesitate to do our part. I do not believe that we, as Republicans, since the opportunity has come to correct this evil of the law of 1894, ought to shrink from the duty and responsibility of saving the Treasury of the United from the accumulation of claims under a law which I have already suggested benefits no manufacturing industry in its present shape and is of no possible benefit to the consuming millions of the United States. [Applause].

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest now that the gentlemen on the other side proceed with their thirty-five minutes. We have fifteen minutes remaining, the whole of which, if possible, I shall yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] having presented to this committee a very picturesque political kaleidoscope, including the political migrations of Governor Boies, I hope now that the committee may be favored with a return to the discussion of the subject-matter in hand. [Applause.]

I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX].

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, during the speech just concluded I came to an understanding of why it was that the gentleman who has this bill in charge was so anxious to close this debate at 2 o'clock, instead of allowing the extended time that was desired. The reason is perfectly apparent—that they have got through discussing this measure which is before the House, and on which this House will soon be called upon to vote, and have gone to talking general politics, especially Western politics, and that in the State of Iowa.

Now, I think that such a political harangue as that will be a very poor answer when the question is asked by the various industries affected and to be affected, "Why was the repeal of section 61 necessary?" Some better reason than anything offered by the gentleman from Iowa will be required. Now, I do not propose to take up the time of this committee at any length, for two reasons. In the first place, the arguments upon this side of the case were very admirably and very ably stated yesterday by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL]. In the second place, we have got to a point in the session where time is of some consequence. But, notwithstanding all that, and notwithstanding the speech of the gentleman from Iowa, I would be willing to enter now upon a general revision of very many provisions of the Wilson bill, conscious that if any practical result were attained there is no work that we could perform that would be of such benefit to the people, and none which is so universally and so earnestly demanded. It might not be an entirely useless task, even though such a bill could not pass the Senate or receive the approval of the President. We should, Mr. Chairman, have a Republican bill, drawn and completed on Republican principles, ready to be offered when the extra session of the Fifty-fifth Congress comes in, in March, 1897, without compelling the people to wait till the coming fall for such provision to be had. [Applause.] We have very little to do, in the discharge of our duty, with the Senate; and we have very little to do with Grover Cleveland.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to any partial or piecemeal change in the present law. I am opposed to the repeal or substantial change of any of its important provisions without changing other important provisions, especially those which relate to the very enactments sought to be changed. I say it is not right or just to repeal this section and give no consideration whatever to the other provisions of our tariff and revenue laws which depend upon it and are connected with it. The rates of duty upon many articles of manufacture, it is to be presumed, were considered in relation to this tax upon alcohol. If that is not so, then it is fair to presume that when the tax on alcohol was fixed its effect upon these articles was considered. We at one sweep undertake to repeal this single section, caring nothing and considering nothing as to what or whom it affects in this country. Now, we have done very little for the manufacturers of this country. We have done nothing for its industries. Let us be very careful that we do not, in addition to that failure, strike a blow and do an injury to already existing industries.

Mr. Chairman, is this an important provision of the present tariff law—the internal-revenue portion of it? It is said in the report of this committee that the estimate made of the alcohol likely to be claimed under the act is 10,000,000 gallons per annum—a total for the fiscal years 1895 and 1896 of 20,000,000 gallons—making a tax of about $10,000,000 per annum. Is it not, then, an important provision that proposes to place now upon the industries of this country—burdened, struggling, trodden down to the ground—an additional burden of $10,000,000 a year?

Is it not of some consequence that we render them to that amount just so much less able to compete with the manufacture of articles in which alcohol enters that come into this country from abroad?

But it is an important provision, Mr. Chairman, in other respects, in that it is a practical declaration of a Republican doctrine that we shall reduce our revenue taxation as fast as possible and look for our revenue to the duties laid on imported articles.

We have now got this general provision incorporated into the law. I say to you if it is taken out no man can tell when, if ever, it will get back. We have got it. If there are faults under it, let us provide for them; let us amend the act; but let us retain the principle, and not lose what we have already gained.

What are the reasons offered for the repeal of the provision? If you will read the whole report of the Committee on Ways and Means through, you will find that four reasons are assigned. In the first place, that no rules can be framed under it; in the second place, it is not the consumer that gets the benefit; third, that we need the revenues, and fourth, because of the wood-alcohol trust. The second and third arguments are all contained in the first one, and there is no reason, when you analyze the report, why this should be done except that the regulations can not be framed under it, and second, that it should not be repealed because it would be in contravention of the wood-alcohol interest. Analyze it, and you will find that it all comes down to these two provisions.

Now, in regard to the inability to frame regulations, let us consider that for a moment. Under the section I submit to the House, and to the able gentlemen upon the Ways and Means Committee, as well as to the distinguished lawyers in this committee, that this section is drawn strongly in favor of the Government; that if you had the general doctrine which is therein embodied and incorporated in the internal-revenue laws you could not draw a section more in the interest of the Government and against the manufacturer who has to receive the article. You provide, for instance, in the first place, that he shall pay the tax before receiving the commodity. The money gets into the hands of the financial officers of the United States. It is to be gotten out by the manufacturer from the possession of the Government. How is he to do it? He can only get it under the language of the section, by "satisfying" somebody. No method of proof is prescribed, no kind of evidence is laid down by which he is to do it; but he can only receive the money back by satisfying——

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Bowler. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNOX. No; the Supreme Court satisfied Bowler. This is unfortunately apparently a "Bowler" game to prevent the Government from paying its just dues. That seems to be what it is.

But I say you have got to satisfy somebody. Now, when you have this general provision, why is it that regulations can not be framed to carry those provisions out? [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. PARKER. I thank the Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Connecticut, who has been only able, however, to give ten minutes to the Representative of the second manufacturing district of the United States in defense of its industries.

I have nothing, Mr. Chairman, but respect for the gentlemen who urge the passage of this bill, but if I judge by the last speech for it, I would say, with all due deference, that they do not understand it. I want to give you some facts in connection with the matter. It is a protective measure that is proposed to be repealed—protective both to agriculture and manufactures. I do not believe if the members of this House understood that fact that either Democrats or Republicans would try to bring further trouble upon these industries.

Commercial alcohol costs 23 cents a gallon. It was news to me, and I think it is news to you, to learn that fact. The tax on alcohol of $1.10 a proof gallon, the pure article being 88 per cent above proof, amounts to $2.06 a gallon, and the commercial article is sold, therefore, for about $2.30 a gallon. Men can, and often do, pay that price for a beverage, and my friend from Massachusetts would say that they ought. There are somewhere between one and two hundred drinks in a gallon, but men can not afford to use alcohol in the arts at any such price as that, and no nation in the world requires it. We used to have a burning fluid made of alcohol and benzine. We have it no longer, because we could not afford to use alcohol in that way. We used to have alcohol varnishes; now more seldom. We can use alcohol in the arts to an extent that is absolutely unknown until you have had occasion to investigate. It is destroyed in the manufacture of chloroform, which changes its character. It is destroyed in making photographic materials. It is used as a vehicle in varnish. It is used in a shellac composition to put into hats and then allowed to evaporate and get away. It is used in medicines as a mere solvent. I do not mean in alcoholic preparations, such as so-called bitters, but in medicinal preparations, whether in making such drugs as quinine or morphine, or in making corrosive sublimate. It is used in making a like compound of mercury, for the manufacture of percussion caps. It is used in making tinctures, extracts of fruits, and extract of flavors.

The expression "medicinal and other like preparations" means preparations of medicine and preparations of that sort, not alcoholic preparations under that guise, and any Secretary of the Treasury who can discriminate between silver ore and lead ore can discriminate between the preparations mentioned in that section and frauds upon the Treasury in the way of alcoholic preparations. It would be used in hundreds of other ways. It would be used in many times the present quantity. It would give a market for grain. The enforcement of this section would give a chance to manufactures and agriculture and employment to our people. But the Secretary of the Treasury has said he will not enforce it. He has said he will not prescribe regulations, and a Republican House is asked to support him in opposing the manufacturers of this country. What is more, under the present law that same alcohol is free for export and is exported in bond. Think what that means, gentlemen. That very alcohol at 23 cents a gallon was sent to Canada. There they made the explosive powder for percussion caps. They got the benefit of the manufacture and sent it back, on a small duty, to us. That very alcohol can be sent to England or Germany to make medicines there to send back to us.

Now as to a matter of history. Somebody has said that this provision was accidental. It was not. A constituent of mine who pays $48,000 a year in the way of tax on alcohol used in making sulphuric ether knows of that fact. The tariff of 1894 raised the internal revenue on commercial alcohol from $1.70 a gallon to $2.06, an increase of 36 cents. They protested. They said they could not continue their manufacture under those circumstances, much more when duties were reduced, and when the duty on hats went down from 100 per cent to 35 per cent, when the duties on sulphuric ether, their product, likewise went down, and everything was lowered, they said they could not use alcohol or continue their manufacture, and then they were told by this bill: "Make no objection. This bill is only against alcohol that is to be drunk, not against alcohol to be used in the arts." They have relied upon this law. They have made contracts based upon it. They have not received the rebate, but they have agreed with all their customers to give them the rebate when received. They have made their sales upon that basis, and you are asked to destroy those industries. They could make many other things, notably chloroform, with cheap alcohol.

Now, is there any difficulty, when 500 barrels of alcohol per year go to their factory with the stamps on the barrels, and they produce those stamps, as required by this law, to the Secretary of the Treasury, is there any chance for fraud? How? They can only use the alcohol in manufacture. They can not sell it. All the laws of the State and of the United States prevent such sale. They receive the barrels full, they send them back empty. They return the stamps, which show what they have used in their trade; and whether it be in factories of varnish, medicines, or percussion caps, or whatever it may be, any honest manufacturer can do the same thing, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and there will not be a looting of the Treasury, as has been stated here, but simply a return of the tax which they themselves pay, a return made because it is for the benefit of American industries that they should have this protection.

Protection may be by duty; it may be by bounty; it may be by exemption. Here it is by exemption. It is none the less protection; and as a representative of the protective principle, with all my reverence for the leaders who framed the tariff bill of 1890, who are its parents, when it comes to the principles of protection, I must stand here in this House on facts which I believe they do not thoroughly realize and understand, to appeal to this House, Republican and Democratic, to all who believe in American agriculture, American manufacture, and American trade, binding the people together from one end of this country to the other, and to ask them, as they love their country, as they are trusted by their constituents, not to vote for this repeal. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. COLSON].

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Chairman, in the five minutes which have been yielded to me by the gentleman from Connecticut, to whom I return thanks for the kindness, I can not go into detail, but I can and do enter my protest against the repeal of section 61 of the Wilson bill, which provides for free alcohol in the arts and in any medicinal compound.

Some members of the committee from which this bill was reported have complained at the criticism which has been made by many members of the House of the action of the committee in reporting measures here, but I think the criticism of which they complain is just and proper, for the measures which are referred to that committee are measures of most general interest to the people of this country and in which every member upon this floor has an intense interest. I submit that the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means have not done what they should have done in regard to these great public measures, in that they have failed to submit them to a caucus of the Republican members of this House.

They have no right to expect the Republicans of this House to come up and support any bill which they may seek to report here regardless of its merits, that measure not having been submitted to a caucus of the Republicans of this House. I say they have no right to complain at any criticism that may be made on their action. That action should be discussed freely and fully here when they have not submitted any measure to a Republican caucus. I would like, Mr. Chairman, for the Committee on Ways and Means to explain why it is that other matters of equal importance have not been considered by that committee and bills reported in regard to them. The Wilson bill, passed in 1894, thoroughly eliminated from our tariff system the reciprocity feature, and certainly that is of more importance than the matter embraced in this bill now before the committee for consideration. By the repeal of the reciprocity clause of the McKinley law we have lost millions of dollars of foreign trade. The flour-mill men in Kentucky and other States, who had not before the passage of the McKinley law been able to sell a barrel of flour in Cuba, under the reciprocal relations established with Spain, under section 3 of that bill, were afforded a market in Cuba for millions of dollars worth of flour, which market was taken from them as soon as the McKinley law was repealed. Why have not the Ways and Means Committee reported a bill here restoring reciprocity? Oh, they say, we can not secure the passage of such a bill—that the Senate will not pass it, and the President would veto it. I say to you that this House has not the right to anticipate the action of the Senate of the United States; it has not the right to anticipate the action of the President of the United States. We should act; we should do our duty; we should, in my judgment, have laid before the Senate a general tariff measure with reciprocity a prominent feature, and put the responsibility upon that body if it failed to pass it. [Applause.] And if the Senate passed it, let the responsibility for its failure to become a law rest upon the Chief Executive of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I thought I was to have ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is very singular that with an able and distinguished Committee on Ways and Means, we find that the great measure now under consideration, which affects the North, the East, and the Middle States, and the great manufacturing interests of those States, has been abandoned to the custody and control of the gentleman from Kentucky. It is hardly necessary for me to call attention to the names of the distinguished gentlemen upon that committee. I repeat that it is very remarkable that we find that no one of those distinguished gentlemen rises in advocacy of this bill; for the only prominent member of that committee who has ventured to address this Committee of the Whole, the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], has given us a speech—what on? On the triumphs of his party; on the alleged virtues of a protective policy, without uttering one word in favor of the measure now under consideration.

Let me, before passing on to consider the merits of this bill, call the attention of the committee to the fact that only a few days ago we had a bill passed hurriedly through this House, under the guidance of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS], a bill in the interest of the distillers of Kentucky and of the whisky trust; a bill which will do incalculable damage to the city of New York, which I have the honor to represent in part. I am told that it will deprive the Federal Government in licenses of three-quarters of a million dollars; and for what purpose—to give the distillers of Kentucky an opportunity to bottle their liquor and sell it for their own added benefit and advantage, and not through the dealers.

Mr. STEELE. And to deprive Canada of that trade?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. That was the measure passed last week, and now we have another measure proposed in favor of the distilling interests and the whisky trust.

The only objection which I understand the committee made to the existing law is that it is impracticable to execute. Can it be possible, Mr. Chairman, that we, the Congress of the United States, confess our incapacity to frame adequate laws? Can it be possible that the Secretary of the Treasury or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue finds it beyond his brain power to frame regulations adequate to control this matter?

Let me call your attention to the fact that section 61 of the Wilson tariff bill of 1894 is very broad. It leaves this whole matter to the Secretary of the Treasury. He has absolute power in his discretion to frame proper regulations. Then the collector of internal revenue in each district must be satisfied about the manufacture. So that it is first only necessary that the Secretary of the Treasury should frame the proper regulations, however stringent they may be, and it is all within his discretion. Then it is incumbent upon the manufacturer to satisfy the collector of internal revenue that he has complied with the law, and when he has executed it he is entitled to a rebate. This repeal will work a great deal of harm to the manufacturing interests of New York; to the great drug trade; to those who are engaged in the manufacture of perfumes, varnishes, and paints, and in many other industries.

If you look back to the Forty-seventh Congress you will find that in 1882 it was stated in a Republican House, when Chester A. Arthur was President of the United States, that every member of the Committee on Ways and Means was in favor of free alcohol for use in the arts and sciences.

Now, let me say one word, which I think should be controlling in this matter. The bill now under consideration provides for what? For simple repeal, without any saving clause. Let me call your attention to the language of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Give me one minute more.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KEM. I object, if this is by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not by unanimous consent, the Chair will say to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman from Connecticut has some more time, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut has the time and yields two minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEPBURN. I simply desired to ask, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have the greatest regard for my friend from Iowa, and shall be glad to talk with him after I get through with my two minutes. [Laughter.]

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the point that we can not in common honesty repeal this section 61 without a saving clause. Look at what the Supreme Court decided yesterday in the sugar-bounty cases. In that decision they use the words "right and justice," "honor," and "moral claim." I use the same words to you to-day, and I call upon you in the name of common honesty not to repeal this section 61 without some saving clause providing for the repayment of the rebates to manufacturers. Those manufacturers who have filed their claims can not be barred out by the failure of the Secretary of the Treasury to make proper regulations. If he is chargeable with nonfeasance in having failed to prepare proper regulations, the manufacturers can not be debarred from the prosecution of their claims for the rebates to which they are entitled under the act of 1894.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I believe I am entitled to control the remainder of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL] has one minute remaining, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] has the other eleven minutes.

Mr. EVANS. When the gentleman from Connecticut gets through we will use our remaining eleven minutes unless the gentleman chooses to yield us that one minute.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I will reserve it.

Mr. EVANS. No; we want you to use it now, unless you will yield it to us.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I yield it to the gentleman.

Mr. EVANS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN]. The remainder of the time will be occupied by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, upon a purely business proposition so vastly important as this, I can not but regret that the time which was given for the presentation of the affirmative of the pending measure should have been wasted, as a portion of it was, in a discussion which, if no friend of mine were involved in it, I should have to call a harangue.

What is the proposition here? It is to repeal section 61 of the tariff act passed two years ago. It has been held by the Secretary of the Treasury that this section is wholly impossible of enforcement, by reason of its vagueness and uncertainty. It is held by the Ways and Means Committee of this House, it was held by the Ways and Means Committee of the last House, that the Secretary's contention in that regard was correct, and that it was wholly impossible for any Secretary of the Treasury, under any regulation, to enforce what was supposed to be the law. Before going further, I want to disabuse the mind of my good friend from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] of the idea that this is some legislation in favor of the distillers and of the whisky trusts. Nothing could be further from the truth, though I know the gentleman believes what he says or he would not say it. My friend in front of me [Mr. HILL] also took the same position. Now, does not the gentleman know that free alcohol in the arts would increase the amount of spirits used in the arts and would thereby increase the possibilities of distilling and of sale by the trust? If the whisky distillers and the whisky trusts are interested on either side of this question, they are interested in having free alcohol.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I can not. I am generally quite liberal in that respect, but my time is so limited that I can not yield on this occasion. Now, Mr. Chairman, what are the facts? Already there are heaped up before the Court of Claims millions of dollars of claims arising out of this vague, uncertain, indefinite provision of the tariff act. It is estimated that $10,000,000 a year in claims will be brought in in the future, and that ten millions a year for the last two years will be presented as soon as there is an intimation that the court will hold that the claimants are entitled to free alcohol in the arts. I want to cite here the evidence of men who have examined this question.

This is no new proposition. It has been suggested to every Ways and Means Committee ever since I have been a member of that committee, and it has been my fortune to be a member of it for twelve years past. There has never been a single Ways and Means Committee, either Republican or Democratic, in that time that thought it was possible to give free alcohol in the arts and still have an honest and thorough enforcement of the internal-revenue law. So thinks the present committee. So thought the last committee, which framed the Wilson bill. So thought the McKinley committee, which framed the bill that has been lauded so much by my friend from Iowa. So thought the Mills committee, which framed the Mills bill. I need not go further back. There has never been a suggestion either by the majority or the minority that it would be proper for the Government to give free alcohol in the arts and thus give opportunity for possible frauds that would result in pulling down the revenue derived from that great source of revenue to our Government. And the Finance Committee of the Senate took the same ground in the last Congress. The section that it is proposed to repeal was the work of Mr. HOAR alone.

It is the proposition of one man. It is crude, uncertain, and indefinite. If you give free alcohol in the arts—if you give free alcohol in every drug store in the United States—if at every corner where a drug store may be erected you may have a free barrel and free spigot and free spile and free bung, who can tell what will become of the hundred and odd millions of revenue without which this Government is unable to proceed at the present day? [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EVANS. I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes remaining I can only state three facts. The first is that the bill now pending before the committee is not a tariff bill. It does not touch the question of duties upon imports or relate to that subject in any direct or even indirect manner whatever. It is simply an internal-revenue bill. And we have passed through this session of Congress already three internal-revenue bills, modifying the internal-revenue provisions in the act of 1894, and no one has suggested until this bill came up that we were changing the tariff of 1894.

Mr. PARKER. May I ask the gentleman whether it is not——

Mr. DINGLEY. I can not in my limited time yield for any interruption.

This question is purely a business question—nothing more, nothing less. It has no connection with party politics. The question is simply what a business man should do in the circumstances in which the Government finds itself to-day. In the closing session of the last Congress the then House of Representatives, every Republican member concurring, passed precisely this bill which we have before us to-day, all agreeing that in the interest of the Government, in the interest of good administration, this provision in the internal-revenue sections of the law of 1894 on this subject should be repealed.

Thirdly, I have to say that this situation arises from a peculiar condition of circumstances. When the bill of 1894 was under consideration in the Senate, after all the tariff provisions had been concluded and that body was considering the internal-revenue provisions, this provision was offered with the distinct understanding in the Senate that it was to go to the committee of conference, and that if they thought on examination that any provision should be framed to give in certain cases exemption from the internal tax on alcohol, without opening the door to frauds on the revenue, it should be done. Not a single vote would have been given for that provision in the Senate if it had been supposed that that precise provision was to be the law, and nothing more. It is utterly impracticable; and that is the agreement not merely of the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue; not merely of the present Secretary of the Treasury, but in 1890, when we framed that act we submitted substantially the same proposition, with other propositions, to the then Republican Commissioner of Internal Revenue and to the then Secretary of the Treasury, and they agreed that the provisions were utterly impracticable and that the duty on alcohol could not be remitted under such a law with safety to the Treasury of the Government.

We had this question before us when we framed the tariff act of 1890, notwithstanding the declaration of the platform of 1888; and after considering it for weeks we decided, in view of the wide extent of this country and the peculiar circumstances in which we are placed, that we could not then frame a measure making alcohol free of tax in all the various arts and manufactures and in medicine without effectually depriving the Government of essential revenue.

My own belief—certainly my hope—is that when we can spare the revenue and when we come to frame a new tariff act that will give the country sufficient revenue we can provide within certain limits for free alcohol in many manufactures. But that is a question which requires further investigation. This country is so wide in its territory, there are so many difficulties in the administration of such an act, that Republican and Democratic Administrations alike have agreed that it would be exceedingly difficult to frame provisions on this subject that will adequately protect the revenue; and all agree that the present provision is absolutely unworkable unless we propose to practically deprive ourselves of revenue.

What is the effect of this provision as we have it now? If we do nothing, if we allow this provision to run along for a year, it is the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that at least $10,000,000 of claims will be piled up during that time which the Republican Administration next year will be called upon to pay in case the courts sustain the contention of the claimants. And I ask gentlemen on this side whether they are prepared to pile up such claims against the Administration which we know will come in on the 4th of March next.

Let us, then, at once repeal the unworkable free-alcohol provision of the act of 1894. Let us then turn over this subject to a careful committee of inquiry. Let them consider what can be done without depriving the Government of revenue, and let them report at the next session. And then when we come to frame a new tariff bill, when we undertake the task of providing sufficient Federal revenue, let us take up this question and consider to what extent and under what regulations and restrictions we can safely grant this exemption to certain industries of this country. But if we propose to open the door in the manner provided in the existing provision of law, certainly the Treasury must suffer; and no one among the great mass of the people can possibly be benefited, because no manufacturer, no person using alcohol under the existing law will reduce his price on the goods manufactured because of the fact that the rebate of the tax is so uncertain. It would not be good business for him to do so. Yet these claims are already piled up and are piling up every day; and if these gentlemen recover in the Court of Claims, then the Treasury of the United States will suffer in the future.

My own personal judgment, as the friend of free alcohol so far as it can be had without trenching upon the revenue, is that we should repeal the existing provision and adopt the amendment for an inquiry, thus closing the door which has been opened into the Treasury; and then, when we frame a tariff bill, let us cover the whole ground and provide sufficient revenue; and as to this particular matter, let us within certain limits do efficiently what the existing law in an unguarded and insufficient manner has attempted to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate under the order has expired, and the Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 61 of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 28, 1894, be and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I have been instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means, which committee was most anxious to do what has seemed to be the best and most proper thing in the premises, to offer an additional amendment to those already suggested by the committee, and pursuant to that authority I offer the additional section which was printed in the RECORD of yesterday, and of which I gave notice during the time I occupied the floor in the discussion of this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That a joint select committee is hereby authorized, to consist of three Senators, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate, and three members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, which select committee shall consider all questions relating to the use of alcohol in the manufactures and arts, free of tax, and to report their conclusions to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1896.

Said joint select committee is authorized to sit by subcommittee or otherwise during the recess or session of Congress at such times and places as they deem advisable; to summon witnesses, administer oaths, print testimony or other information, and to employ such stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary, one-half of the expense to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EVANS. I believe that no member of this House who listened with attention to the very clear, very pertinent, and perfectly correct exposition of this bill from the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] will for one moment doubt the propriety of the action of the Committee on Ways and Means with respect to their recommendation that section 61 should be now repealed.

But in order that those friendly to the use of free alcohol in the manufactures and in the arts may have an opportunity, deliberately and carefully, to investigate the question further, the Committee on Ways and Means has directed me to recommend to the House for its action the second section, which has just been read, in order that the whole question may be carefully investigated by a committee of both Houses, having full power in the premises and having the best opportunities to get at the merits of the case.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. EVANS. Certainly.

Mr. QUIGG. Why will not the committee consent to have this amendment passed as a substitute for the bill, and then wait for the repeal of section 61 until the commission has made its report?

Mr. EVANS. Because of the arguments and statements of fact introduced before the committee and here before the House, demonstrating that section 61 is operating to the injury of the Government of the United States at a rate of not less than $1,000,000 a month. That is the reason that there ought to be an instantaneous repeal. That is the reason there is a demand for the immediate repeal of the section; to stop the spigot, as I characterized it yesterday, and then through the select joint committee to investigate and see if some wise provision, some well-guarded measure, some proper legislation upon the subject, could not be evolved from its labors.

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman will permit me to suggest, if that is the reason why he would not accept the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, would he not accept this: That instead of repealing the law at this time its effects be suspended until, say, the 1st of April, 1897; and the appointment of the commission in the meantime having been made, they can make their report after their investigation, so that the friends of free alcohol by this arrangement would see that they still have something to hold onto, and not give up everything.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, what I have said upon this subject, and what has been said generally by others on the floor of the House, regarding the demerits of and the objections which are raised to section 61, that it is utterly impracticable, that it is unworkable and inapt as a legislative provision, demonstrates the unwisdom of suspending such a provision of statutory law, instead of repealing it outright. It ought to be repealed, not suspended; and then a suitable provision, if necessary, can be enacted after the report of the joint select committee of the two Houses has been received.

Mr. QUIGG. Does not the gentleman from Kentucky think that it is worth while to get a unanimous Republican party on this subject?

Mr. EVANS. I do not think there is any politics in the question. I do not think the effort to inject politics into it has been fair, either to the Ways and Means Committee or to the Republican party, for I say it is not a doctrine of the Republican party that you should subject the Treasury of the United States to expenditures by way of bounties at the rate of $1,000,000 a month without conferring some compensating benefit upon the public which alone would excuse it in any case.

Mr. QUIGG. If the gentleman will permit me, there are some fifty or sixty Republicans here, however, on the floor who differ with him on that point, and think this is a political question. They differ with the gentlemen constituting the Committee on Ways and Means in that respect. Why not, then, have some consideration for their feelings in the matter?

Now, if the gentleman from Kentucky will accept the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts simply to suspend the law temporarily, it will save the money to which the gentleman from Kentucky refers.

Mr. EVANS. That is a fanciful idea, wholly impracticable, and unworthy of a legislative body——

Mr. MOODY. But it will save the money which you say is being wasted.

Mr. EVANS. We ought to repeal the law when we find it producing such disastrous results.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in justice to myself, in a matter that is somewhat personal to myself, I ask time to make a few remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EVANS. I ought to be permitted to take up as much time as was occupied in questions, for reasons personal to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. KEM. I demand the regular order.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] rise?

Mr. BARRETT. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] to oppose the amendment.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, and I rise to know when it will be the proper time to offer it?

The CHAIRMAN. After the discussion on the pending amendment is exhausted and the amendment has been disposed of.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized without that—recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield to no man in the House or in the country in my admiration for the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DINGLEY] in his good judgment and his usefulness in this House on all questions of legislation; but I think he and the Committee of Ways and Means have made a most serious mistake in presenting this bill to the House. In the first place it and the reasoning in their report is a clear justification of the Democratic Administration in refusing to obey the mandate of the Congress of the United States enacted into law and approved by the President of the United States. [Applause.] The Democratic Administration have refused to obey the law, and this bill is a justification of the Administration for so doing. They have refused to obey the law, it seems to me, for no reason in the world other than because of the deficient revenue, which they have themselves produced in the tariff bill which they enacted.

Furthermore, I am amazed beyond measure that a Republican chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means should justify every argument against a protective tariff by saying that the consumers can not get the advantage of the rebate of taxes in the following words:

> Section 61 would immensely benefit a few manufacturers and wholesale dealers in certain lines by returning to them, long after the product was marketed and sold, a sum equal to the taxes on the alcohol used, but that the great consuming public would not, probably in a single instance, owing to the exceptional nature of the case, have a cheaper price made to them.

It appears to be a justification of the whole Democratic position, which we shall hear through the next Congress in every Democratic speech.

Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that it will be found impossible for Congress to pass any law for the use of free alcohol in the arts and manufactures that can by any possibility be as effective as the provision of the law which they seek to repeal. The provision of law which they seek to repeal puts it in the power of the ablest man that can be found in this country, with as many experts as he chooses to employ, to frame a law to-day, and amend the law to-morrow, and amend the law the next day and every day, and change the law until he finds it fits the circumstances, and this is impossible to the whole Congress of the United States.

I submit that the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], gave his whole case away when he said that they would make an effort in the next Congress to frame a law allowing free alcohol, as in the present law. I do not believe that it has come to this, that the Governments of England, of France, of Germany can frame laws which are effective in those countries and that we can not frame a similar law which shall be as safe and effective in this country. And I want again to call the attention of this House to the fact that by no possibility can we frame a law that will not need amendment. By no possibility can we frame a law that will be as effective as to commit the whole lawmaking power (which is done under this section now sought to be repealed) to the Administration, that can amend the law every day and every hour, at any point where it is found ineffective. Therefore, I say that if this House votes to repeal this law it is stultifying itself and condemning the whole doctrine of protection as well as limiting the lawmaking power to a single act, when under the words to be repealed it may be continuous through years, until it is as perfect as expert ingenuity can make it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HILL. I desire to offer an amendment at the proper time, of which amendment I have given notice.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the amendment, or an amendment to the bill?

Mr. HILL. An amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the amendment is in order now.

Mr. SKINNER. I offer an amendment.

Mr. HILL. The amendment which I wish to offer is to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute another provision in the place of the present bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HILL. When that is in order, I wish to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER] for an amendment to the amendment, as the Chair understands.

Mr. SKINNER. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend by adding:
> "That all brandies, high and low wines, alcohol, and distilled spirits of all grades, distilled entirely from fruit, shall hereafter be, and the same are hereby, exempted from the operation of the revenue laws of the United States, and the same is permitted free of tax or Federal supervision."

Mr. DINGLEY. A point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that amendment is not germane to the amendment. It may be germane to the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. SKINNER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SKINNER. Can I offer my amendment as an amendment to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. After the present amendment is disposed of, then it will be proper to offer that, but not as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, for the purpose of answering one suggestion that has been made during this debate. The gentleman from Massachusetts a few moments ago, and others who have preceded him, spoke of the possibility of our administering this law so as to prevent frauds upon the Government. One of the means heretofore suggested, and even relied upon by those who favor free alcohol, was methylation. I was appointed chairman of the subcommittee on internal revenue of the Committee on Ways and Means which framed the Mills bill, and had occasion to make a very thorough investigation of this subject. A very fine chemist was employed by the Treasury Department, and he methylated spirits, ordinary whisky and table spirits. He stated to me he had put about enough poison into one bottle of it to kill a dozen men. He demethylated it, took the poison out, and left the whisky entirely harmless. That process was done over and over. Now, what method is pursued in France, England, and other countries in demethylating I do not know, but demethylation has thus far proved ineffectual by reason of this.

Mr. MORSE. That is right. It kills 60,000 a year.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is not the methylated that kills. That is some that has never been methylated, my friend. I yield to the superior information of my friend from Massachusetts on that subject. It is one that I do not know anything about.

Mr. Chairman, the effect of the law as it now stands is this: Those gentlemen who suppose that the consumer is going to be benefited, and who vote against this bill on the idea that they are benefiting the consumer, are very much deluded. We had a number of manufacturers before the Ways and Means Committee, and they were asked the question whether they had fixed the price of their goods in the open market after they were manufactured with a view to the reduced price of the alcohol that was used in them, or whether they had gone in the open market and sold them as if manufactured from taxed alcohol. A very large majority stated very candidly, much to their credit, that they had been selling on the basis they would have sold on with taxed alcohol. So that if you go on from year to year and enable the manufacturer to get his product free of tax, you at the same time give uncertainty still longer to other people to which the product is sold in open market at the same rate it would bear if a tax were imposed on it instead of free alcohol.

Thus much on those two points. Now one word as to how this became law. The House of Representatives refused to adopt it. The majority of the Finance Committee of the Senate refused to adopt it. The Republican minority of the Finance Committee of the Senate refused to father it; but in that period of difficulty and uncertainty of passing the Wilson bill through the Senate it was offered by an individual member on his own responsibility, and was permitted to go into the bill under the same idea that many other things did, that they could be stripped off in conference. Now, if I may speak of past history, and I think I may without violating proprieties, there was not a single member of the committee of conference, either of Senate or House, who did not favor stripping the bill of this, and so far as I know the minority favored it as well as the majority of this House. If the conference report could have been adopted, that inevitably and certainly would have been stricken out of the bill. It was not in the bill with the consent of that Senate or that House or that Congress, and it will not be permitted to remain in with the consent of this Congress.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, let us understand exactly what this situation is. The existing law imposes a tax on spirits. A provision of law says that if a man can show that he is using those spirits in arts or manufactures he can get back the money that he has paid into the Treasury. The Committee on Ways and Means proposes that that provision of law, permitting this rebate, shall be repealed; and then, in order to show that maybe they do not mean to prevent the use of free alcohol in the manufactures or the arts, they suggest the appointment of a commission to inquire into the subject. Now, if they are sincere in the provision they make, if they would like to see an effective law on this subject, a law permitting free alcohol to be used in the arts and manufactures, and if they want a united party here in this House on that question, all in the world they have to do is to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, which is a perfectly reasonable one, a perfectly easy one, and that is that this law, instead of being absolutely repealed, be simply suspended pending the report of this commission.

I want the attention, if I may have it, of the gentleman from Kentucky and of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. Those gentlemen say that the suggestion of a suspension of the law pending the report of this proposed committee is a fantastic proposition. Why any more fantastic than the repeal of the law? It simply sets a date at which the repeal of the law shall cease to be operative. That is the only effect of the suspension. Now, if the gentleman will not accept the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, does it not show conclusively to every Representative on the floor of this House that the committee does not mean free alcohol in the arts and manufactures, and that somehow or other it does mean to facilitate the operations of the whisky trust? I do not suppose that any gentleman has that deliberate intention, but——

Mr. EVANS. Will you state how it facilitates the operations of the whisky trust?

Mr. QUIGG. I would if I had time.

Mr. EVANS. Take time and do it.

Mr. QUIGG. I would like to. What it does is to make alcohol so expensive that it can not be bought practically for use in the arts and manufactures. Now, the committee can accept the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts if they will. It is a perfectly reasonable one. Only private opinion can stand in the way of their accepting it.

Mr. STEELE. The Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Treasury have both decided that this law is not in effect and is not operative; the gentleman from New York wants us to declare that it is operative and to suspend it. In other words, he wants us to legalize claims which the Treasury Department rejects.

Mr. QUIGG. Not at all. That is not a question which the Treasury Department can dispose of. It is a question for the courts to dispose of, and they will do it.

Mr. STEELE. But you have claimed that the Secretary's decision is final.

Mr. QUIGG. I have claimed nothing respecting the Secretary's decision.

Mr. STEELE. Well, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] did yesterday.

Mr. QUIGG. What I do say is that you can perfectly well suspend this section if you mean anything practical by proposing this committee, instead of merely throwing out the proposition as a sop.

Mr. STEELE. It is no sop.

Mr. QUIGG. Well, if you intend anything by it, you can just as well suspend the law in the meantime. You can suspend it as well as you can repeal it; and I appeal to the members of this House to vote for that proposition.

Mr. KNOX. I do not wish to tire the committee, but I wish to add a few words to what I said before applicable to my amendment. The whole case for the repeal of the law has rested upon the proposition that it is impossible to frame regulations under this provision of law which shall permit the use of free alcohol in the arts and manufactures and at the same time secure the proper collection of the tax levied by the internal-revenue law. Now I say this amendment of the committee in itself directly contradicts that proposition and says, in effect, that it is possible for the committee who are to sit in the recess, and who are to have power to send for persons and papers, to frame rules and regulations which will adequately protect the revenue and at the same time give us free alcohol in the arts and in manufactures.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The committee's proposition gives away their whole case.

Mr. KNOX. It gives away their whole case. Upon another ground also I appeal to this House. Have you more confidence, gentlemen, in a committee of 6 to be appointed by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate than you have in the 17 men who constitute the Committee on Ways and Means of this House? If these abuses have been going on and it is possible, as the Committee on Ways and Means now say, to frame regulations to prevent them, why have not they devoted their time during this session to the framing of such regulations?

Mr. STEELE. They have tried to do so.

Mr. KNOX. Put them in here, then, and let us see them. We have not heard of them before. The proposition here has been that it is impossible to frame such regulations.

Mr. QUIGG. And yet they propose the appointment of a committee to frame such regulations!

Mr. DALZELL. The proposition is that it is impossible to frame regulations under this law.

Mr. KNOX. I agree fully to the gentleman's proposition, but I submit now that you can frame nothing that will be more general or stronger in favor of the Government than this. The Ways and Means Committee have had plenty of time. They have not been overburdened in framing legislation during this session.

Mr. DALZELL. I will say to the gentleman that the Ways and Means Committee has met nearly every day in the week from the beginning of this session.

Mr. KNOX. Very well. I submit that there was time to frame regulations for this purpose, and for my part I have more confidence in the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], in the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], and in the other members of the Committee on Ways and Means than I have in any committee of six that can be appointed by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate. I say let this law stand until the next session. Let the Ways and Means Committee, in the meantime, be thinking over the rules and regulations that they can prescribe, and let us have the benefit of their reflection and judgment at the next session of Congress. They owe us that duty; they owe it to the House. Free alcohol in the arts is a Republican principle, a Republican doctrine. We have it now. And what I beg is that it shall not be thrown out because gentlemen say that regulations can not be framed, while at the same time they ask the House to appoint a committee to frame regulations.

Mr. STEELE. This measure has been suggested to the committee in the interest of the manufacturers and is presented at their request.

Mr. KNOX. We refuse it. It means nothing. It is simply a sugar coating——

Mr. STEELE. The manufacturers request it—nobody else.

Mr. KNOX. What manufacturers request it? No manufacturer that I know anything about has requested it.

Mr. STEELE. Ask Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut who have requested it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] has expired.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Chairman, this discussion illustrates, I may say exemplifies, in parables synonymous with truth how inconsistent, how unjust, inequitable, and un-American is the entire internal-revenue system; a system which the late Senator

Vance (who, I will add by way of parenthesis, was the greatest man ever furnished by North Carolina to public life) was accustomed to designate as infernal and those engaged in its execution as red-legged grasshoppers, a name which will follow them so long as the name and memory of Vance is revered and honored in the good old North State.

The amendment which I introduced, and which was ruled as not germane, reads as follows:

Amend by adding:
"That all brandies, low and high wines, and spirits of all grades and kinds, distilled entirely from fruit, shall hereafter be, and the same are hereby, exempted from the operation of the internal-revenue laws of the United States, and the same is hereby permitted without Federal tax or supervision."

Every principle consistent with natural and individual liberty demands the abolition of the entire revenue system, with its espionage, its inquisitions, its detectives, and its "red-legged grasshoppers" nosing and spying around the homes of the honest grain and fruit growers of the country. Every principle consistent with the American doctrine of protection would exempt the orchards and the vineyards of the country from this tax and thereby stimulate fruit growing and the vineyard industry of the country and give individual liberty to the small fruit growers of the country to do as they desire with their grapes, their apples, their peaches—to sell them in bulk or to distill them into wine or brandy, as they ought to have the right to do, and as they did have the right to do in good old antebellum days.

Mr. Chairman, the House can hardly conceive with what joy and satisfaction the small farmers of the country would receive this simple message of relief, that in the next fruit season, if Providence should bless them with a reasonable harvest, they might have the privilege of converting their surplus fruit into brandy for their own family use or sale, without tax and without Federal espionage and surveillance. It is simply tyranny on the part of the Government to exact this tax and surveillance, and to force the fruit grower to see his fruit rot and waste, because he can not comply with the harsh and tyrannical revenue laws of the country. Mr. Chairman, it does seem that the growers of fruit in this liberty-loving country should be permitted to make useful in every form the harvest with which Providence shall bless them, and to restrain them is abridging their natural rights and ancient privileges.

If this hand of oppression was raised you would see every farmer in the country increase his vineyard and orchard, and in this way the country would prosper in the sense of being the better self-sustaining and happier in the sense of enjoying their natural rights unrestrained by the Federal Government. Mr. Chairman, to the abstract question of the use of free alcohol in the arts and manufactures there would be no division of sentiment. The trouble arises in the practical execution of the law, that is to permit the same without subjecting the internal system to fraud.

The same objection is raised to free fruit alcohol—that is, if fruit were permitted to be distilled free that it would open the door to adulteration and fraud.

This inability of the Secretary of the Treasury to provide a system for these exemptions to the revenue laws is moonshine, and in the interest of Kentucky moonshine at that. It reminds me of the puerile argument of the Secretary of the Treasury against free coinage at 16 to 1—that the mints are not sufficient, when every child knows the Government can easily build more mints; and likewise I am convinced that the Secretary of the Treasury could provide a plan to protect the Government if he was interested and willing to do so.

It illustrates, however, that the entire internal-revenue system is radically wrong in principle. It can only be justified by the expediency of raising revenue, and on this line permit me to suggest to the House it is a failure—both in the net revenue raised and in its demoralizing methods. We commence at the wrong end. The person to bear the tax is the consumer—as a beverage. We ought to have the free manufacture of alcohol of all grades and all kinds. Then you would have free alcohol for the arts and manufactures, and free fruit brandy without embarrassment, and without fraud or temptation to fraud.

Let the Government levy its tax, raise its revenue from the personal consumer of all grades of alcohol, and not restrain manufacturers with Federal tax or interference. This can be done in either of two ways: by leaving to the States to collect through their own machinery such taxes, or by federalizing the South Carolina plan in a practical manner. This is such a control of the sale for beverage as will tend to decrease the evils of the whisky traffic and afford sufficient revenue to meet the deficiency in the Treasury, and with a smaller and less objectionable Federal army than is employed in the internal-revenue system, which is now primarily in the interest of the Kentucky whisky trust, and secondarily for revenue, and to the distaste and condemnation of all people who are familiar with its methods, plans, and results.

Mr. Chairman, give the country free manufacture of alcohol of all kinds and grades, then you will have restored to the people their natural rights, to do with their own as they please. Then, in the interest of revenue, yea, in the interest of humanity, assume the control of the sale. In this manner you can double the revenue raised from this source and at the same time ameliorate the conditions of consumers and protect the homes of the land against an abuse of its use.

The evil of the traffic is seen, felt, and heard from as it passes over the counter into the human system, destroying alike the manhood, the happiness, and prosperity of the people. At this point, where it becomes the fruitful source of pauperization, crime, insanity, disease, and death, is where the Government should levy and collect its revenues, both in the interest of an increased revenue and the good morals, health, and happiness of the human family.

My sympathy in this matter is with the fruit and grain grower; these are the ones whose conditions I would ameliorate, and these are the industries that I would encourage and stimulate, alike with all industries of our country, so as to bring equal prosperity and the exercise of equal rights.

I want to restore to the plain people their natural right to convert that product which they produce by their honest toil, under the favor of heaven, as they may please, into meal or hominy, wine, whisky, or brandy, without interference, surveillance, or tax from the Federal Government. If the public revenues require the tax, let it be applied in the control of the sale for a beverage.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The entire debate on the pending amendments is exhausted.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to strike out the last three words. Let us have debate on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted; and there are pending two formal amendments which must be disposed of. If there be no objection, the informal amendments of the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Massachusetts will be considered as withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS. There are three amendments proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means. The first is to change the date ascribed to the Wilson bill from the 25th to the 28th of August.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, strike out "25th" and insert "28th."

The CHAIRMAN. On that amendment the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means of the Fifty-first Congress I entered upon the deliberation, in the formation of the bill reported and passed in that Congress, with a firm conviction that we ought to have free alcohol for use in manufactures and the arts in this country. I was as firmly convinced of that then as my friend from Connecticut is to-day; and on an examination of the subject I was as firmly convinced that it was a very easy thing to formulate just as he seems to think to-day it is a very easy thing to do. We examined the matter before the Committee on Ways and Means for a number of weeks and were unable absolutely to hit on any plan by which we could accomplish the result, as we thought, practically and without danger of serious frauds on the revenues of the Government.

I have given a great deal of thought and consideration to the subject since that time. When the Wilson bill was formulated in 1894 the matter was considered and this clause went in on the suggestion of a Senator from Massachusetts who, in reply to queries, said that he did not think the clause he offered was practical or that it could be enforced, but he offered it in order that the subject might go into conference, and see whether the conferees could not get something out of it. And it was put on in the Senate on that suggestion in the hope that something might grow out of the conference and some practical suggestion made by the conferees on the part of the two Houses to carry it into effect. But we all know how the Senate amendments were agreed to here in the House without any consideration whatever, because the conference failed.

Now, that section is an utterly impracticable measure. It can not be enforced. Of all the laws that have been drawn or proposed on the subject of free alcohol, none are so well calculated to defeat the very object it claims to have in view as this section 61, and there is no provision of law so difficult of enforcement. It is in fact utterly incapable of enforcement as it stands, and hence there has grown up throughout the country a demand for the repeal of this section 61 of the law of 1894.

I have seen no suggestion yet where there was safety for the revenues of the Government, save in the single proposition that every factory using alcohol for the purpose of manufacture should become a bonded warehouse with all the restrictions and all the regulations and all the expenses that attend every distillery or bonded warehouse in the United States. The cost of such a system would be enormous—a million or more of dollars annually, and the Ways and Means Committee did not think that they ought to try to saddle this cost on the Government of the United States or upon the manufacturers who use alcohol and charge them with the expense unless it is the last resort in legislation upon the subject, because if we charge it on the factories it necessarily drives out the small men from the business. They can not come in and manufacture at the enormous expense that would attend the bonded manufacturer or the distiller under the law. It would involve an entire suspension of the smaller establishments. They might better pay the tax on the alcohol, which would drive them out of business.

For my own part, I hope that some way may yet be devised to meet the difficulties that exist, because such laws have been in force in England, in France, in the Netherlands, and in other countries with dense populations for some time. In countries where hundreds of their citizens surround the various factories and watch them, it is so easy, under such circumstances, to watch and detect fraud if any is committed. But we could not get along here in that manner. We can not even get along in the distilling of whisky, with all the care that is taken, without great fraud in the moonshining districts, away from population. We have not yet devised a plan that enables us to collect all the revenue on distilled whisky for that very reason.

I hope, therefore, that some provision will be made with reference to this very question that will be more satisfactory in the future. I want to see every legitimate manufacturer who uses alcohol permitted to get it free from all taxation. In saying that, however, I desire to say also that I have no sympathy with those people who peddle medicinal compounds and manufactured medicines throughout the country, because I believe as a rule that 95 per cent of them are used strictly for beverages by the people of the United States, as whisky is handed over the bar in a glass in the various saloons in our great cities. And I want to see, as long as we have the internal-revenue system in force, all of these stuffs that are used as beverages compelled to pay this tax. But I shall welcome any legitimate plan that will enable the manufacturer, using alcohol in his manufacturing processes, to get it free of cost as far as taxation is concerned, and I hope such a plan can be devised, or scheme formulated, to protect the revenues, while at the same time it allows alcohol free in the manufactures and arts.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that this is one of the fragments of the Wilson bill brought into this Congress for repeal. I am glad to know that we have at last started along on that line—a line bearing in the right direction. I regret, however, that we can not bring in the entire bill and repeal it all at one fell swoop.

Now, I want to say to my distinguished friends who belong to one of the great political parties who are advocating the free and unlimited coinage of silver that they are going to the Chicago convention, many of them, to nominate a candidate for the Presidency who shall be pledged to the free and unlimited coinage of silver. [Applause.] But, Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen of the Democratic party, who maintain for a moment that they can, in that convention, nominate such a man, are reckoning without their host.

When you meet in Chicago you will find that the Paul of free silver may plant and the Apollos of bimetallism may water, but the gold-standard god of Democracy alone can give the increase, and that god of Democracy to-day is Grover Cleveland, now President of the United States. You will find that your convention will be controlled and absolutely dominated by the Clevelands, the Harritys, the Gormans, the Carlisles, and the Whitneys of the country, and you free-silver men who represent the ginseng and hoop-pole districts of the country, when you go to Chicago as delegates, will belong to the great family known as the family of Not-in-it.

Go back into the history of Democracy since the war, and you will see that every man you have nominated has been an Eastern man—every one from the State of New York; and in 1896 you will not make a new precedent.

In 1864 you nominated McClellan from New York, and he went down in defeat. In 1868 you nominated Seymour, and he went down in defeat; and Grant, the American patriot, statesman, and greatest soldier the modern world has known, was triumphantly elected to the Presidency. [Applause.] In 1872 no Democrat in your party was found worthy of a nomination, and knowing that defeat hopelessly confronted the Democracy, you took up that grand old apostle of Republicanism, Horace Greeley, and in his old age you immolated and murdered him on the altar of a decaying and defunct Democracy. In 1876 you made Tilden of New York your nominee and he went down in defeat by the overwhelming, fairly cast, and honestly counted vote of the country. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

In 1880 you took up the superb Hancock, also of New York, and he went down in defeat; and the immortal Garfield was elected to the Presidency. In 1884 you took up Cleveland, another New York candidate, and he was elected by the vote of New York, which more recent developments show to have been fraudulent. In 1888 you again nominated Cleveland, and he went down in defeat; and the great Indianian, Benjamin Harrison, took hold of the helm of the ship of state and guided her in safe channels for four years, and gave the people an Administration which courted and received the respect and admiration of every loyal American citizen.

In 1892 the Democracy again nominated Cleveland and he was declared elected, and in July, 1896, when the contending hosts of Democracy meet in national convention in Chicago, amidst strife and turmoil, you will find that Eastern Democrats will again control the convention and your candidate will be chosen from a State lying east of the Alleghanies, and he will be a single gold standard man, leaving the Western free-silver Democracy floundering in a fathomless sea without compass or rudder. [Applause on the Republican side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I was very much impressed yesterday by a suggestion made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], that some methylating process had been adopted in England by which the Government could give free alcohol. The question was asked then why we should not, instead of repealing this act, pass an amendment that would enable this country to do the same thing. Now, I want light upon that question, and I want my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE], if he can, to give the House the information why it is not possible for us to adopt the same methods that have been adopted in England, and which we are assured have been successful there? I yield to the gentleman from New York to answer, and let it be taken out of my time.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that the process of methylation consists of mingling about 10 per cent of wood alcohol with 90 per cent of grain alcohol, which renders the mixture poisonous, and of course while it is in that form it can not be used as a beverage. It would be deadly. That is the method which is used in England. But it is found that it is the easiest thing in the world to separate the wood alcohol from the grain alcohol. The specific gravity is not the same, even at normal temperature, and by slightly raising the temperature, not high enough for the purpose of distillation, the wood alcohol can be separated from the grain alcohol.

Mr. LACEY. How do they get over that difficulty in England?

Mr. PAYNE. They are living so compactly together, there are so many noses to smell the operation, all over the Kingdom, that it would be discovered. Because of the sparsely settled character of many parts of this country we have a great deal more danger of avoidance of the internal-revenue laws by illicit distillers. It is a notorious matter that all over the country there are many illicit stills which are almost impossible of detection, and that we can not regulate the collection of this revenue upon the products of distilleries without the strictest surveillance on the part of the Government, necessitating a large number of officers and a large expense. We should have to guard in the same way to protect against the frauds upon the revenue by the demethylating of methylated alcohol.

Mr. LACEY. Is the methylating of alcohol the only method used in England to protect the Government?

Mr. PAYNE. I think that is the only method, so far as I am informed, which is used in England. They have some strict rules and regulations, but that is the only method of rendering the alcohol unfit for use as a beverage.

Mr. LACEY. I believe there are only five distilleries in England?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know. The number is small.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York whether he knows if there has ever been any successful demethylation of methylated spirits in what may be called commercial quantities? It has been done chemically at the Treasury Department, but is it not a fact that in England it is found impracticable and too expensive to demethylate the methylated spirits which are used in manufactures?

Mr. PAYNE. My information is that it can be done at a very slight expense.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. My information is just the contrary.

Mr. QUIGG. That is why we want this commission.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman's view of the case may prove to be correct. If we appoint this commission, they may investigate that subject, and if his information proves to be correct I shall be with him.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I should not have further troubled the committee had it not been that some expressions fell from the lips of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] yesterday and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] which insinuatingly connected me and Kentucky and my labors in this behalf with the so-called whisky trust or with some whisky ring. That was alike unkind and unjust, not otherwise to characterize it. Furthermore, I will venture to say that neither gentleman knows what the whisky trust is.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman pardon me? Does the gentleman from Kentucky say I made that statement yesterday?

Mr. EVANS. It is in your speech, I think.

Mr. HILL. All of my remarks are printed in the RECORD, and the gentleman is entirely mistaken in stating that I made such a remark.

Mr. EVANS. I may have confounded it with the remark of some one else. I have referred to it, however, without any feeling with respect to either gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, this question was as new to me as to any member of this body until it fell to my laborious duty as chairman of the subcommittee on internal revenue of the Ways and Means Committee to investigate the subject as a part of my work as such chairman. I never heard of free alcohol in the arts under section 61, so far as I know, until the bill, not a Kentucky bill, but a bill introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE], came to the subcommittee for investigation. Now, I assert that the whisky trust of all the manufacturers of distilled spirits is the one which is particularly interested in the continuance of section 61. The whisky trust, it may surprise gentlemen to know, makes no whisky, but manufactures alcohol alone, and gentlemen ought to understand that the whisky trust is the American Spirits Manufacturing Company, a corporation which has distilleries in several parts of the country, mostly in Illinois, but none in Kentucky so far as I know. Let me say, by the way of relief to the inflamed gentlemen, that the Kentucky distillers, so far as I know, have not the slightest interest in this question, any more than any other citizen has in stopping a leak in the Treasury.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I understand the gentleman to say that so far as he knew the distillers of the country had no interest in this matter?

Mr. EVANS. I say the distillers of Kentucky.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Oh!

Mr. EVANS. So far as I know they have not. I am not here to speak for the distillers of Kentucky, and I do not know whether they have or not, but in what I have done with reference to this bill I am only discharging the duties devolved on me by reason of committee assignment and not otherwise, and I know of no distillers being specially interested in this bill except the manufacturers of alcohol, and their influence is in opposition to this bill. The maker of whisky has nothing to do with the matter.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Let me ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. EVANS. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Has the gentleman forgotten that in the hearings before his subcommittee it was testified by the distillers that every distiller in this country was interested in this legislation?

Mr. EVANS. One Pennsylvania distiller, from Pittsburg, did so, volunteering a few words; and he was the only one, and whether he spoke as one having full knowledge or not I know not.

Mr. COLSON. Did he bring any Monongahela rye with him?

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I only rose for the purpose of making this brief personal statement, and to move that debate on the bill and all amendments in the committee be closed at 3 o'clock.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have sent up an amendment which is to be offered after the committee amendments. Does the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky affect debate on my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It will affect debate upon amendments. It will not affect the offering of amendments. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. QUIGG. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the adoption of this motion prevent the introduction of other amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not prevent the introduction of other amendments.

Mr. MOODY. Another parliamentary inquiry. Will the adoption of this motion shut out debate on any amendment which may hereafter be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. It would.

Mr. EVANS. But amendments can be offered.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] was assured that there would be an opportunity given him to offer an amendment and to make a few statements respecting the same; and in view of that fact, I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to make his motion to limit all debate on the section and pending amendments to 3 o'clock. That will give a vote on the pending amendments, and we can then take up other amendments.

Mr. EVANS. I accept that modification.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the adoption of the vote preclude the offering of amendments to the bill or a motion to report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. EVANS, and it was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on adoption of the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "twenty-fifth," in line 5, and insert in lieu thereof the words "twenty-eighth."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the title of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that an amendment to the title of the bill should not be submitted until the body of the bill has been perfected.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment can not be agreed to, as in the House, but the Chair assumes that a recommendation of the amendment can be made by the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That a joint select committee is hereby authorized, to consist of three Senators, to be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, and three members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, which select committee shall consider all questions relating to the use of alcohol in the manufactures and arts, free of tax, and to report their conclusions to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1896.

Said joint select committee is authorized to sit by subcommittee or otherwise during the recess or session of Congress at such times and places as they deem advisable; to summon witnesses, administer oaths, print testimony or other information, and to employ such stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary, one-half of the expense to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

The question being taken, the Chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

A division being called for, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 112, noes 9.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting in line 3, after the word "that," the words "the effect and operation of"; and in line 7 by striking out the word "repealed" and inserting "suspended until July 1, 1897"; so that if the amendments be adopted the bill will read:

That the effect and operation of section 61 of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 28, 1894, be, and the same is hereby, suspended until July 1, 1897.

Mr. Chairman, it is not strange, after the Ways and Means Committee have deliberated throughout all this session, and, having found one single section in the Wilson-Gorman bill which conforms to Republican doctrine, have brought in here a measure for the purpose of repealing that section, that there should be some difference of opinion upon the Republican side of the House. The committee, fearing that that pill, not sugar coated, can not go through this Committee of the Whole and the House of Representatives, have now offered an amendment which has just been adopted—I will not call it a bunco amendment, but the effect of it is that. It has the effect of deluding the House with false hopes. It provides that a commission shall report upon this subject on the 1st day of December, 1896.

In what condition will the House find itself at that time? All reference to free alcohol will have been stricken out of the statute book. There will be a Democratic Senate and a Democratic President, and it will be utterly impossible to enact any measure which will lessen the receipts from internal revenue and give the opportunity to seek receipts at the custom-house. Therefore, if this repeal is now made by the House, no measure such as the appointment of a commission will accomplish anything during the remaining session of this Congress. Further than that, the result depends greatly upon the men who may be appointed upon the commission. If a majority of them believe, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] believes, that revenue ought to be raised by internal taxation and not at the custom-house, they will not be able to find any method of regulation which will provide for free alcohol any more than the present Secretary of the Treasury has been able to find such a method of regulation.

If, on the other hand, they consist of friends of free alcohol they may bring in some measure. It depends somewhat, though, on what kind of friends they are. The distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has declared that he is a friend of free alcohol. I wish he had devoted his great talents and learning to the discovery of a proper system of regulations to give effect to the provision for free alcohol instead of bringing in this bill to repeal the law. Free alcohol might well say to the distinguished gentleman from Maine who calls himself its friend, "It was all very well to dissemble your love, but why did you kick me downstairs." [Laughter.] For that is precisely what is done by the passage of this bill. Now, the amendment which I offer proposes to suspend the operation of the law until the 1st of July, 1897, until the commission that is to be appointed can reasonably consider the subject and make its report to this House. When that report is made at the next session of this Congress, we may find that we can get cooperation from the President and the Secretary of the Treasury if they think they can exchange a bad law for the good law which will be suggested by that commission; but if they find that, in accordance with Democratic principles, the whole theory of free alcohol is wiped from the statute book, we can get no such cooperation and we shall be powerless. As was pointed out by the gentleman from New York, if all that is aimed at is the elimination of the vicious element contained in the law, if the principle of free alcohol in the arts is not aimed at, then the House will adopt the amendment which is now before it. It is an amendment hastily drawn. I should have preferred to have had the same object brought about by a more carefully framed measure, but if the words in my amendment do not accomplish the purpose, words can be found that will accomplish it.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I think it can be truthfully said that at least every member of the Republican end of the Committee on Ways and Means is in favor of free alcohol under some well-regulated and practicable law. But, not to use any more emphatic terms, it seems to me that the remarks made by numerous gentlemen on the floor with respect to the conduct of the Ways and Means Committee have been exceedingly unfair. That committee gave to this subject, as it gave to every subject that has been brought before it at this session, the most earnest and serious consideration. The result of that consideration was the conclusion that the law on the statute book now in question was futile to bring about the object that was intended by its framers. The Committee on Ways and Means did not rely simply upon the testimony presented before them, but they considered the opinion of the last Republican Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the opinion of the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the opinion of the last Republican Secretary of the Treasury, and the opinion of the present Secretary of the Treasury. And gentlemen who are fair will recognize at once that there is no argument in the assertion that this is declared an impracticable provision by a Democratic Administration merely because it does not wish to carry out the law. The opinions of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to matters falling within their respective spheres are entitled to consideration; and that consideration they have had.

Coming into this House with the opinion that this act ought to be repealed, the Committee on Ways and Means made a concession to the opponents of the measure. It is embodied in this second section. And now gentlemen get up on the floor and in such language as that used by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] who has just sat down accuse us of submitting to the House a "bunco" measure.

Mr. MOODY. Oh, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman understood me as reflecting upon the motives of the committee, I beg to disclaim any such suggestion.

Mr. DALZELL. That is just exactly what the gentleman said.

Mr. MOODY. Then I did not mean it. I withdraw it. I intended no such suggestion.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I think the gentleman does himself credit in withdrawing it.

Mr. MOODY. I should regret exceedingly to be so understood.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, the question before the House is not whether or not we shall have free alcohol. The question before the House is whether the law on the statute book gives us free alcohol, whether it accomplishes the purpose for which it was intended. If it does not accomplish the purpose for which it was intended, then it ought to be stricken from the statute book, unless it accomplishes some other good purpose. Now, what good purpose does it accomplish, or rather what evil purpose does it accomplish? It does not give to the manufacturer free alcohol. It does not give to the consumer free alcohol. What does it do? It piles up day by day, month after month, so long as it remains upon the statute book, claims upon the Government of the United States, claims that the next Republican Administration (for we all believe, even our friends on the other side, that it will be a Republican Administration)—to the extent of millions of dollars that the Republican Administration will be called upon to pay.

Gentlemen must bear in mind that by a decision of the Supreme Court as long ago as 6 Cranch—every lawyer will remember the case of Fletcher vs. Beck—all these claims stand upon a basis that is impossible to be affected by legislation. And it matters not what this House may do, whether it repeal this law or not, those claims will exist as claims against the Government until they shall have been finally passed upon by the proper tribunal. If by the common-law principle that were not so, I call the attention of the committee to chapter 2 of the Revised Statutes, section 13:

> The repeal of any statute shall not have the effect to release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such statute, unless the repealing act shall so expressly provide, and such statute shall be treated as still remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of such penalty, forfeiture, or liability.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Does that provision apply in any other cases of repeal than repeals made by the Revised Statutes?

Mr. DALZELL. I think it does.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I think it does not.

Mr. DALZELL. But whether it does or not, let it be conceded that it does not——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has expired.

Mr. EVANS. I move that debate on this bill and all amendments be now closed. I believe the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] does not wish to occupy any further time.

Mr. HILL. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I do.

Mr. EVANS. I understood the gentleman otherwise.

Mr. HILL. I said that I wanted to offer an amendment and explain it.

Mr. PARKER. I desire also to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] withdraw his motion?

Mr. EVANS. I will move that debate be closed in five minutes, so that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] may have an opportunity to offer his amendment and explain it.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have sent to the desk an amendment which I propose to offer, providing a saving clause drawn in accordance with the views of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. I trust the gentleman will not do that. There is no use of our legislating as to whether those claims are good or bad. Let the courts pass on them when they come up.

Mr. EVANS. I modify my motion and move that debate on the bill and all amendments be closed in ten minutes from this time.

Mr. PARKER. If this motion be adopted, shall I be permitted to offer an amendment?

Mr. DINGLEY. Amendments will be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. This motion will not prevent the offering of amendments.

The motion of Mr. EVANS was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, it was my intention, and I gave notice to that effect on yesterday, that at the close of the general debate, or when the opportunity offered, I would present the committee amendment as a substitute for the whole proposition reported from the Committee on Ways and Means. My purpose was this: The moment this law is repealed the manufacturers in my district at least, and I presume the other manufacturers throughout the country generally, believe that instantly the price of the only substitute for grain alcohol entering into the arts and manufactures will be largely advanced and that they will be placed at the mercy of a trust which controls the output in this country of the product. They believe that honestly, and I believe that they are right, from the very fact that the price of alcohol has been practically, during the last two and a half years, controlled by the Congress of the United States as the result of its legislation, and for that reason I was opposed and am now to the repeal of that provision of the law.

I believe the same result may be practically gained, and perhaps with better results to the United States, if the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] were adopted and put in force, and I give notice now that I shall not offer the substitute I had intended to offer, and which I have suggested, but will vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I ask the members of this House to at least give the protection of a possible future competition, if they will not grant the protection of present competition, to the manufacturers who are compelled, if they are to continue business, to use wood alcohol at any price ranging from 90 cents to $2.30 a gallon, the price of grain alcohol with the tax paid, and it seems to me that if the country is not to suffer, as I believe it will not suffer by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts and a suspension for a short time of the present law, that the manufacturing industries are at least entitled to that protection.

I had another reason for opposing this matter. It seems to me to be utterly impossible as the Government is now constituted, and it is liable to be so constituted for the next two years, to enact into law the regulations the commission would formulate. That has been already touched upon, and I simply ask at this time that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts may be passed, so that the possible future competition may prevent the advance of this product among our manufacturers who are compelled to use it in large quantities, for if they are forced to pay this high price for it it is a very serious drawback to this business.

I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be adopted.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MOODY, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 51, noes 88.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the last word, "repealed."
Insert in lieu thereof, "amended by adding thereto the following words:
"'And the Secretary of the Treasury may retain not to exceed 10 per cent of such rebate to form a fund for the payment of the expenses of such regulations and of such inspectors as may be needful thereunder, which inspectors the said Secretary is hereby authorized to employ from time to time.'"

Mr. PARKER. I desire simply to state the effect of the amendment in a single word.

Mr. EVANS. I believe the debate has been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. There are five minutes yet of the time, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PARKER. I shall not want but a very few moments. I do not propose to occupy five minutes.

The proposition is now that the section shall be repealed. I say no. The Secretary of the Treasury says it can not be enforced as it is now, because he has no money to employ inspectors in the various factories and manufacturing establishments throughout the country. I say do not repeal the section, but amend it by allowing the Secretary of the Treasury to retain 10 per cent of all of the rebates collected to form a fund out of which he may employ inspectors and see that the law is enforced, as it was his duty all of the time to do.

I therefore say try that suggestion. Give him the means to try it. He says he lacks the money to carry the section into effect. Now, this proposes to give it to him.

In the case of my constituents they pay $48,000 a year. Ten per cent of that, or $4,800, would pay for the inspection, I think, and see that they do not defraud the Government. That is all.

I ask a vote on the amendment.

The question being taken, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 80.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EVANS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Chairman, the time in which to offer amendments has not expired.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SKINNER. I rise for the purpose of asking for the reading of the amendment which was ruled not germane to the original amendment.

Mr. EVANS. The time for amendment has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has not been offered as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. SKINNER. I now offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman that the time within which debate was allowed has expired, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] has moved that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

Mr. BARRETT. I move to amend by recommending that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] that the committee recommend the striking out of the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARRETT) there were—ayes 54, noes 92.

Accordingly, the motion was lost.

The motion of Mr. EVANS was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3282) to repeal section 61 of an act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which became a law August 28, 1894, and had directed him to report the same to the House with amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. EVANS. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARRETT. I rose in my place desiring to make a motion which is in order, and which I now desire to submit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his proposition.

Mr. BARRETT. It is a motion to recommit with instructions.

The SPEAKER. That will be in order after the engrossment and third reading is ordered.

Mr. BARRETT. I understand that motion is in order pending the previous question on the passage of the bill. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] expressly moved the previous question up to and including the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is the proposition which he made.

Mr. BARRETT. And pending that motion I rose to offer a motion to recommit, which I think is in order.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On May 25, 1896:

An act (H. R. 4179) to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes relative to guarantees on proposals for naval supplies;

An act (H. R. 4324) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver one condemned cannon to the city of Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill., and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 270) changing the time of holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the northern district of California;

An act (H. R. 5217) making one year's residence in a Territory a prerequisite to obtaining a divorce there;

An act (H. R. 5379) making it unlawful to shoot at or into any railway locomotive or car, or at any person thereon, or to throw any rock or other missile at or into any locomotive or car in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 4255) to provide for settlement of titles and disposition of public lands in the Arredondo grant, in Columbia County, Fla.; and

An act (H. R. 8260) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at Port Huron, on the coast of Lake Huron, Michigan.

NOTE.—The following bills were presented to the President May 13, 1896, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which they originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, have become laws without his approval:

An act (H. R. 3606) granting a pension to French W. Thornhill; and

An act (H. R. 1020) granting an increase of pension to Gilman Williams.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8293) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for prior years, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2928) to extend the routes of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and of the Belt Railway Company of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. PROCTOR as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 710) granting a pension to Ada J. Schwatka, widow of the late Lieut. Frederick Schwatka; and

A bill (S. 804) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor Carroll Poe.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1659) to amend the laws of the District of Columbia as to married women, to make parents the natural guardians of their minor children, and for other purposes.

ALCOHOL IN THE ARTS.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair is not mistaken, the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] is in order after the bill has been ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will allow me, the rule says:

It (the motion to recommit) shall be in order pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage.

The SPEAKER. That is, pending the motion on the passage. That refers to a separate proposition where the previous question is moved on the passage, as it may be. The Chair supposes that the practical principle involved is this: After the House has proceeded to amendment of the bill, and the bill has reached its final position, ready to be engrossed, or ordered to be engrossed, then, if the House is dissatisfied with it, it may move to commit, or recommit, as the phraseology ordinarily is. That is to enable the House to correct its action in case the bill when finished is not satisfactory.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I understand that it is the intention of the Chair to allow me at some time to offer this motion, but I wish to submit this proposition: We will suppose for a moment that I wish to recommit this bill, being a friend of the bill. I understand the rule provides that that shall be allowable. We will suppose that the present position of the Chair is correct, and then we will suppose that the House, on the question of ordering the bill to be engrossed, should vote in the negative. That would shut out my motion to recommit, which this rule intends shall have precedence over any final action of the House, whether on the motion to engross or on the motion to the final passage. I submit that the reading of this rule is perfectly clear, that it has reference to the time pending the motion for the previous question as well as pending the motion on the passage of the bill after the previous question has been ordered. I think the illustration that I have offered covers the point, because it shows how it is possible, under the suggestion made by the Chair, for this House, without having an opportunity to vote on the motion to recommit, to kill this bill, when it is intended by this rule and the practice of the House that pending the final disposition of the bill it shall be in order to move its recommittal.

Further, the motion to refer (which is analogous to committal or recommittal) is, by the rule of the House, made to take precedence of the motion to amend. In fact, it is the general parliamentary rule that practically all subsidiary motions rank ahead of that to amend.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will for a moment consider the general course of business, the Chair thinks he will see reason to change his opinion. Until the previous question is ordered, a motion to recommit is in order, and when the previous question is ordered, it is because the House orders a vote to be taken.

The House would not be likely to order a vote to be taken and still reserve or leave the right to commit until some further action had taken place. That further action is to vote on the amendments and to engrossment. After that the rules provide that the House, if dissatisfied with the action thus taken, may recommit the bill. First, there is an opportunity of committal prior to the motion for the previous question. If the previous question is ordered, it is ordered on the main question and the amendments.

Mr. BARRETT. The Chair has misunderstood my contention. My contention was that while the motion for the previous question on the passage of the bill was pending I rose in my place and asked to be recognized to make a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Precisely. But this is a motion for the previous question on the engrossment of the bill, on the amendments, and on the passage, not what was referred to in what the gentleman has quoted, namely, a motion for the previous question on the passage of the bill. Pending that, a proposition can be made such as the gentleman speaks of.

Mr. BARRETT. Then I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the Chair holds that no motion has been made for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the motion has been made for the passage of the bill, but it is a motion for the previous question on a series of motions such as the rules authorize.

Mr. BARRETT. And the Chair holds that a motion to recommit is not in order until the question comes on the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The motion is in order, but the vote is taken on it after the bill is engrossed.

Mr. BARRETT. Then I desire to give notice that at the proper time I shall move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. When presented it will be pending.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, pending the disposition of this bill, I would like to call up the general deficiency bill, and move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask a conference.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. One word with my colleague. There are two or three amendments offered by the Senate on which I would like to ask an expression of the House. Would the gentleman be willing to let a vote be taken on those amendments before the conferees are appointed or after they are appointed?

Mr. CANNON. If it is a matter of real difference.

Mr. BENNETT. Is this a report of a committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. It is not a report of a committee of conference.

Mr. BENNETT. Then it is not privileged.

Mr. CANNON. I suppose it is not privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not propose it, unless it is agreeable to my colleague.

Mr. CANNON. It is not at this time. I think it can be reached better further along. I want the bill to get into conference, and I ask to make the motion. I think it will take but a few minutes to dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the motion can be entertained.

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM].

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Nebraska is now stopping the steamboat.

ALCOHOL IN THE ARTS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. COLSON. The yeas and nays!

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand that a gentleman demanded the yeas and nays?

Mr. BARRETT. A call was made for the yeas and nays by a gentleman in the rear of the House.

Mr. COLSON. I do not wish the yeas and nays on the engrossment and third reading.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report to this House on or before January 1, 1897, such amendments to the present law as will provide for the enforcement of the present laws relating to the use of alcohol in the manufactures and arts free of tax.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit with instructions.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BARRETT. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 129.

Mr. BARRETT. I ask for the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Twenty-seven gentlemen have risen in support of the demand—not a sufficient number; and the yeas and nays are refused. [Applause.] The noes have it, and the motion to recommit is disagreed to. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PITNEY. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 166, nays 69, not voting 120; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. MCCLEARY. If he were present, I would vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I am paired on this question with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. MCCREARY. Were he present, he would vote "yea" and I would vote "nay."

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. HEMENWAY, is detained from the House by sickness, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Speaker, I voted, but having ascertained that I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. GRISWOLD, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SPERRY, has been called home on account of sickness. If present, he would vote "nay."

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. COUSINS with Mr. MEYER.

For this day:

Mr. HITT with Mr. SPARKMAN.

Mr. HICKS with Mr. PATTERSON.

Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. JONES.

Mr. PICKLER with Mr. DOWNING.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota.

Mr. TRACEY with Mr. BAILEY.

On this question:

Mr. MORSE with Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky.

Mr. KIEFER with Mr. HARRIS.

Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. LOUD.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the general deficiency bill, and to nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference.

Mr. MAHON. I desire to move to concur in some of the amendments.

Mr. CANNON. I would not do that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. There is so much confusion that we can not hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] moves that the bill be taken from the table, and that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. MAHON. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House concur in the amendment on page 85 of the bill, known as section 4, a new section.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I again appeal to the gentleman, and state that there are over one hundred pages of Senate amendments. The gentleman need have no fear that the amendment he refers to will be settled in a conference report (so far as the conferees can settle it) until matters of disagreement shall have been reported back to the House. By that time the bill will be printed and the amendments numbered. When the report comes back with the bill printed and the amendments numbered, the whole matter can be taken up and discussed intelligently, and that method will certainly facilitate the business of the House.

Mr. MAHON. This is a Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that.

Mr. MAHON. Suppose the Senate conferees should agree to recede from that amendment, then it would never come back to the House.

Mr. CANNON. But you could vote down the conference report. Besides, the gentleman and I are both familiar enough with the Senate to know that it never recedes on an amendment—at least never on the first conference.

Mr. MAHON. Some things are very uncertain around this territory. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that these amendments should receive consideration in Committee of the Whole. Unless gentlemen will agree to give us a separate vote on the amendment which provides for claims under the Bowman Act, I must insist upon the point.

Mr. DOCKERY. The point of order comes too late.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No. I insist, Mr. Speaker, that I have been trying to hear what gentlemen were saying and could not hear.

The SPEAKER. The Chair put the proposition to the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There has been no matter submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submitted it to the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There has been no vote submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] proposed that the House should nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to a conference. The Chair certainly put that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Chair is correct in his statement of the question, but there has been no matter submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. And there has been debate since that time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Purely on the question of order.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I understood the motion to be to take the bill from the table, which motion has not been adopted. Until that has been adopted and the matter is before the House, the gentleman from Tennessee has the right to raise any relevant point of order.

Mr. CANNON. A new parliamentarian has arrived! [Laughter.]

Mr. BARRETT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I suppose I have the same rights on this floor as even a gentleman who has been here as long as the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to my friend from Tennessee that debate has been going on.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There has been no debate on the motion. I raised the question at once and asked for order.

Mr. WASHINGTON. There has been no debate in any sense of the word.

Mr. CANNON. The motion was stated by the Chair, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], in pursuance of his right, moved that the House concur in a certain numbered amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is the fact.

Mr. BARRETT. I raise the question whether the motion to concur or nonconcur is in order, at any rate until after the motion to take from the table has been passed upon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. DOCKERY. I believe an agreement can be very readily reached.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to nonconcur in the amendments——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, that can only be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] moves to concur in a specified amendment, which is his right.

Mr. MAHON. I should like to say a few words in explanation and support of my motion.

Mr. CANNON. What is the amendment? Let it be read.

Mr. MAHON. It might take two or three hours to read it. I can explain it.

Mr. CANNON. I will again ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he proposes to insist on his motion at this time?

Mr. MAHON. I do propose to insist for this reason: This is a Senate amendment, in which a great many members of this House are interested. If in conference the House conferees succeed in getting the Senate conferees to recede from the amendment of the Senate, we shall never see it again in this House. We have now an opportunity to vote on a question that interests a great many of us.

Mr. CANNON. The amendment to which the gentleman's motion refers is the one covering claims under the Bowman Act?

Mr. MAHON. French spoliation claims and claims under the Bowman Act.

Mr. CANNON. Including claims in which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is interested?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am in perfect accord with the gentleman from Pennsylvania on this question. The amendment is embraced in section 4 of the bill as amended.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania desires his motion to cover both classes of claims—the French spoliation claims and the claims under the Bowman Act.

Mr. MAHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Now I will ask for a vote on nonconcurring in the other amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on nonconcurring in the other amendments.

The question being taken, the amendments were nonconcurred in.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word. This bill, with the amendments of the Senate, has not been printed either on the Senate side, except the copy which I hold in my hand, or in the House. If it is satisfactory to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will ask that the amendments be numbered and printed, and that this matter go over until to-morrow after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will agree to that.

Mr. MAHON. I will agree, Mr. Speaker, that this question be taken up after the reading of the Journal.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ELECTION CONTEST—ALDRICH VS. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. DANIELS. On behalf of the Committee on Elections No. 1, I desire to present a report on the contested-election case of Aldrich vs. Underwood, from the Ninth Congressional district of Alabama. This report is concurred in by four members of the committee. I ask leave that the minority of the committee have leave to file their views by Friday next, as we desire to bring the case before the House on Monday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The report of the committee was ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] asks consent that the minority of the committee have leave to file their views by Friday next. Is there objection?

Mr. KEM objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM].

Mr. DANIELS. I move, then, that the House consent to that disposition of the matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House allow the minority of the committee until Friday next to file their views. As many as are in favor of that motion——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Before the motion is put, I desire to be heard a moment. This has been a very long case, and there is a very long report. I represent the minority of the committee. My colleague, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE], is sick. I will ask that, in the event we can not finish the minority report by Friday, we be allowed a reasonable time after Friday.

Mr. DANIELS. You will be ready, no doubt, by Saturday. We desire to bring the case before the House on Monday next, after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not consent to that, though, as a matter of course, the gentleman has a right to call up the case if he wishes.

The question being put on the motion of Mr. DANIELS, it was agreed to.

ELECTION CONTEST—JOHNSTON VS. STOKES.

Mr. JENKINS. I call up the contested-election case of Johnston vs. Stokes, from the Seventh district of South Carolina. I ask that the Clerk read the resolutions presented by the majority of the Committee on Elections No. 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thomas B. Johnston was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Seventh Congressional district of the State of South Carolina, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That J. William Stokes was duly elected a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Seventh Congressional district of South Carolina, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say first that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] will have charge of the other side of this case, and that at this time it is impossible to limit the debate, but both sides promise that no unnecessary time will be consumed in presenting the case to the House.

There are several important questions involved in this controversy. One of them is as to the power of this House to declare the election law of a State unconstitutional when the right of a member to a seat would be thereby affected. Another is as to what effect should be given to an election held under an unconstitutional registration law of a State. Still another is as to what rule should be adopted with reference to counting the votes of the electors when lawfully tendered and unlawfully refused by the election officers when sufficient in number to change the result in the following cases: First, when it is shown for whom the elector offered to vote; second, when it is not shown for whom the elector offered to vote if permitted by the election officers to cast his vote, and still further as to the competency of the evidence sufficient to warrant the counting of the vote.

I address myself particularly to the case of Johnston against Stokes, and generally to the cases of Moorman against Latimer, Wilson against McLaurin, and Murray against Elliott, all four cases arising in the State of South Carolina. At the threshold of three of the cases named the committee was met with the proposition that the entire registration law of South Carolina and the election laws of that State under which all of these cases arose are unconstitutional, and an election held under the same a mere nullity; and the further claim is made that on that fact alone the contestants in these cases urging the unconstitutionality of the law are entitled to their seats. The question is one of very great importance, and has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Elections No. 3, and on the report of that committee two of the cases have been decided by this House in favor of the sitting members. I have some views on the subject, for which I am alone responsible, and will endeavor very briefly to disclose them. And I might say at the outset that I am a Federalist and an ardent Republican, and have never done anything and will never attempt to do anything that will promote the interest of any other political party than the Republican party.

Without being partisan or narrow, I do not hesitate to say that the future of this great Republic and the success and prosperity of the people depend upon the elevation and continuation in power of the Republican party. Democracy is alone valuable as a small minority; but in disposing of the election cases, and particularly the grave constitutional question involved, I do not purpose being influenced in the slightest degree from impartially discharging my full duty as a member of this House, and I am satisfied such has been the intention of the committee, and I believe that is the sentiment of this House. No matter what has been done in the past, it is high time that election cases be disposed of according to law and the evidence. Partisanship ought no longer to exercise any influence or have any control in determining this question. A right to a seat should be judicially disposed of and no longer be determined by partisan bias. The disposition of some of the cases disposed of by former Congresses is a disgrace to the Republic.

No matter how obnoxious it may be to us, we should see to it that the will of the people as declared at the ballot box is carried out. That will include condemnation of fraud and intimidation. Every effort ought to be made to have free and fair elections. It is the very substructure of Government. Murder, robbery, and horse stealing should have a secondary consideration compared with the great questions involved in a free, fair election and an absolutely honest count. Any attempt at dishonesty in elections should not only be frowned upon and condemned, but those responsible for it should be punished to the full extent of the law, ostracised, and absolutely disqualified from ever participating in elections or holding any office of profit or trust. So important has the question become that it is one of the highest duties of citizenship to demand that nothing shall be more sacred than the right of the citizen to vote and have his vote counted.

All dangers of a man losing his vote by reason of technicalities should be removed. Fair and just registration and election laws should not only be favored, but fairly and honestly enforced, and this political right should be so prominently advanced that it will be highly prized by every American citizen. It will have a tendency to enlarge and improve the quality of citizenship. It should be so regulated and enforced as to encourage education, for there is danger in allowing the ignorant to vote, and this fact induced me at this session of Congress to introduce a resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing an educational qualification as a condition precedent to the exercise of the elective franchise. In a great government of the people it is worse than a farce to allow men to vote and participate in government who can not read or write and have to have their ballots marked for them.

It is prolific of fraud, and has been not only a perplexing but disturbing question in these cases. Ignorance is to be deprecated and feared in all things, but particularly so in exercising the right to vote in a popular government like ours. Notwithstanding the many contests to be determined by this House at this session of Congress, there has not been the least expression of unfairness or any attempt upon the part of the great majority here to allow politics to control their action; but it seems to be the determination on the part of every Republican to be absolutely fair and to allow the will of the people to prevail, which is very commendable. With these few preliminary remarks, I will invite attention to the constitutional question involved:

THE TEST.

All regulations of the elective franchise must be reasonable, uniform, and impartial. They must not have for their purpose, directly or indirectly, to deny or abridge the constitutional right of citizens to vote or unnecessarily to impede its exercise. If they do, they must be declared void.—Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, page 758.

Certainly no one can question this authority. This very broad, fair, safe, and reasonable statement of the law is sustained by an unbroken current of authority. The many courts stating the doctrine are of the highest character, their logic and reasoning unanswerable, and ought to meet the approval of every fair-minded voter in the land, and the very safety of our institutions calls for its enforcement according to its letter and spirit. As already said, there were four cases pending before Committee on Elections No. 3 from the State of South Carolina. The contestants were not uniform in regard to the high constitutional question involved, while the contestees were unanimously in favor of the validity of the law. In Moorman against Latimer, Wilson against McLaurin, and Johnston against Stokes the contestants insisted that the registration and election laws of South Carolina are in violation of the constitution of the State of South Carolina and the Constitution of the United States; and if I understand them correctly, from that fact alone they were entitled to their seats, while in Murray against Elliott the contestant makes no point as to the constitutional question; but the committee are unanimously of the opinion that the constitutional question must be disposed of alike in all of the four cases the same as though the contestants were all agreed upon this question, and that it can not be ignored in the one case because not raised, or decided differently in that case because the contestant did not present it, when all four cases were argued before judgment was reached in either one of them, and therefore ought to be ruled alike on this point.

Each case being alike affected, I will first consider the constitution and laws of South Carolina in order to determine whether or not the registration and election laws of that State are in violation of the constitution of that State. It is as follows:

ART. 1, SEC. 31. All elections shall be free and open, and every inhabitant of this Commonwealth possessing the qualifications provided for in this constitution shall have equal right to elect officers and be elected to fill public offices.

ART. 8, SEC. 2. Every male citizen of the United States of the age of 21 years and upward, not laboring under the disabilities named in this constitution, without distinction of race, color, or former condition, who shall be a resident of this State at the time of the adoption of this constitution, or who shall hereafter reside in this State one year, and in the county in which he offers to vote sixty days next preceding any election, shall be entitled to vote for all officers that are now or hereafter may be elected by the people, and upon all questions submitted to the electors at any election: Provided, That no person shall be allowed to vote or hold office who is now or hereafter may be disqualified therefor by the Constitution of the United States until such disqualifications shall be removed by the Congress of the United States: Provided further, That no person while kept in any almshouse or asylum, or of unsound mind, or confined in any public prison shall be allowed to vote or hold public office.

ART. 8, SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the general assembly to provide, from time to time, for the registration of all electors.

It will be observed that by section 3, article 8, express power was conferred upon the general assembly "to provide from time to time for the registration of all electors," so no question can arise as to the power of the general assembly to pass a law requiring the registration of all electors. The general assembly did pass a law requiring as a condition precedent to voting that all persons otherwise qualified to vote be registered in conformity to law, and obtain a certificate to that effect evidencing registration, and produce it at the polls before being allowed to vote, and the contention is, by those who raised the question, that this law is in conflict with the constitution of South Carolina. Original provisions for the registration of voters in that State will be found in the "act approved February 9, 1882," 17 Statutes at Large, page 1110, and these provisions are incorporated in General Statutes 1882, beginning with section 89 and ending with section 106. These provisions were subsequently amended and incorporated in the Revised Statutes of 1893 as sections 131–156, both inclusive, but as instructed on the arguments, we are governed by the law of 1882, the amendments referred to and the codification of the law not changing the law of 1882 or affecting any present case from South Carolina. The material provisions of the registration law are as follows:

CHAPTER VIII (SECTIONS 131 TO 156, INCLUSIVE) OF THE ELECTION LAW OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

SEC. 131 (89). Every male citizen of the United States of the age of 21 years and upwards, not laboring under the disabilities named in the Constitution, without distinction of race, color, or former condition, who shall have been a resident of the State for one year, and in the county in which he offers to vote for sixty days next preceding any general election, shall be entitled to vote: Provided, That no person while kept in any almshouse or asylum, or of unsound mind, or confined in any public prison, or who shall have been convicted of treason, murder, burglary, larceny, perjury, forgery, or any other infamous crime, or dueling, shall be allowed to vote.

SEC. 132 (90). All electors of the State shall be registered; and no person shall be allowed to vote at any election hereafter to be held unless he shall have been heretofore registered in conformity with the requirements of Chapter VII of the General Statutes of 1882, and acts amendatory thereof, or shall be registered as herein required.

SEC. 133 (91, 106). On or before the 1st day of March in every second year, reckoning from 1882 the governor shall appoint, by and with the advice of the senate, if in session, and if not in session, subject to its approval at its next session, and subject to removal by the governor by and with the advice and consent of the senate, one competent and discreet person in each county, who shall be a qualified voter thereof, and who shall hold his office at the county seat, and shall be known as the supervisor of registration of such county, and whose duty it shall be to supervise the registration of the electors of such county as herein specified. He shall keep a record of all his official acts and proceedings. The term of his office shall be for two years from the date of his appointment; he shall continue in office until his successor shall be appointed and shall qualify; and his compensation shall be fixed by the general assembly from time to time, as may be deemed proper. His accounts for advertising (and in the county of Charleston for clerk hire and rent for registration precincts also) and for stationery shall be audited and paid by the county commissioners of his county.

"Term of office of supervisor appointed during vacation was not for the period of two years, but terminated when senate, at its next session, adjourned without approval of appointment. (State vs. Williams, 20 S. C., 12.)

"'Next session' means the next session in fact, whether regular or special." (Ib.)

SEC. 134. The governor is authorized to appoint a deputy supervisor in case of the inability of the supervisor to act, who, when so appointed, shall have all the powers and be charged with the duties of the supervisor, and shall receive $5 per diem when actually employed.

The governor shall also appoint two assistant supervisors of registration, who shall serve without compensation, and shall sit with the supervisor of registration in the determination of all cases of contested registration in which the supervisor shall refuse to register the applicant; the three supervisors shall sit for as many days, beginning on the second Tuesday in July, as may be necessary to hear and determine all such contested cases.

SEC. 135 (92). The secretary of state shall cause to be prepared a sufficient number of registration books and blanks, so that there shall be two of said books for each precinct in each county, which books shall be ruled in columns, with proper headings, so as to indicate the name, age, occupation, and place of residence of each elector, with a separate column to the right side of the page for such entries as may be necessary. And the secretary is authorized and required to provide additional registration books to supply the place of such as have become defaced and injured by use at the elections heretofore had, and he shall furnish the same upon application of any supervisor certifying to the necessity thereof. And in such case the supervisor so procuring such additional registration books shall copy from the original book the names and record thereof into the new book, and when the same shall be so copied it shall be the duty of the county auditor and clerk of the court of common pleas of the county, together with the supervisor, carefully to compare the names and record in the new book with those in the book so injured or defaced, and if the same is found correct to certify to its correctness; and such new book shall not be used at any election unless so certified.

SEC. 136 (93). For the purpose of registration, each township, as now laid out and defined, and in those counties where there are no such townships, the parish, as formerly known and defined, is declared a registration precinct. In the city of Columbia each ward registration precinct; and in the city of Charleston the registration precinct shall be the same as the voting precincts now established in the several wards of said city, as designated and defined in section 158.

SEC. 137 (94). After every general election the registration books shall be opened for registration of such persons as shall thereafter become entitled to register on the first Monday in each month until the 1st day of July preceding a general election, when the same shall be closed until such general election shall have taken place.

"Previously registration on Sunday was good." (State vs. Schneirle, 5 Rich., 299.)

SEC. 138. It shall be the duty of the supervisor of registration to deposit said books in the office of the clerk of court of common pleas in their respective counties, except in the counties of Charleston and Greenville, where they shall be deposited in the office of the register of mesne conveyance; and it shall be the duty of the clerk of said court and the register of mesne conveyance to safely keep the same, together with the other books of record in their respective offices; and it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to remove the same from the said offices, except the supervisors, who are hereby authorized to take the same from the said offices when it shall be necessary in the discharge of the duties imposed upon them by this chapter.

SEC. 139 (96). The supervisor shall determine as to the legal qualifications of all applicants for registration by summary process, requiring oath, evidence, or both, if he deem proper, subject to revision by the assistant supervisors and himself in all cases where he has refused to register an applicant. From their decision any applicant who is rejected shall have the right to a review thereof by the circuit court: Provided, He give notice in writing to the supervisor of his application for such review, and the grounds thereof within five days from the date of his rejection, and commence his proceedings within ten days from the service of said notice.

SEC. 140 (96). Any person coming of age and otherwise qualified as an elector may appear before the supervisor on any day on which the books are opened as aforesaid, and make oath (which the supervisor is hereby authorized to administer) as to his name, age, occupation, and place of residence; and if the supervisor find him qualified, he shall enter his name upon the registration book of the precinct in which he resides. Such person shall have the right of appeal, as provided in the last section, if the supervisor shall not find him qualified.

SEC. 141 (97). In case a person shall not be of age to qualify him as an elector on the day of the closing of the books of registration before any general election, but shall be of such age as will qualify him as such elector before the said general election, and shall appear before the supervisor of registration and take oath thereto, the supervisor, if he shall find him qualified, shall enter his name upon the registration book as aforesaid.

SEC. 142 (98). Each elector registered as aforesaid shall thereupon be furnished by the supervisor with a certificate, which shall contain a statement of his age, occupation, and place of residence, as entered in the said registration book, and which certificate shall be signed by the said supervisor; and no person shall be allowed to vote at any other precinct than the one for which he is registered, nor unless he produces and exhibits to the managers of election such certificate: Provided, In case there shall be no election precinct within any township or parish the supervisor shall designate in the certificate at which of the neighboring precincts the elector shall vote; and in case there be more than one precinct in any township or parish, the supervisor shall likewise designate in the certificate at which of the said precincts the elector shall vote. The certificate of registration shall be of the following form:

"Registration certificate No. ——.

"—— County, ——township, or parish, election precinct ——.

"The bearer, —— ——, is a qualified voter in the above precinct, and resides at ——, in —— township or —— parish, and is —— years of age, and entitled to vote at said precinct.

"Registered on the —— day of ——, A. D. 18—.

"——, ——,

"Supervisor of Registration."

SEC. 143. Wherever a new polling precinct is established by law, it shall be the duty of the supervisor to transfer from the books of registration the names of such qualified voters registered at other precincts as should, under this section, register and vote at the new precincts so established, and who may request such transfer, and to make such changes as may be necessary in the certificates of registration issued to such voters, who shall thereafter vote only at the precincts to which they have been thus transferred.

SEC. 144. When one polling place has been changed to another in any township, or where the name of the polling place has been changed since the last general election, the registration of voters for the former polling place shall be valid and effectual for the new polling place or precinct; and where one or more additional polling places or precincts have been established in the same township, or where a new precinct has been established in a township which formerly had none, it shall be the duty of the supervisor to change the certificates of registration of voters entitled by proximity of residence to vote at such new precinct, requiring in every case a surrender and cancellation of the former certificate and such evidence as he may deem proper as to the right of the elector to such change.

SEC. 145. Any registered elector who may reside nearer a polling place in a precinct or township than the precinct or township in which he is registered, and who desires to vote at such nearer polling place, shall, upon the surrender of his certificate of registration to the supervisor on or before the first Monday of July preceding the next general election, be entitled to a new certificate permitting him to vote at such nearer polling place; the old certificate to be destroyed by the supervisor, and such changes made by him in the registration books as will conform to the general provisions of this chapter. The supervisor of registration may require of the applicant for such change an affidavit or such other evidence as he may deem necessary to a determination of the residence of the applicant.

SEC. 146 (100). In case of the removal of an elector from one residence to another in the same precinct, he shall notify the supervisor and surrender to him his certificate of registration, and the supervisor shall enter the fact upon the registration book and give such elector a new certificate in accordance with such change of residence.

SEC. 147 (101). In case of the removal of an elector from one precinct to another in the same county, such elector shall notify the supervisor and surrender his certificate of registration to the said supervisor, who shall enter the fact upon the proper registration book, and shall give such elector a new certificate for the precinct into which he has removed.

SEC. 148 (102). In case of the removal of an elector from one county to another, he shall notify the supervisor of the county wherein he is registered and shall surrender his certificate of registration; and the said supervisor shall thereupon enter the fact of such removal upon the registration book as aforesaid, and shall give such elector a certificate of transfer to the county to which such elector has removed, upon the presentation of which the supervisor for such county shall cause such elector to be registered in the precinct of such county to which he shall have removed, and shall furnish such elector with a certificate, as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 149 (103). No elector removing from one residence, precinct, parish, ward, or county to another shall be allowed to register or vote without a transfer of registration as above provided.

SEC. 150 (99). Every elector shall have the right to a renewal of his certificate without fee or charge, when the same becomes defaced by time or accident, upon his surrendering such certificate so defaced to the supervisor of registration. In case of the loss of any certificate, the elector losing the same shall be entitled to a renewal thereof by the supervisor, upon application and proof of such loss, in the following manner, to wit: He shall, at least thirty days before the next general election, make application under oath, setting forth the fact of such loss, and the circumstances attending it, as near as may be, and stating that he has not sold, bartered, or parted with the same for any pecuniary, valuable, or other consideration, and has not willfully destroyed the same; which application the supervisor shall examine and consider, requiring other evidence under oath if in his judgment necessary to a determination as to the loss thereof; and, upon such examination and consideration, if the supervisor shall be satisfied that the certificate has been actually lost, he shall issue to the applicant a renewal thereof, marking or stamping the same "renewal." The decision of the supervisor shall be subject to revision by the assistant supervisors, together with the supervisor to whom the application is made, in all cases in which he has refused to renew the said certificate. From the decision of the supervisor and assistant supervisors any applicant who has been refused a renewal of his certificate shall have the right of a review thereof by the circuit court of the county in which he was registered: Provided, He give notice thereof to the supervisor to whom he made application for such renewal within five days of the refusal thereof by the supervisor and assistant supervisors, and commence proceedings within ten days from the giving of said notice.

SEC. 151 (104). The supervisor of registration shall, immediately preceding each election, revise the registration of electors, and mark off the names of such electors as have died, and such as have removed from one residence, precinct, parish, ward, or county to another without notifying him and obtaining a certificate of transfer as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 152. The clerks of the courts of general sessions and common pleas in the several counties of the State shall, on or before the 15th day of October, A. D. 1892, and biennially thereafter on or before the same day, make out and report to the supervisors of registration for their respective counties a complete list of all male persons convicted during the two preceding years, up to the 1st day of October aforesaid, of the following offenses, to wit: Murder, burglary, larceny, perjury, or any other infamous crime, or dueling; such report must be accompanied by the certificate of the clerk, under the seal of his office, that the report is correct as appears from the records of his office.

Any clerk of the court who shall fail or neglect to comply with the provisions of this section shall forfeit and pay to the county in which he holds his office the sum of $50 for each and every failure so to report.

SEC. 153. Every trial justice in the State shall, on or before the 15th day of October, A. D. 1892, and biennially thereafter on or before the same day, make out, under his hand and seal, and submit to the supervisor of registration for the county in which he holds his office, a certified list of all male persons convicted of petit larceny before him, or any of his predecessors whose trial docket is in his possession, during the two preceding years, or the period following his next preceding report. Any trial justice going out of office shall furnish such list immediately upon his retirement and up to that time, and any trial justice hereafter appointed shall furnish such list from the time of his entry upon the duties of his office.

Any trial justice who shall fail or neglect to furnish such reports as herein required shall forfeit and pay to the county in which he holds his office the sum of $10 for each and every such failure to report.

SEC. 154. The reports provided for in the two preceding sections shall be received by the supervisor as prima facie proofs of the facts stated therein, and he shall immediately erase the names of all such persons from the registration books in his county, and they shall not be allowed thereafter to register or vote in any elections in this State: Provided, That if any such person whose name is so furnished shall present to such supervisor, within sixty days after the next following election, a pardon from the governor, or, within such time, prove to the satisfaction of such supervisor that he was not convicted of the crime or misdemeanor stated in such certificate, his name shall be restored to the list of registered voters as completely and effectually as if the same had not been stricken therefrom.

SEC. 155 (105). At each and every election the supervisor of registration shall furnish the managers of election with one of the registration books for each precinct, for the care and custody of which the managers receiving the same shall be responsible and which they shall return to the supervisor of registration within three days after the close of election, and no elector shall be allowed to vote whose name is not registered as provided in this chapter.

SEC. 156. The supervisor of registration is authorized and directed to exchange the registration of such electors as may apply to him for that purpose from other precincts to the precincts now established by law whenever it shall appear to him that the elector so applying resides within a reasonable distance of the same.

Summarizing it, it provides that all electors of the State must be registered, and no person shall vote unless heretofore registered or registered as herein required. A supervisor of registration shall be appointed for each county, empowered to supervise registration of electors, keep a record, and hold his office at the county seat. There shall also be appointed two assistant supervisors of registration to sit with the supervisor in the determination of all cases of contested registration or in which the supervisor shall refuse registration, and this board is authorized to sit for as many days, beginning on the second Tuesday in July, as may be necessary to hear and determine such contested cases. After every general election the books shall be opened for registration of such persons as shall thereafter become entitled to register on the first Monday in each month until the 1st day of July preceding a general election, when the books shall be closed until the general election shall be held. The supervisor shall determine as to the legal qualifications of all applicants, and if an applicant is rejected he can appeal from the action of the supervisor and his assistants to the circuit court. Any person not of age when the registration books are opened but becoming of age before election may appear before the supervisor and have his name entered on the books at any time.

When a voter is allowed to register he obtains a certificate, which must be produced when offering to vote, but if he moves his residence in the same precinct or moves into another precinct he must have a transfer of his certificate, and if he loses his certificate he must obtain another. The statute also authorizes the supervisor before election to revise the list, marking off the names of those who have died or removed, those convicted of murder, burglary, larceny, perjury, or any other infamous crime, or dueling, and petit larceny, without notice to the elector, and if stricken off unlawfully the elector must prove to the satisfaction of the supervisor that he was not convicted of the crime of which he is charged or that he has a pardon from the governor. So with the constitution and statutes of South Carolina before us we will proceed to determine by the authority cited whether or not the regulations provided as a condition precedent to the exercises of the elective franchise in South Carolina are reasonable, uniform, and impartial, and whether the same have for their purpose directly or indirectly to deny or abridge the constitutional rights of citizens of South Carolina to vote, or unnecessarily impede their exercise of the right to the elective franchise to such an extent as to affect the rights of the contestants to their respective seats.

After giving the subject much thought, and fully appreciating the responsibilities surroundig such an important step, and considering carefully the claims of the contestants that they are denied valuable rights; considering also the situation of affairs in that State ever since the late civil war, sympathizing greatly with the success of Republican aspirants, keeping in view the rights of the States and the plain duty of the Federal Government, without the least intention or desire to impair the one or shirk the other, I am willing to go on record as saying that both branches of Congress have the power to inquire into the constitutionality of the law of the State whenever the same affects the right of a person to a seat in Congress, and should exercise that power in all proper cases, for by the Constitution of the United States all questions affecting the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members are referred to and must be determined by each House.

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members. * * * Article I, section 5.

I regret the almost entire absence of authority on so important a point, but this will be a good opportunity to create authority, and I would call attention to the case of Miller against Elliot, Fifty-first Congress, first session, H. R. Report 2502, part 2, where these same laws were involved and considered in Committee on Elections, the same contestee as in one of these cases, and I quote from the majority report, page 6—

That these provisions of the registration statutes are unconstitutional and void can not be seriously questioned.

The honorable and distinguished gentleman from Georgia, Mr. CRISP, was a member of the committee and signed the minority report, and that report impliedly sustains the conclusion arrived at by the majority of the committee as to the power of Congress in this regard, as will be shown by examining it. The contestant in that case was insisting that the law under which the election was held was unconstitutional. The majority report sustained the contention of the contestant. The able gentlemen composing the minority, always ready to defend the rights of the State, and jealous of the power of the National Government, did not in the minority report controvert the position of the majority or in any manner deny the power of the House in this regard, but contented themselves in their answer to the majority by offering three reasons why the law was constitutional.

First. That contestant had not in his notice of contest stated that he relied upon the unconstitutionality of the law as one of the grounds of contest, thereby defending the constitutionality of the law, and not denying the power of Congress, conceding the power of Congress to pass upon the constitutionality of the law, by insisting upon the presence of the question in the notice of contest. If they were prepared to deny the power of Congress in this regard they would not have defended the constitutionality of the law, but would have in place thereof denied the power of Congress to pass upon the question.

Their second answer was, "That there was no proof that the law was acted upon in the strict interpretation put upon it"; and Third. "That the minority of the committee could not have been serious in reporting that the law was unconstitutional," to say the least of it, a very serious way of answering a great constitutional question involving to so great an extent the rights, privileges, and liberties of American citizenship. The majority report was adopted without argument and without division.

Among all of the able Democratic members of the Fifty-first Congress there was not one of them willing to put himself on record as denying the power of Congress to inquire into the constitutionality of the laws of the State affecting the right of the claimant to a seat in the Congress. By their silence we have a right to argue that the Democratic party is committed to the doctrine that this power does exist in Congress. Having arrived at the conclusion that Congress has the power to inquire into the constitutionality of these statutes, the next question is as to their constitutionality. The contestants favoring the unconstitutionality of the registration laws call attention to two cases which they insist clearly establish the unconstitutionality of these laws and as fully sustaining them in their positions, and contend that these cases ought to have great weight in determining the question because the same are the opinions of two great jurists, both familiar with the laws of South Carolina and the manner of enforcement and effect of the same, and for the further reason that both cases were direct actions brought to test the constitutionality of the laws in question.

One is Mills against Green, circuit court of the United States for the district of South Carolina, reported May 8, 1895, 67 Federal Reporter, page 818, by Nathan Goff, circuit judge. The other is Butler vs. Ellerbee et al., supreme court of South Carolina, July 6, 1895, 22 Southeastern Reporter, page 425, opinion by McIver, chief justice. The case in the United States court was brought on the equity side of the court, to prevent the defendant Green individually and as supervisor of registration of Richland County, S. C., from delivering the books of registration to the managers of election in the different precincts in that county, on the ground that the law was unconstitutional under which he was acting. A vigorous defense was interposed, and an earnest effort made to uphold the constitutionality of the law. Judge Goff sustained the bill, granted the prayer for relief, and in an elaborate opinion pointed out the many defects in the law, and held the entire registration act invalid.

The case went to the United States circuit court of appeals and was reversed for want of equity, so the constitutional question involved was not discussed in the appellate court, the position being taken that the elector had mistaken his remedy in proceeding on the equity side of the court. The case brought in the supreme court of South Carolina was to restrain the defendants, as fiscal officers, from paying the expenses incurred under the registration laws on the alleged ground that the same were unconstitutional. The two associate justices held that the court was not one of original jurisdiction for the determination of cases like this and dismissed the bill, but the chief justice delivered a dissenting opinion, not only sustaining the original jurisdiction of the court, thereby conceding the power of the court to determine the whole question, but held that the law was unconstitutional. Both of the opinions of these learned jurists are lengthy and discuss every question in the respective cases, leaving nothing of the law. Chief Justice McIver is a Democrat, an able jurist, and evidently an upright man, familiar with the laws of the State and manner and object of enforcement of the same, and thoroughly qualified to speak of it. His opinion ought to carry great weight, and can not be said to be in any sense partisan. Both of these able jurists agree that the law in question falls under the condemnation of the test formulated by Judge Cooley, and the particular points made by these eminent jurists, briefly stated, are as follows:

BY JUDGE GOFF.

First. Requiring any certificate.

Second. Closing of the registration books on the 1st day of July preceding a general election when held in November following.

Third. That an elector qualified and entitled to register in May and June, 1882, and failing to register by reason of inadvertence, sickness, absence, or other cause when the books were open for that year, has been disqualified as a voter ever since July 1, 1882, because the only ones going on the books since that time being those coming of age since July 1, 1882.

Chief Justice McIver in his opinion nowhere refers to the opinion of Judge Goff, but fully sustains Judge Goff in conclusions 2 and 3, as I have condensed and numbered them; and while holding that to require a voter to obtain a certificate is not unconstitutional, yet to compel an elector to get a new certificate in case of loss or transfer, or in case of a removal from one place to another in the same precinct or from one precinct to another, as a prerequisite to voting after registration and once having obtained a certificate, is well calculated to impede and obstruct the exercise of the right of suffrage; and from the language implied by the learned jurist we infer that on this point he regards the law unconstitutional.

We now have the opinion of two competent to judge, after careful consideration of the question, that the registration law of South Carolina is unconstitutional. Certainly no one in South Carolina will question the opinion of Chief Justice McIver, his ability, his integrity, or the fact that he is a Democrat and has always been a Democrat. I differ from both opinions in their reasoning, and inasmuch as no injustice be done these learned gentlemen, I submit the opinions of both:

[Opinion of Judge Goff in the case of Mills vs. Green, in the circuit court of the United States for the district of South Carolina, decided May 8, 1895, and reported in full in 67 Fed. Rep., 818, and in the News and Courier, Charleston, S. C., May 9, 1895.]

JUDGE GOFF'S REGISTRATION DECISION.

In the circuit court of the United States for the district of South Carolina—Lawrence P. Mills vs. W. Briggs Green—In equity.

On the 20th day of April last, on consideration of the bill in this cause, I passed an order that the defendant, W. Briggs Green, individually and as supervisor of registration for Richland County, in the State of South Carolina, be enjoined and restrained until the further order of this court from the commission of the acts complained of in complainant's bill, and I directed that said defendant show cause before me, if any he could, at Columbia, S. C., on Thursday, May 2, instant, why such order should not be continued, or some order of like purport and effect be then granted, enjoining and restraining him, both individually and as such supervisor of registration, from the commission of said acts until the final hearing and determination of this cause.

The plaintiff, a citizen of the State of South Carolina and of the United States, brings this suit against W. Briggs Green, a citizen of said State and of the United States. The plaintiff exhibits his bill in his own behalf and for all others, citizens of the county of Richland, in the State of South Carolina, circumstanced like him, who are too numerous to be named and made parties hereto. It is set forth in the bill that the plaintiff was 26 years of age on the 4th day of February, 1895; that he is a resident of Ward 4, precinct of Columbia, in said county and State; that he is a male citizen of the United States; that he has resided in the State of South Carolina for more than one year preceding the last general election in that State, and in the county of Richland for more than sixty days prior to said election; that he is an elector of the State of South Carolina, possessing all the qualifications of an elector of the most numerous branch of the State legislature, and is subject to none of the disqualifications set forth in the constitution of that State, and that he is under the Constitution and laws of the United States duly qualified to vote at all Federal and State elections held in said ward, county, and State.

It is set forth in the bill that section 90 of the general statutes of South Carolina, 1882, provides as follows: "All electors of the State shall be registered as hereinafter provided, and no person shall be allowed to vote at any election hereafter to be held unless registered as hereinafter required; that by section 94 of said statute it is provided: When the said registration (in certain books to be provided for and made in the manner provided for in section 93) shall have been completed, the books shall be closed and not opened for registration, except for the purposes and as hereinafter mentioned, until after the next general election for State officers. After the said next general election the books shall be opened for registration of such persons as shall thereafter become entitled to register on the first Monday in each month to and until the first Monday in July, inclusive, preceding the following general election, upon which last-named day the same shall be closed and not reopened for registration until after the said general election, and that thereafter the said books shall be opened for the registration of such electors on the days above mentioned until the 1st day of July preceding a general election, when the same shall be closed as aforesaid until the said general election shall have taken place"; that in section 127 of said revised statutes it is provided: "After every general election the registration books shall be opened for registration of such persons as shall thereafter become entitled to register on the first Monday in each month until the 1st day of July, preceding a general election, when the same shall be closed until such election shall have taken place"; that section 97 provides: "Any person coming of age, and being qualified as an elector, may appear before the supervisor of registration on any day on which the books are opened, as aforesaid, and take oath as to his age and qualifications as hereinbefore provided, and if the supervisor find him qualified he shall enter his name upon the registration book of the precinct wherein he resides." It is also alleged that said registration laws provide that the supervisors of registration in the several counties shall issue to the voter when registered, a certificate of registration, and that said voter shall present the same at the polls to the managers of the election, and that no one shall be allowed to vote at any election to be held in said State unless his certificate of registration is exhibited when he offers to vote, and that it is required by said law that in case a voter shall remove from one county to another in said State, or from one precinct to another in the same county, or from one residence to another in the same precinct, that he shall obtain a transfer and a renewal certificate, and that should a voter lose his certificate he must obtain a renewal thereof upon furnishing evidence satisfactory to the registrar of the county wherein he resides, that his certificate has been mislaid or lost, and that the same has not been willfully or intentionally disposed of. The bill also alleges that by the provisions and requirements of said enactments, the voter failing for any reason to comply with any of the provisions of the same, is denied the right of suffrage, both in Federal and State elections. Complainant claims that the provisions of the said enactments fixing the time for registration and the closing of the books for that purpose on the 1st day of July preceding every election, and the many requirements and conditions set out in the various sections of said registration law were intended, and that they in effect do abridge, impede, and destroy the suffrage of the citizens, both of the State and of the United States.

It is also averred that on the 24th day of December, 1894, an act was passed by the general assembly of South Carolina entitled "An act to provide for calling a constitutional convention, to provide the number and qualifications of members of the convention, their compensation, etc., and to provide for the election of the same, and to define and prescribe the qualifications of the electors and the manner of the election and of declaring the result." That by section 4 of said act it is declared who shall be entitled to vote for delegates to said constitutional convention, and that in addition to the qualifications prescribed for electors by the constitution of the State of South Carolina is provided a further one, viz: "That the elector be duly registered, as now required by law, or who, having been entitled to register as a voter at the time of the general registration of electors in the State, which took place in the year 1882, or at any time subsequent thereto, failed to register at such time, or who has become a citizen of this State and who shall register as hereinafter provided in such cases."

Other provisions of the laws and of the constitution of the State of South Carolina are set forth, but I do not deem it necessary to now recite them.

The bill charges that W. Briggs Green has been appointed to the office of supervisor of registration for Richland County in pursuance of said registration laws; that he is now exercising the duties prescribed by the same, and that he intends to continue so to act, and that he intends to furnish to the several boards of managers for the precinct in which plaintiff resides in said county, who hold the election of delegates to said constitutional convention, certain paper writings purporting to be the registration books for use at such precincts.

The complainant says that he failed to register at the registration made after the general election in 1888, and during the ten days in March, 1895, provided for in the act of 1894, because although he made repeated and persistent efforts to become registered he found himself unable to comply with the unreasonable, unnecessary, and burdensome rules, regulations, and restrictions prescribed by said unconstitutional registration laws as conditions precedent to his right to register, and that he has never been allowed to vote at any Federal or State election of the State of South Carolina; that he is desirous of voting for delegates to the said constitutional convention, and that the paper writing purporting to be books of registration now in the hands of the defendant do not and will not contain his name as a registered voter, for the reason before stated; that he and others like circumstanced with him will not be permitted to vote at said special election by the managers thereof unless their names be found upon the books of registration and they produce the registration certificate mentioned; and that if the defendant be permitted to continue the aforesaid illegal, partial, and void registration, and be allowed to turn over to the managers of such election for the county of Richland the books of registration for said county, he, the plaintiff, will be deprived of his right to vote at said election and grievous and irreparable wrong will be done and damage him, which can only be prevented by the interposition of this court by way of restraining the defendant from the performance of said before-mentioned acts.

The defendant, in his return to the rule to show cause, insists that as supervisor of registration for Richland County he is not answerable to the jurisdiction of this court, and that the matters, facts, and things alleged and complained of in the bill are matters relating to the political duties of his office; that this is in effect a suit against the State of South Carolina, which is prohibited by the eleventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States; also that the bill presents no question arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, and that this court has no jurisdiction of the case; that the bill presents no case for equity jurisdiction, as the plaintiff has a plain and adequate remedy at law; that the bill is multifarious and not properly verified; he denies that the registration laws were intended and that they in effect do abridge, impede, and destroy the suffrage of the citizens of the State and of the United States, and he claims that they are reasonable and constitutional, and submits their proper construction to the court. The other matters set up in the return will not now be recited, but will be considered in substance as the questions arising are disposed of.

The question of jurisdiction is first to be determined. Defendant insists that this suit is in effect a proceeding against the State of South Carolina, and that it should not be entertained because prohibited by the eleventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It is not my intention at this time to consider separately the many cases cited by counsel in argument bearing on this question. After carefully examining them all I conclude that it is the duty of the circuit court of the United States to restrain a State officer from executing an unconstitutional statute of the State when the execution of it by him would violate or abridge the rights, privileges, and immunities of the complainant that are granted by the Constitution of the United States. So far as this question is concerned, it is immaterial if the officer so restrained be the supervisor of registration, the auditor of state, the comptroller-general, the treasurer, the attorney-general, or the governor. We do not have in this country any class of people, State or national officials or private citizens, who are above the law and who are not compelled to respect it. The Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land, anything in the constitution or laws of any of the States to the contrary notwithstanding. The mandate of the nation's Constitution is addressed to all the officers of the United States, as well as to all the officers of all the States. The judges of the Federal, as well as of the State courts, must respect it, for it declares that the judges of every State shall be bound thereby. As is said by the Supreme Court in Dodge vs. Woolsey (18 How., 331): "To make its supremacy more complete, impressive, and practical, that there should be no escape from its operation, and that its binding force upon the States and the members of Congress should be unmistakable, it is declared that the Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution." It would be a strange admission, a startling decision, that the courts of the United States can not open their doors to the citizens of the United States who allege that they are by the unconstitutional laws of a State deprived of their privileges or immunities as citizens of the United States and denied the equal protection of the laws within the jurisdiction of such State. I am not aware that any court of the United States has ever so held. I trust I will never be advised of such a decision, and I am sure, as I now see the law and my duty, that I will not so rule, not establish such a precedent.

The case of In re Ayres (123 U. S., 443), relied on by defendant's counsel, does not in my judgment sustain the position taken by them. In that case the jurisdiction of the circuit court was denied not because the officers of the State were sued, but because the court found that the act of the legislature complained of did not violate any contract, and because the bill did not allege any ground of equitable relief against the individual defendants for any personal wrong committed or threatened by them, because it did not charge against them in their individual character anything done or threatened which constituted in contemplation of law a violation of personal or property rights or a breach of contract to which they were parties. In these particulars the Ayres case differs materially from the case now before me. In that case the Supreme Court says: "But this is not intended in any way to infringe upon the principle which justifies suits against individual defendants, who, under color of the authority of unconstitutional legislation by the State, are guilty of personal trespasses and wrongs, nor to forbid suits against officers in their official capacity either to arrest or direct their official action by injunction or mandamus, where such suits are authorized by law, and the act to be done or omitted is purely ministerial, in the performance or omission of which the plaintiff has a legal interest."

In Davis vs. Gray (16 Wall., 203) the Supreme Court held that a circuit court of the United States, in a proper case in equity, may enjoin a State officer from executing a State law in conflict with the Constitution or a statute of the United States when such execution will violate the rights of the complainant; that making a State officer a party does not make the State a party, although her law may prompt his action and she may stand behind him as the real party in interest. That case was a suit by Gray against Davis, the governor of the State of Texas, and Keuchler, commissioner of the land office of that State, and the injunction issued by the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas, restraining said officers from issuing and signing certain land warrants, was sustained, as I have mentioned, by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In the case of Pennoyer vs. McConnaughy (140 U. S., 1), in which the Supreme Court reviewed the cases bearing on the subject, Mr. Justice Lamar, speaking for the court, said: "But the general doctrine of Osborne vs. The Bank of the United States, that the circuit courts of the United States will restrain a State officer from executing an unconstitutional statute of the State, when to execute it would violate rights and privileges of the complainant which had been guaranteed by the Constitution, and would work irreparable damage and injury to him, has never been departed from. On the contrary, the principles of that case have been recognized and enforced in a very large number of cases, notably in those we have referred to as belonging to the second class of cases above mentioned." In reference to the case just referred to, he used this language: "The first class is where the suit is brought against the officers of the State as representing the State's action and liability, thus making it, though not a party to the record, the real party against which the judgment will so operate as to compel it to specifically perform its contract. (In re Ayers, 123 U. S., 443; Louisiana vs. Jumel, 107 U. S., 711; Antoni vs. Greenhow, 107 U. S., 769; Cunningham vs. Macon and Brunswick Railroad, 109 U. S., 446; Hagood vs. Southern, 117 U. S., 52.) The other class is where a suit is brought against defendants who, claiming to act as officers of the State under the color of an unconstitutional statute, commit acts of wrong and injury to the rights and property of the plaintiff acquired under a contract with the State. Such suit, whether brought to recover money or property in the hands of such defendants, unlawfully taken by them in behalf of the State, or for compensation in damages, or in a proper case where the remedy at law is inadequate for an injunction to prevent such wrong and injury, or for a mandamus in a like case to enforce upon the defendant the performance of a plain legal duty, purely ministerial, is not, within the meaning of the eleventh amendment, an action against the State. (Osborne vs. Bank of the United States, 9 Wheat., 738; Davis vs. Gray, 16 Wall., 203; Tomlinson vs. Branch, 15 Wall., 460; Litchfield vs. Webster County, 101 U. S., 773; Allen vs. Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, 114 U. S., 311; Board of Liquidation vs. McComb, 92 U. S., 531; Poindexter vs. Greenhow, 114 U. S., 270.")

Complainant insists that his case is included in the reasoning of the court in the cases last cited, and also that he is entitled to present his bill to this court relative to the matters therein set forth, because of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and particularly the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments thereof. To the consideration of this point, and of the constitutionality of the registration laws of the State of South Carolina, we now come. Complainant insists that the registration laws of South Carolina are in contravention of the provisions of the constitution of South Carolina, and that they also violate the Constitution of the United States, his rights as a citizen of the United States being so affected thereby as to entitle him to be heard in this court on the complaint we now consider. The constitution of South Carolina contains the following provisions:

ART. 1, SEC. 31. "All elections shall be free and open, and every inhabitant of this Commonwealth possessing the qualifications provided for in this constitution shall have equal right to elect officers and be elected to fill public offices."

ART. 8, SEC. 2. "Every male citizen of the United States of the age of 21 years and upwards, not laboring under the disabilities named in this constitution, without distinction of race, color, or former condition, who shall be a resident of this State at the time of the adoption of this constitution, or who shall hereafter reside in this State one year and in the county in which he offers to vote sixty days next preceding any election, shall be entitled to vote for all officers that are now or hereafter may be elected by the people, and upon all questions submitted to the electors at any election: Provided, That no person shall be allowed to vote or hold office who is now or hereafter may be disqualified therefor by the Constitution of the United States until such disqualifications shall be removed by the Congress of the United States: Provided further, That no person while kept in any almshouse or asylum, or of unsound mind, or confined in any public prison, shall be allowed to vote or hold public office."

ART. 8, SEC. 3. "It shall be the duty of the general assembly to provide, from time to time, for the registration of all electors."

ART. 8, SEC. 7. "Every person entitled to vote at any election shall be eligible to any office which now is, or hereafter shall be, elective by the people in the county where he shall have resided sixty days previous to such election, except as otherwise provided in this constitution or the Constitution and laws of the United States."

ART. 8, SEC. 8. "The general assembly shall never pass any law that will deprive any of the citizens of this State of the right of suffrage, except for treason, murder, robbery, or dueling, whereof the person shall have been duly tried and convicted."

Section 2, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States is as follows: "The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualification requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature."

Section 1, Article XIV (amendment), is in these words: "All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Article XV of the amendments to the Constitution reads:

SECTION 1. "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

"SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

The Congress has given to the circuit courts of the United States jurisdiction of all suits to enforce the right of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States.

We find now that a citizen of South Carolina is a citizen of the United States residing in that State. The rights, privileges, and immunities belonging to him as a free citizen are his as a citizen of the United States, and do not depend upon his citizenship of that State. The plaintiff, Mills, a citizen of African descent, is a citizen of the United States and of the State of South Carolina.

By the fourteenth amendment he has been made a citizen of the United States, and by the fifteenth amendment he is a voter in the State in which he resides. Previous to the adoption of these amendments the race to which he belongs had no rights that the white men of this country were bound to respect, and it was not possible for anyone belonging to it to be a citizen of the United States. In the Slaughter House Cases (16 Wall., 68) the Supreme Court of the United States, referring to the time immediately preceding and following the adoption of these amendments, said:

"The institution of African slavery, as it existed in about half the States of the Union, and the contests pervading the public mind for many years between those who desired its curtailment and ultimate extinction and those who desired additional safeguards for its security and perpetuation culminated in the effort on the part of most of the States in which slavery existed to separate from the Federal Government and to resist its authority.

"This constituted the war of the rebellion, and whatever auxiliary causes may have contributed to bring about this war, undoubtedly the overshadowing and efficient cause was African slavery.

"In that struggle, slavery, as a legalized social relation, perished. It perished as a necessity of the bitterness and force of the conflict. When the armies of freedom found themselves upon the soil of slavery they could do nothing less than free the poor victims whose enforced servitude was the foundation of the quarrel, and when hard pressed in the contest these men—for they proved themselves men in that terrible crisis—offered their services and were accepted by thousands to aid in suppressing the unlawful rebellion. Slavery was at an end wherever the Federal Government succeeded in that purpose. The proclamation of President Lincoln expressed an accomplished fact as to a large portion of the insurrectionary districts when he declared slavery abolished in them all. But, the war being over, those who had succeeded in reestablishing the authority of the Federal Government were not content to permit this great act of emancipation to rest on the actual results of the contest or the proclamation of the Executive, both of which might have been questioned in after times, and they determined to place this main and most valuable result in the Constitution of the restored Union as one of its fundamental articles. Hence the thirteenth article of amendment to that instrument. Its two short sections seem hardly to admit of construction, so vigorous is their expression and so appropriate to the purpose we have indicated.

"'1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

"'2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.' * * *

"The process of restoring to their proper relation with the Federal Government and with the other States those which had sided with the rebellion, undertaken under the proclamation of President Johnson in 1865, and before the assembling of Congress, developed the fact that, notwithstanding the formal recognition by those States of the abolition of slavery, the condition of the slave race would, without further protection of the Federal Government, be almost as bad as it was before. Among the first acts of legislation adopted by several of the States in the legislative bodies which claimed to be in their normal relations with the Federal Government were laws which imposed upon the colored race onerous disabilities and burdens, and curtailed their rights in the pursuit of life, liberty, and property to such an extent that their freedom was of little value, while they had lost the protection which they had received from their former owners from motives both of interest and humanity.

"They were in some States forbidden to appear in the towns in any other character than menial servants. They were required to reside on and cultivate the soil, without the right to purchase or own it. They were excluded from many occupations of gain, and were not permitted to give testimony in the courts in any case where a white man was a party. It was said that their lives were at the mercy of bad men, either because the laws for their protection were insufficient or were not enforced.

"These circumstances, whatever of falsehood or misconception may have been mingled with their presentation, forced upon the statesmen who had conducted the Federal Government in safety through the crisis of the rebellion, and who supposed that by the thirteenth article of the amendment they had secured the result of their labors, the conviction that something more was necessary in the way of constitutional protection to the unfortunate race who had suffered so much. They accordingly passed through Congress the proposition for the fourteenth amendment, and they declined to treat as restored to their full participation in the Government of the Union the States which had been in insurrection until they ratified that article by a formal vote of their legislative bodies."

Before we proceed to examine more critically the provisions of this amendment (on which the plaintiffs in error rely) let us complete and dismiss the history of the recent amendments, as that history relates to the general purpose which pervades them all. A few years' experience satisfied the thoughtful men who had been the authors of the other two amendments that, notwithstanding the restraints of those articles on the States and the laws passed under the additional powers granted to Congress, they were inadequate for the protection of life, liberty, and property, without which freedom to the slaves was no boon. They were in all those States denied the right of suffrage. The laws were administered by the white man alone. It was urged that a race of men distinctively marked as was the negro, living in the midst of another and dominant race, could never be fully secured in their person and their property without the right of suffrage.

Hence the fifteenth amendment, which declares that "the right of a citizen of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." The negro having by the fourteenth amendment been declared to be a citizen of the United States, is thus made a voter in every State of the Union.

We repeat, then, in the light of this recapitulation of events, almost too recent to be called history, but which are familiar to us all, and on the most casual examination of the language of these amendments, no one can fail to be impressed with the one pervading purpose found in them all, lying at the foundation of each, and without which none of them would have been even suggested. We mean the freedom of the slave race, the security and firm establishment of that freedom, and the protection of the newly made freeman and citizen from the oppressions of those who had formerly exercised unlimited dominion over him. It is true that only the fifteenth amendment in terms mentions the negro by speaking of his color and his slavery. But it is just as true that each of the other articles was addressed to the grievances of that race and designed to remedy them as the fifteenth.

We do not say that no one else but the negro can share in this protection. Both the language and spirit of these articles are to have their fair and just weight in any question of construction. Undoubtedly while negro slavery alone was in the mind of the Congress which proposed the thirteenth article, it forbids any other kind of slavery now or hereafter. If Mexican peonage or the Chinese cooly-labor system shall develop slavery of the Mexican or Chinese race within our territory, this amendment may safely be trusted to make it void. And so if other rights are assailed by the States which properly and necessarily fall within the protection of these articles, that protection will apply, though the party interested may not be of African descent. But what we do say, and what we wish to be understood, is that in any fair and just construction of any section or phase of these amendments it is necessary to look to the purpose which we have said was the pervading spirit of them all, the evil which they were designed to remedy and the process of continued addition to the Constitution, until that purpose was supposed to be accomplished as far as constitutional law can accomplish it.

The first section of the fourteenth article, to which our attention is more especially invited, opens with a definition of citizenship—not only citizenship of the United States, but citizenship of the States. No such definition was previously found in the Constitution, nor had any attempt been made to define it by act of Congress. It had been the occasion of much discussion in the courts, by the Executive Departments, and in the public journals. It had been said by eminent judges that no man was a citizen of the United States except as he was a citizen of one of the States composing the Union. Those, therefore, who had been born and resided always in the District of Columbia or in the Territories, though within the United States, were not citizens. Whether this proposition was sound or not had never been judicially decided. But it had been held by this court, in the celebrated Dred Scott case (19 How., 393), only a few years before the outbreak of the civil war, that a man of African descent, whether a slave or not, was not and could not be a citizen of a State or of the United States. This decision, while it met the condemnation of some of the ablest statesmen and constitutional lawyers of the country, had never been overruled; and if it was to be accepted as a constitutional limitation of the right of citizenship, then all the negro race who had recently been made freemen were still not only not citizens, but were incapable of becoming so by anything short of an amendment to the Constitution.

To remove this difficulty primarily and to establish a clear and comprehensive definition of citizenship which would declare what should constitute citizenship of the United States and also citizenship of a State the first clause of the first section was framed:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside."

The first observation we have to make on this clause is that it puts at rest both the questions which we stated to have been the subject of differences of opinion. It declares that persons may be citizens of the United States without regard to their citizenship of a particular State, and it overturns the Dred Scott decision by making all persons born within the United States and subject to its jurisdiction citizens of the United States. That its main purpose was to establish the citizenship of the negro can admit of no doubt. The phrase "subject to its jurisdiction" was intended to exclude from its operation children of ministers, consuls, and citizens or subjects of foreign states born within the United States.

While it is true that the Supreme Court has held that the fourteenth amendment did not add to the privileges and immunities of a citizen and that no new voters were necessarily made by it, it is equally true that it in effect held that it increased the number of citizens entitled to suffrage under the constitutions and laws of the States. It also held that in the light of the history of the late amendments there was no difficulty in giving a proper meaning to their provisions, and that the existence of laws in those States where the emancipated negroes resided which grossly discriminated against them as a class was the end to be remedied by them, and that by them such laws are forbidden. It also fully determined that a citizen of a State is now simply a citizen of the United States residing in that State; that his rights as such are those that belong to him as a citizen of the United States, and that they are not dependent upon his citizenship of any State, do not depend upon its legislation, and can not be destroyed by its power. As I understand the decision of the Supreme Court, they sustain the claim of this plaintiff that the courts of the United States are open for the relief of citizens of the United States whose privileges have been abridged by the State in which he resides. Certainly they should be, and I will surely so hold until advised by that court that I am in error. From these same decisions I find that while the right of suffrage is not a necessary attribute of Federal citizenship, it surely is such an attribute as is exempt from discrimination in the exercise of that right on account of race and previous condition, and that while the right to vote in the States comes from the State, the right of exemption from the prohibited discrimination comes from the United States.

While as a rule the rights of a citizen of a State are such as all citizens of the United States enjoy, yet this plaintiff has also certain rights under the constitution of South Carolina by virtue of the act of Congress of June 25, 1868, which was accepted and acted upon by that State, in which it is provided that the constitution of said State shall never be so changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote in said State who are entitled to vote by the constitution of the same, recognized in said act, except as a punishment for crime. The constitution there referred to is one from which I have before quoted, the present organic law of that State.

Are the registration laws of South Carolina constitutional? Do they prevent the plaintiff and those situated like him from exercising the rights conferred upon and guaranteed to him? A registration law is not per se unconstitutional, but is the one referred to in the bill such as should be upheld by the courts? Does the State of South Carolina by this legislation deprive the plaintiff of any of the privileges to which he is entitled by the Constitution of the United States and of that State? Does it deprive him of his liberty by taking from him a right by which he can preserve that liberty? Does it deny him the equal protection of her laws by enacting a system of registration which does not protect but destroys his rights? If it does disfranchise him, are not his liberty and his property taken from him? If it does prevent him from voting (it is shown that he is duly qualified) for delegates to the constitutional convention mentioned in the bill, which may so change the organic law of the State as to affect his life, his property, his liberty, his franchise, does it not do him a grievous wrong, and by what authority? As pertinent to this I quote the words of Mr. Justice Swayne in the Slaughterhouse Cases: "Life, liberty, and property are forbidden to be taken without due process of law, and equal protection of the laws is guaranteed to all. Life is the gift of God, and the right to preserve it is the most sacred of the rights of man. Liberty is freedom from all restraints, but such as are justly imposed by law. Beyond that line lies the domain of usurpation and tyranny. Property is everywhere that which has an exchangeable value, and the right of property includes the power to dispose of it according to the will of the owner. Labor is property, and as such merits protection. The right to make it available is next in importance to the rights of life and liberty. It lies to a large extent at the foundation of most other forms of property, and of all solid individual and national property. 'Due process of law' is the application of the law as it exists in the fair and regular course of administrative procedure. 'The equal protection of the laws' places all upon a footing of legal equality and gives the same protection to all for the preservation of life, liberty, and property and the pursuit of happiness." (16 Wall., 127.)

It is not my intention at this time to state in detail the requirements and effect of each section of said registration law, but simply the result that I reach after a careful scrutiny of them all, aided as I have been by the exhaustive analysis of the same made by counsel. I find no warrant in the constitution for the certificate required by the registration law to be issued to the voter, the production of which is required at the polls or his vote is to be rejected. This is not registration which is simply the entering on the books or lists of voters of the names of those qualified under the constitution to vote, but it is an additional requirement to those mentioned in the organic law, not intended, I am constrained to believe, to facilitate the full, free, and legal expression of those entitled to exercise the right of suffrage. Such requirement is unreasonable, burdensome, and harassing, and clearly it impedes and abridges the right of the constitutional voters of the State to cast their ballots. The additional requirement that the voter moving from one place to another in the same precinct must surrender his old and secure a new certificate is without reason and vexatious, while the mode prescribed for securing a renewal thereof in case of loss is so cumbersome and peculiarly stringent that it likely fulfills its object in deterring the ordinary voter from making the effort.

The registration of voters closes on the 1st day of July preceding a general election, which is held in November following. What possible reason is there for this unreasonable course? During the four months preceding an election—the period voters generally devote to the examination of questions then to be determined and to the placing of their names on the voting lists when such lists are required—it is utterly impossible for any duly qualified voter to have his name registered, and necessarily results in depriving many of them of the right of suffrage. The only parties permitted to register during the four months preceding the election are those becoming of age during the period, provided they furnish satisfactory proof. The constitution says that the citizen who shall have been a resident of the State for one year and of the county in which he offers to vote for sixty days next preceding any election shall be entitled to vote at such election, and yet he is prohibited by this requirement from so doing. He has completed his one year's residence after the 1st day of July, but he can not register because the books are closed, and he can not vote because his name is not upon the books, and there is no provision by which he can prove to the election officers at the polls that he is a qualified and legal voter. This entire provision is most peculiar, without a precedent, and without defense even from the advocates of the law.

Why the books should be closed for months before the election and kept open for months after it is over, to the uninformed would be passing strange, and yet in the light of the recent history of this State and the discussion of this cause is easily understood. That such requirements are not only unreasonable but unconstitutional is shown by the following cases: Morris vs. Powell, 29 American Law Register, 839; White vs. Commissioners of Multnomah County, 13 Oregon, 317; Kinneen vs. Wells, 144 Mass., 497; State vs. Williams, 5 Wis., 308; Quin vs. State, 35 Ind., 485; McCafferty vs. Guyer, 59 Pa., 109; Green vs. Shumway, 39 N. Y., 418; Munroe vs. Collins, 17 Ohio, 666; People vs. Canaday, 73 N. C., 198; Cooley vs. Const. Lim., 753; Attorney-General vs. City of Detroit, 44 N. W. Rep., 888.

A careful examination of the registration enactment of the State of South Carolina—excluding the act of 1894—brings me to the conclusion that if a voter who was duly qualified and entitled to register in May and June, 1882, did not, on account of absence, sickness, inadvertence, or other causes, register when the books were open in that year that he was not only prevented from voting at the general election in November, 1882, but was and has been prevented—under the law—from voting at all elections held in the State subsequent to said election in 1882. This seems almost incredible, yet I think it is correct. The statement is appalling, the outrage stupendous, the result close to the borderland that divides outrage from crime. It is not necessary to discuss it further—likely the least said about it the better.

Does the act of 1894, the convention act, with its four sections relating to registration, cure the defects I have mentioned and render valid the former unconstitutional laws I have alluded to? In my opinion it does not. These sections refer to the old law—in fact, are to be considered as part of it, as amendments thereto—and they contain all the bad features thereof, including the certificates to be produced at the polls and the closing of the books many days before the election. They also add to the qualifications contained in the constitution relative to the residence of the voter in the State and county. And they make no provision for the registering of voters between the closing of the books and the election when their names have been omitted on account of absence or other usually sufficient reason.

Again, the applicant for registration must make affidavit setting forth his full name, age, occupation, and residence at the time of the general registration in 1882, or at the time thereafter when he became entitled to register, and also give the place or places of his residence since the time when he became entitled to register. This affidavit must be supported by the affidavit of two respectable citizens who were each of the age of 21 years on the 30th day of June, 1882, or at the time the applicant became entitled to register. Our most intelligent voters would dread this ordeal, this history of their movements for years, this statement of the different places at which they have lived, this securing of two reputable affiants, who must have been 21 years of age in 1882, or at the time the applicant arrived at voting age. With what crushing force, then, must it strike the weaker race, which is thus made to suffer by the stronger? How difficult for them to thus write out the books of their lives and have all the pages thereof attested by two witnesses reputable in the estimation of the registrar who is to judge them. In my opinion the fact that there still remains several days—prior to the election—during which the plaintiff may apply for registration does not, in the light of the allegations of the bill, the proofs tendered, and admissions made prevent him from asking for nor the court from granting the relief prayed for.

I was asked, in case any portion of the said registration laws should be found invalid, to eliminate the part so found and decree that the remaining section should stand. I have not been able to make the separation, for I find it all so interwoven as to render it impracticable, so far as results are concerned, and I can not winnow when there is no grain in behalf of those so treated. All interested in the welfare of their country and desirous of seeing its laws enforced should protest in order that public sentiment should no longer be dormant, but may by its activity rouse the community that has long suffered by such outrages to a realization of their cause, and to an appreciation of the beneficial results to be secured by the abolishment of the system that has caused them.

If we may judge of what the intention of the legislature was by the inevitable result of its enactment, as we are assured we can (Soon Hing vs. Crowley, 113 U. S., 703; Minnesota vs. Barber, 136 U. S., 313), then the one object that controlled the minds of those who formulated the enactment I have been considering was how best to abridge and destroy the greatest number of votes of the citizens of African descent, while at the same time interfering with as few as possible of the votes of the white race. The fact is that with a candor that was as frank as it was amazing this was virtually admitted during the argument of this case. It is evident that the effect of this registration system is to fearfully impede the exercise of the right of suffrage by the colored voters of the State of South Carolina. It to a great extent defeats their constitutional right to vote, and it seems to be its leading, I must be permitted to say its only object, the effort being to so legislate as to apparently respect constitutional requirements, but at the same time stab to the death the rights and immunities guaranteed by them.

Finding as I do that the registration laws of South Carolina are unconstitutional, and that their enforcement will deprive the plaintiff, a citizen of the United States, of the rights of a citizen of the same, I conclude that this court has jurisdiction of this case, and that the same is not a proceeding against the State of South Carolina, prohibited by the eleventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I find that the bill does present a question arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and that the plaintiff has not a plain and adequate remedy at law; that the bill is sufficiently verified and not multifarious. Under these circumstances it is the duty of the circuit court of the United States for the district of South Carolina to entertain this complaint—an instance in which duty mingles with inclination.

I have noticed during the progress of this case a disposition to regard this court as a foreign jurisdiction, much to my surprise and regret. This is as much a court of the State of South Carolina as is the circuit or supreme court of that State. The State of South Carolina assisted in forming the Constitution and making the laws by virtue of which this court was organized and now convenes. This court is and will be as careful and as jealous of the honor and the interests of that State as any of her citizens can be, and it hopes to merit their esteem by being worthy of it. A distinguished jurist of that State is my associate on the circuit and the Chief Justice of the United States is its presiding justice. Why such a court of the United States, convening in South Carolina, administering the laws of the nation and of that State, should be regarded as a foreign court is wonderful in the extreme and as strange as is the story relative to which it is about to enter its decree.

I will pass an order, as prayed for by complainant, restraining and enjoining the defendant individually and as supervisor of registration from the performance of any of the acts mentioned and complained of in the bill.

NATHAN GOFF,
United States Circuit Judge.

MAY 8, 1895.

[Opinion of McIver, C. J., of the supreme court of South Carolina, in the case of Matthew C. Butler vs. William H. Ellerbe and another, as fiscal officers of the State. 22 S. C. Rep., 425, 437. Rendered July 6, 1895.]

MCIVER, C. J. (dissenting). This is an action, instituted in the original jurisdiction of this court, for an injunction restraining the defendants, as fiscal officers of the State government, from applying the public funds in the State treasury to the payment of certain appropriations which, it is claimed, have been illegally made by the legislature. The particular appropriations claimed to be illegal are those made in the appropriation act of 23d December, 1893, for the pay of supervisors of registration, and for the pay of commissioners, managers, and messengers of elections, for the fiscal year commencing 1st November, 1893, and the prayer of the complaint is that the defendant Ellerbe and his successors in office as comptroller-general of the State of South Carolina be perpetually enjoined from drawing any warrant on the State treasurer for the payment of any of the said appropriations, and that the said Bates, and his successors in office as treasurer of the said State, be perpetually enjoined from paying any of the said warrants.

The ground upon which this claim is based is that the registration law, as it may be briefly termed for convenience, is unconstitutional, null, and void, and any appropriations of the public funds in pursuance of any of its provisions are without constitutional authority, and should be prohibited. Inasmuch as a copy of the complaint, or petition, as it is styled, should be incorporated in the report of this case, we do not deem it necessary to make here any more detailed or particular statement of the nature and scope of the action than has been made, in general terms, above, except to say that the action is brought by the plaintiff as "a citizen and resident taxpayer of the county of Edgefield, State aforesaid, possessing all the qualifications and laboring under none of the disqualifications provided in the constitution and laws of this State for the electors and officeholders thereof, on behalf of himself and other citizens and resident taxpayers of said State in the like plight and condition as himself as to qualifications and disqualifications, too numerous to be made parties to this action, and of other citizens and resident taxpayers of said State possessing the same constitutional qualifications as himself, and laboring under no disqualifications save those imposed by the acts of assembly hereinafter mentioned, alleged hereinafter to have been enacted in violation of the said Constitution."

The main object of the action, unquestionably, is to test the constitutionality of the registration laws of this State. But, before proceeding to the discussion of this main question in the case, it is necessary first to dispose of two preliminary objections presented by the attorney-general. The first of these objections, as we understand it, is that such an action as this can not be brought by a single taxpayer, either on his own behalf or on behalf of himself and others in similar plight and condition, upon the ground that no one can be allowed to assail the constitutionality of an act of the legislature by an action unless he shows that he has been injured either in his rights of person or property by such act, or, to use the language of the attorney-general in his argument, "The validity of a statute can not be questioned on the application of a mere volunteer or person whose right it does not specially affect." Inasmuch as the object of this action is to prevent the application of the public funds in the State treasury arising from taxation, in which every taxpayer has a direct interest, to an illegal purpose, it would seem clear that there is no foundation for the objection.

But we do not deem it necessary to discuss the question, for we think it has been determined by express adjudication in this State in at least two cases, Mauldin vs. City Council, 33 S. C., 1, 11 S. E., 434; and McCullough vs. Brown (S. C.), 19 S. E., 458, supported by numerous authorities elsewhere. (1 Pom. Eq. Jur., page 277, section 260; Cooley, Taxation, 704; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp., section 736, and cases cited in note; Crampton vs. Zabriskie, 101 U. S., at page 609, where Mr. Justice Field used this language: "Of the right of resident taxpayers to invoke the interposition of a court of equity to prevent an illegal disposition of the moneys of the county * * * there is at this day no serious question.") While it is true that the case of McCullough vs. Brown, supra, has been overruled in so far as it held the dispensary law unconstitutional, by the subsequent case of State vs. City Council of Aiken (S. C.), 20 S. E., 221, yet that case does not affect the point for which the case of McCullough vs. Brown is now cited, for that point was in no way alluded to in the Aiken case, and it is there stated that the case of McCullough vs. Brown, and those decided upon its authority, "are overruled in so far as they are antagonistic to the principles upon which this case is decided." (Italics ours.)

The next preliminary objection is that the plaintiff herein is estopped from assailing the constitutionality of the registration law by reason of the fact that he has for many years been in the enjoyment of the emoluments and honors of an office to which he has been chosen by elections held under the provisions of the registration law. How this can affect the right of the plaintiff as a taxpayer to institute an action to prevent the application of the public funds arising from taxation, in which he as well as any other taxpayer is interested, to an illegal purpose, it is impossible to conceive. The question here is not as to the validity of any election held under the registration law, for the record presents no such facts, and no proper parties for the consideration of any such question. The sole question here is whether the fiscal officers of the State government shall be restrained from applying the public funds to an illegal purpose; and that question turns entirely upon the result of the inquiry whether the registration law, in pursuance of which such application is threatened to be made, violates the constitution of the State. If it does, then, of course, it is null and void, and any appropriation of the public funds in pursuance of the provisions would be illegal and should be restrained. We see no ground whatever for the estoppel claimed.

Coming, then, to the main question in the case, we find that the question of the constitutionality of a statute requiring the registration of voters has been very frequently before the courts of the several States, and it seems to be settled that, even in States whose constitutions are silent upon the subject, a statute requiring a registration of voters is not per se unconstitutional, as such a statute is regarded as a mere regulation of the constitutional right to vote, and is designed to furnish evidence of the fact that the voter is possessed of the qualifications fixed by the constitution. But it seems to be as well settled that where the purport and effect of a registration law is to add to or to take away any of the qualifications prescribed by the constitution, or where its effect is to obstruct, subvert, or even unnecessarily to impede, the exercise of the right conferred by the constitution, it can not be sustained, but must be held an unconstitutional invasion of the constitutional right of suffrage.

These views are fully supported by the authorities elsewhere (for so far as we are informed we have no case in this State upon the subject), which, though not binding on us, are recommended to our approval by the reasoning upon which they are founded, as well as by the high character of the courts from which they come. (See Capen vs. Foster, 12 Pick., 485, reported also with elaborate notes in 23 Am. Dec., 632, frequently referred to as the leading case upon the subject.) In Kinneen vs. Wells, 144 Mass., 497; 11 N. E., 916, the question was as to the constitutionality of the registration law of that State, containing a provision forbidding any naturalized person to be registered as a voter within thirty days after his naturalisation, and it was held that such provision was unconstitutional because it purported to add to the qualifications of a voter as fixed by the constitution the further qualification that such voter should be possessed of the qualifications named in the constitution for a period of thirty days before he could be registered as a qualified voter.

The court, after noticing the further objection that such a provision was unconstitutional because it was not impartial, inasmuch as it imposed a restriction upon a certain class of voters—naturalized persons—not imposed upon any other class, goes on to say that even if the provision were general in its character, applying alike to all classes of voters, it would still be unconstitutional, because it added to the qualifications of a voter as fixed in the constitution the further requirement that he should be possessed of such qualifications for a specified time before he offers himself for registration, whereas every person who is possessed of the necessary qualifications at the time he offers himself for registration is entitled to be registered, without any regard to the length of time he has been possessed of the necessary qualifications.

In delivering the opinion of the court, Devens, J., uses this language: "It is not an unreasonable provision that all persons entitled as voters shall be registered as such previously to depositing their ballots, and if the legislature deems that such an inquiry could not proceed concurrently with the actual voting or election, and both be conducted in a deliberate and orderly manner, it is not unreasonable that it should provide that such an inquiry should terminate before the election actually commences at a previous time sufficiently long to make proper preparations therefor." Again, after referring to Capen vs. Foster, supra, as a leading case on the subject, he says: "But, while it is held to be within the proper limits of legislative power to provide suitable regulations for exercising the right of suffrage in a prompt and orderly and convenient manner, the court, speaking through Chief Justice Shaw, was careful to add: 'Such a construction would afford no warrant for such an exercise of legislative power as, under the pretense and color of regulating, should subvert or injuriously restrain, the right itself.'"

And again he says: "Every system of registration of voters contemplates that the registration will be completed and that the list of voters will be prepared before voting actually commences. No system would be just that did not extend the time of registration up to a time as near that of actually depositing the votes as would be consistent with the necessary preparation for conducting the election in an orderly manner, and with a reasonable scrutiny for the correctness of the list." In the case of City of Owensboro vs. Hickman (Ky.), 14 S. W., 688, the registration law there considered provided for a registration of voters in the city of Owensboro, to be made on the first Monday in July and the two succeeding days, at which those only could be registered who would be entitled to vote at the August election ensuing, and also provided that no vote shall be received at any election held within a year unless the voter's name is on the registry made in July. Held that the act was not a reasonable regulation of the elective franchise, and was void under the constitution of Kentucky, providing that every male citizen 21 years of age, who had resided in the State two years, and in the county, town, or city one year next preceding the election shall be a voter.

In that case the court, while conceding the power of the legislature to enact a uniform and reasonable registration law, used this language: "The true theory upon which those laws are based is that they must not impair or abridge the elector's privilege, but merely regulate its exercise by requiring evidence of the right. The right can not be impaired, but it may be regulated. * * * A registration law, however, will not be held valid which, under the color of regulating the manner of voting, really subverts the right." Without quoting from or referring more particularly to the cases on the subject, we think the foregoing views will be found to be supported by numerous other cases which we have examined, and to which we will simply refer by their titles: Dells vs. Kennedy, 49 Wis., 560; 6 N. W., 246, 381; Daggett vs. Hudson (Ohio Sup.), 3 N. E., 546; Brooks vs. Hydone (Mich.), 42 N. W., 1122; Attorney-General vs. City of Detroit (Mich.), 44 N. W., 388; Page vs. Allen, 58 Pa. St., 338; Patterson vs. Barlow, 60 P. St., 75; State vs. Baker, 38 Wis., 71; Edmunds vs. Banbury, 28 Iowa, 267; Perry vs. Whitaker, 71 N. C., 475; People vs. Canaday, 13 N. C., 198; Monroe vs. Collins, 17 Ohio St., 680.

In the light of these principles we will proceed to an examination of the provisions of the registration law of this State, with a view to ascertain whether any of the provisions of that law are in conflict with any of the provisions of our constitution. For this purpose we will first inquire what are the provisions of the constitution in reference to the right of suffrage. In article 1, section 31, the provision is as follows: "All elections shall be free and open, and every inhabitant of this Commonwealth possesses the qualifications provided for in this constitution shall have an equal right to elect officers and be elected to fill public office."

Section 33 of article 1 provides as follows: "The right of suffrage shall be protected by laws regulating elections and prohibiting, under adequate penalties, all undue influences from power, bribery, tumult, or improper conduct." In article 8, section 2, the qualifications of electors are specifically declared, as follows: (1) He must be a male citizen who has attained the age of 21 years. (2) He must have resided one year in the State, and in the county in which he offers to vote sixty days next preceding any election. (3) He must not be laboring under any of the disabilities named in the constitution. In addition to the qualifications of a voter thus specifically declared it is expressly provided that every person possessed of these qualifications "shall be entitled to vote for all officers that are now or hereafter may be elected by the people, and upon all questions submitted to the electors at any elections." But, in addition to this, in section 8 of the same article it is expressly declared that the general assembly "shall never pass any law that will deprive any of the citizens of this State of the right of suffrage, except for treason," and other offenses named in the section, "whereof the person shall have been duly tried and convicted." The provision of section 3 of article 8 is as follows: "It shall be the duty of the general assembly to provide from time to time for the registration of all electors."

The original provisions for the registration of voters will be found in the act approved 9th of February, 1882 (17 Statutes at Large, page 1110), and these provisions are incorporated in General Statutes 1882, beginning with section 80 and ending with section 103; and such provisions, as subsequently amended, are incorporated in the Revised Statutes of 1893 as sections 131–156, both inclusive. From a careful examination of the various statutory provisions thus referred to, it seems to us that the manifest scope and intent of such legislation was that there should be but one general registration of voters, to wit, that provided for in 1882, and that when the registration books were closed for that year a person who was then a qualified voter, but who had failed from any cause, whether from sickness, absence, or other cause, to register, was ever thereafter deprived of this right of suffrage, for there is no provision by which such a person could afterwards be allowed to register; and section 122 of the Revised Statutes expressly declares that "no person shall be allowed to vote at any election hereafter to be held unless he shall have been heretofore registered in conformity with the requirements of chapter 7 of the General Statutes of 1882, and the acts amendatory thereof, or shall be registered as herein required."

Now, on turning to the chapter of the General Statutes of 1882 and the acts amendatory thereof, we find that, while provision is made in section 94 of that chapter, corresponding with section 137 of the Revised Statutes, for opening the books of registration after every general election, not, however, for the purpose of registering voters generally, but "for registration of such persons as shall thereafter become entitled to register" (italics ours), there is no provision for the registration of persons who had previously become entitled to register. Hence it follows, necessarily, that one who had been a qualified voter and, as such, entitled to register before such general election could not then avail himself of the privilege offered by that section. The language found in section 94 of the General Statutes of 1882 is stronger than that found in section 137 of the Revised Statutes from which we have quoted, for in the General Statutes of 1882 the language is prohibitory and forbids reopening the registration books except for the purpose of registration of such persons as shall become entitled to register after the next election; and even as to this privileged class, their day of grace expires on the 1st day of July preceding a general election, something over four months before the general election, which is fixed by law for the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in every second year, reckoning from the year 1870. (Const., article 2, section 3; Rev. Stat., section 162.) It is true also that sections 96 and 97 of the General Statutes of 1882, as well as the corresponding sections of the Revised Statutes (140 and 141), do make special provisions for a certain class of voters, to wit, minors who come of age and are otherwise qualified, but this provision is confined to that particular class, and is, therefore, not an impartial provision.

It seems to us that this feature of the registration law, to say nothing of other constitutional objections, renders it obnoxious to that provision of the constitution above quoted which makes it the duty of the general assembly to provide from time to time for the registration of all electors. The language of that constitutional provision necessarily implies that its purpose was to require the general assembly to provide every facility for the registration of all electors, by providing for the registration of all electors "from time to time," so that, as far as practicable, no elector should be deprived of his right of suffrage, and that this law, which provided for one general registration more than ten years ago, and afforded no other opportunity to any elector, except those of a certain class, to comply with its provisions, even though his failure to avail himself of the first and only opportunity ever offered him to register resulted from sickness, absence, or other good cause, must be regarded as a violation both of the spirit and letter of the constitution.

Inasmuch as the right of suffrage is provided for and guaranteed by the constitution, and the general assembly is expressly forbidden from passing any law depriving any citizen of the right of suffrage, except in certain cases not pertinent to the present inquiry, it would seem at first blush as if any law making it a prerequisite to the exercise of this constitutional privilege that the voter should be registered would be in violation of the constitution as adding an additional requirement to those mentioned in the constitution for the exercise of this right. But, as we have seen, this is not the correct view of a registration law, which is a mere regulation as to the mode and manner in which this constitutional right may be exercised. The constitution simply provides that every citizen possessed of certain specified qualifications shall be entitled to exercise the right of suffrage, but it makes no provision as to how the fact shall be ascertained that a citizen claiming the right to vote is possessed of the required qualifications. It is, therefore, not only proper but necessary that the legislature should make such regulations as it may deem best for the purpose of determining the question of fact whether a person offering to vote is possessed of the necessary constitutional qualifications; and this, in our judgment, is the true office of a registration law.

It is also nothing but reasonable and proper that such an inquiry should terminate prior to the election, as it might greatly delay and possibly defeat the full exercise of the right of suffrage if it had to be conducted while the election was going on; and hence a law which provides for closing the registration books for such a length of time as would be reasonably necessary to enable the supervisor of registration to prepare and furnish the managers of elections at each polling precinct with a copy of the list of registered voters for such precinct would not probably be regarded as an unreasonable regulation. If, however, the law provides for closing the registration books for such a length of time before the election as would be manifestly unreasonable and unnecessary for that purpose, then such a law could not be defended as a legitimate exercise of legislative power; for, under color of regulation, it would have the effect of subverting and injuriously restraining the right of suffrage, and would in some cases totally defeat such right.

It seems to us that the law under consideration is open to this objection, for it provides that the registration books shall be closed on the 1st day of July preceding every general election, which, as we have seen, is fixed for the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in every second year, reckoning from the year 1870, and shall not be reopened prior to such general election, except for the purpose of enabling minors coming of age and possessed of the other necessary qualifications to register. Surely a period of four months is wholly unreasonable and entirely unnecessary for the closing of the registration books previous to a general election, and the inevitable effect is to deprive a certain class of citizens of the right to vote at such election, to wit, those who, being otherwise qualified, complete their required term of residence either in the State or county within such period of four months.

Take, for instance, the case of a person who, being possessed of other constitutional qualifications, only completes the required term of residence, either in the State or county, on the 1st day of October immediately preceding any general election. By this provision of the law he is deprived of his right of suffrage, although it may be susceptible of proof to a demonstration that on the day of election he is, and for more than a month preceding has been, fully possessed of all the qualifications of an elector as fixed by the constitution, simply because he had not performed an impossible act by registering prior to the preceding July, which, under the case supposed, it would have been impossible for him to have done, as he had not, prior to the preceding July, completed his required term of residence. It is manifest that such a law can not be defended as a reasonable and necessary regulation of the mode of exercising the elective franchise, and is in direct conflict with the constitution; for, in the case supposed, which no doubt has frequently occurred, the constitution guarantees the right to vote, but the registration law forbids the exercise of such right because the person in question had not shown, four months previous to the election, what it was impossible for him then to have shown—that he was then possessed of all the constitutional qualifications—notwithstanding the fact that there was ample time for him to have shown, if allowed the opportunity, that he was on the day of election, and had been for at least one month, fully possessed of all the qualifications of an elector.

Much complaint has been made in the argument against what may be designated as the certificate feature of the act, which, it is claimed, is peculiar to the registration law of this State, by which it is provided that the supervisor of registration is required to furnish to each registered voter a certificate in the form prescribed in section 142 of the Revised Statutes, which he is required to exhibit to the managers of election before he can be allowed to vote, and which forbids him from voting at any other polling precinct than that mentioned in such certificate.

We must say, however, that we are not prepared to condemn this act simply on account of that feature. Indeed, if the proper construction of the act is that the exhibition of such certificate is conclusive of the voter's right to vote, we are inclined to think that such a feature is not only unobjectionable, but preferable to a provision whereby the voter's right to vote is made to depend upon the fact that his name is found on the list of registered voters furnished the managers of election by the supervisor of registration; for in the former case the voter is made the custodian of the evidence of his right to vote, whereas in the latter case his right is made to depend upon the act of another, and he may entirely lose his right by the carelessness or incompetency of an official in making out the list, to say nothing of the danger of his being deprived of his right by the willful omission of his name from the list by a corrupt official. If, however, upon a proper construction of the act it is necessary, as is supposed by some—for which supposition the language of section 155 of the Revised Statutes affords some warrant—that to entitle one to vote he must not only exhibit his certificate to the managers of election, but his name must also appear upon the list furnished the managers by the supervisors of registration, then it does seem that such double requirement is unnecessarily burdensome, well calculated to impede the exercise of the right of suffrage, and sometimes entirely defeat such right, without any fault on the part of the voter; for, though he may have carefully preserved and promptly exhibited his certificate of registration to the managers of election, he yet may lose his right to vote solely because his name does not appear on the list furnished by the supervisor, for the act makes no provision for the publication of the list of registered voters prior to an election, whereby the voter can ascertain whether his name appears on such list and, if it had been omitted through carelessness or even oversight on the part of the official charged with the duty of preparing such list, have it inserted.

We do not deem it necessary to go into any detailed consideration of the various provisions of the act in regard to the substitution of a new certificate for one which has been lost or destroyed by no fault on the part of the voter, or of the provisions of the change of certificate where the holder changes his place of residence, even from one point to another in the same precinct, but must say that these provisions seem to be unnecessarily harsh and burdensome, and, whether so intended or not, are well calculated to impede and obstruct the exercise of the right of suffrage.

There is one feature of this act which is not without significance. Sections 151-154, Revised Statutes, expressly require that the supervisor of registration "shall, immediately preceding each election, revise the registration of electors and mark off the names of such electors as have died and such as have removed from one residence precinct, parish, ward, or county to another without notifying him and obtaining a certificate of transfer," and the other sections referred to make provision for obtaining the names of persons who, within the two preceding years, have been convicted of any offense disqualifying a person from voting, which names shall be erased from the registration list; but there is a singular absence of any like provision for revising the registration list "immediately preceding each election" by adding thereto the names of qualified electors whose names, from any cause, may have been omitted from the list. The revision thus expressly provided for is altogether one-sided, and can not, therefore, be regarded as either reasonable or just.

The features of our registration law which have thus been shown to be unconstitutional are so intimately connected with and so interwoven with its other provisions that the whole act must be declared unconstitutional. If those features which have been specially commented on are eliminated from the act, as they must be if in conflict with the constitution, then the effect would be that we would have upon the statute book a law in a form which never received the sanction of the legislature, and this can not be. To use the language of the Michigan court in Attorney-General vs. City of Detroit (Mich.) (44 N. W., 988), we may say: "This law being, in the respects pointed out, both unreasonable and in conflict with the constitution, and it being apparent that the legislature would not have enacted the other portions of the act had it foreseen that the courts would declare these parts unconstitutional, the whole act must fall and be held unconstitutional and void." We must therefore conclude that the registration law of this State is unconstitutional, null, and void, and hence any appropriation of the public moneys for the pay of the supervisors of registration for carrying out the provisions of this unconstitutional statute is without the warrant of law, and should be forbidden.

Mr. JENKINS. I agree with both of the learned judges that the law is unconstitutional, but disagree with both as to the reasons or points upon which the law should be held unconstitutional. I do not think that any lawyer, even in South Carolina, would have any respect for the opinion of any gentleman who would say that the law in question is constitutional. For the purposes of the discussion I will very briefly refer to the constitution and point out the defect in the law as I understand it. Article 8, section 2, of the constitution of South Carolina provides:

Every male citizen of the United States—

With certain exceptions not necessary to be noticed—

21 years or upward, resident of the State at the time of the adoption of the constitution, or who shall hereafter reside in the State one year and in the county where offering to vote sixty days preceding any election, shall be entitled to vote; in short, the only qualification in general terms required by the constitution is that the man shall be 21 years of age, a resident of the State one year, and a resident of the county where offering to vote sixty days.

It will not require any argument to prove that the lawful electors of South Carolina are by the requirements of the statute deprived of their constitutional rights, and that the statute does impair the rights of electors and imposes conditions and makes unreasonable and burdensome requirements not warranted by the Constitution; and I think the law is void for reasons following: First. As affecting electors moving into South Carolina from a sister State or from a foreign country, or from one county to another in the State; for by the terms of the constitution a person, otherwise qualified, removing into South Carolina from outside the State can vote if a resident of the State a year and of the county where offering to vote sixty days prior to any general election.

It will be observed by the terms of the statutes that the person seeking registration must be an elector when offering to register. By the terms of the constitution an elector should be permitted to register the day before the general election in order not to deny the elector the right to vote when moving into the State one year before or from one county to another sixty days before a general election. An elector who has lived all of his days in South Carolina is, if he moves from one county to another sixty-one days before election, as much affected by the statute as one coming in from outside the State, for the constitution in imposing qualifications for electors in this particular simply requires that he reside in the county where offering to vote sixty days prior to the next general election.

Neither of the learned judges so often referred to speak of this feature of the law. In other words, if at any time after the 1st day of July before a general election and sixty days before the same general election an elector of South Carolina and who has lived all of his days in the State moves from one county to another, he can not vote; for by the terms of the registry law he must be registered in the county where offering to vote, and his name must appear upon the registration books of his precinct on or before the 1st day of July, and the provisions of section 148 under the codification or 102 of the law of 1882 do not help out the voter removing from one county to another, and are really of no benefit; for the books were closed July 1 to every elector as far as registration is concerned, excepting those coming of age after July 1 or awarded a certificate on appeal.

No doubt it was intended to protect the voter removing from one county to another in the State, but taking the statute as a whole, providing explicitly for the closing of the books on the 1st day of July, it certainly disfranchises this class of electors. The section quoted only applies to such removals taking place more than sixty days prior to July 1, and affords no relief to the class who I insist are barred by these statutes. The same difficulty is met with in case a citizen of Georgia should move into South Carolina a year before a general election to be there held. By the constitution his year's residence would make him a voter; but he can not vote, for he has not been registered. He could not register, for he was not an elector on or before July 1, when the books were closed against him until after the election was held.

Second. Because the electors are required to go to the county seat to register instead of being permitted to register at the precinct where entitled to vote. This ground was not mentioned by either of the same learned judges, but I think the objection is good. It is an unreasonable requirement greatly abridging the constitutional right of the elector, imposing greatly upon his time and ability, an imposition not warranted by the constitution, and not a reasonable regulation of the elective franchise.

Third. In case of change from one polling place to another in requiring the surrender and cancellation of the former certificate, and such evidence as the register may deem proper as to the right of the elector to such change. The constitution does not contemplate that any such extensive power should be conferred upon the supervisor of registration. An American citizen ought to be permitted to change his place of residence at will without being compelled to disclose to the supervisor of registration his reasons for making the change when endeavoring to comply with the law to entitle him to vote.

Fourth. In giving any power whatever to the supervisor of registration to mark off the name of any elector for any reason, and particularly because the law allows it to be done without notice to the elector, and in requiring the elector, if his name is improperly stricken off, to apply within sixty days after the next following election to prove to the satisfaction of the supervisor that his name should not be stricken from the book. The only disability named in the constitution of South Carolina is in case of persons kept in almshouses, asylums, or of unsound mind or confined in any public prison. All others are electors, yet the law permits the supervisor of registration to mark off the names of electors who have removed from one residence, precinct, parish, ward, or county to another, those convicted of murder, burglary, larceny, perjury, or any other infamous crime, or duelling or petit larceny. The constitution does not disqualify even a murderer. As far as crime is concerned it is only those who are confined in a public prison who are disqualified by the constitution, but it will be observed in this particular that the registration statute imposes a great many disqualifications in addition to those contained in the constitution.

Under the constitution any man convicted of crime is still an elector as soon as he gets out of the public prison, but under the statute a very large number are disqualified. In order to vote an elector should not be required to prove a negative. The ridiculousness of it is seen in striking off the name of an elector reported dead. One person in the county can not keep track of every other inhabitant, but the register is informed that the man is dead; he strikes his name off the roll, when, as a matter of fact, he is not dead; but he has got to come up before the register and prove the fact that he is alive before he can vote. Every man entitled to register should be permitted to have his name remain on the registration book without reference to any subsequent disqualification to vote. This view is not suggested by either of the learned judges, but as far as the point is concerned I consider the objection well taken.

It will be noted that both of these same learned judges expressed the opinion that the law is unconstitutional for the reason that if an elector in 1882 duly qualified to register failed to register prior to July 1 preceding the next general election, to be held November 7 of that year, he was not only prevented from voting at the general election held in November, 1882, but has ever since that time been prevented from registering, and consequently denied the right to vote.

Perhaps I ought not to express my opinion as against the opinions of these two excellent jurists; but, however, I can not agree with them, and desire to express myself according to my own understanding of the law. The particular statute in question provides in brief that all electors of the State shall be registered, and no person shall be allowed to vote at any election hereafter to be held unless he shall have heretofore been registered in conformity with the requirements of chapter 7 of the General Statutes of 1882 and acts amendatory thereof, or shall be registered as herein required, and after every general election the registration books shall be opened for registration of such persons as shall thereafter become entitled to register on the first Monday of each month until the 1st day of July preceding the general election, when the same shall be closed until such general election shall take place.

A general election having taken place in South Carolina in 1882, the electors had until the 1st day of July to register. We were not informed when the law of 1882 took effect, but presumably on or about the 1st day of May, as both judges speak of the months of May and June in which the electors had to register, so that the books would be opened on the first Monday of May and the first Monday of June, and remain open, if necessary, to hear applications for registration until the 1st day of July. Those then not registering, if otherwise qualified, would certainly be permitted to thereafter register within the letter of the statute. Certainly it could not be presumed that the legislature intended the construction claimed by the learned judges; that is, Is a man who was qualified to register in May or June, 1882, but did not, forever disqualified? In this particular the law should be liberally construed for the benefit of an elector in the light of the constitution, so as not to deprive a voter of his political rights fully and clearly expressed in the letter of the statute.

Both of the judges condemn this feature of the law as they construe it in strong terms. One of them remarks "that it was a stupendous outrage, and that while the statement is correct, it seems incredible," and evidence has been offered to prove that the construction placed upon the law in this particular by the two learned judges is the construction placed upon the law by some of the registration officers of South Carolina. I can not agree that the construction is correct, and am loath to believe that the lawmaking power of a State would ever intend such a step, and I am satisfied that if so intended the general assembly did not accomplish their intention. When the law provided that the registration books should be opened for registration after every general election for such persons as shall thereafter become entitled to register, it must have meant to apply it to every person who was a lawful elector at the time the books opened, including those entitled to register in May and June, 1882. If not, what was the language used for?—if entitled to, but not registered in May or June, 1882, he would thereafter become entitled to register.

The law must mean something, and, if not construed as I understand it, would be absolutely useless, for according to the contention of the learned judges only those coming of age after 1882 and those moving into the State would be entitled to register; but there is an express provision of law for the registration of those subsequently coming of age, and if the general assembly had intended this provision of the law for the benefit only of those moving into a State after the 1st day of July, 1882, they would have said so in plainer and more unmistakable terms. Under the law once registered, always registered, unless stricken off, and as soon as the books were opened after a general election every person not registered and otherwise qualified for registry could register. However this may be, and however much we may differ as to the reason and the extent that the law should be considered unconstitutional, it will make no difference; and while I desire to express myself in favor of the unconstitutionality of the law, I do not want to adopt the entire reasoning of the two learned judges, but express my individual views of the question.

Conceding that there is ground for a difference as to the reason and extent, fair-minded people, qualified to speak on the subject, must admit that not only is the law unconstitutional, but that in proper cases Congress should so regard it and so act as to remedy any wrong. In my view of the South Carolina cases before the House it will make no difference whether the law is unconstitutional or not, but as the question has been raised, and is so very important, it must be disposed of as justice requires, and it ought to be done so fairly and understandingly. The mere fact that the law of a State is unconstitutional would not, in my judgment, be a foundation for Congressional action or intervention, and ought not to make any difference if an election is held under it unless a sufficient number be deprived of their rights by the law to affect the result. An unconstitutional law is the same as no law, but may be a barrier until removed in proper proceedings brought by an interested party whose rights are affected, but no one can complain of it unless deprived of some rights by reason of it.

Suppose the entire registration law of a State to be unconstitutional; in an election held under it for members of the Fifty-fourth Congress, no one is deprived of his rights. What action could Congress take in regard to it? None whatever, in my judgment. Concede that contests are inaugurated in every district on the single specification of the unconstitutionality of the law under which the election was held. Could the contestants be awarded their seats? I contend not; neither could Congress deprive the contestees of their seats and declare the State unrepresented. The case would be entirely different, in my judgment, if the unconstitutional law was so worded as to deprive one party or the other of a sufficient number of votes to overcome the vote of the sitting member, and if those disfranchised voters came to Congress with a statement of facts showing that they were electors entitled by the constitution of their State to vote, had applied for registration but were denied it, had offered to vote but were refused on the ground that they were not registered, and that if they had been permitted to vote would have voted for the contestant, Congress would not be doing its duty if it did not count the vote of the disfranchised electors and seat the contestant.

Certainly before a man can be heard to declare a law unconstitutional or have it set aside for his benefit he must show that the law or manner of its enforcement impairs his constitutional rights or that he has endeavored to enforce his rights under the law and been denied his constitutional rights. As applied to this case an elector can not remain inactive and absolutely refrain from attempting to register, or if denied registration refrain from voting, and then come to Congress and ask the House in a contest to count his vote. I do not mean to be understood as claiming that if the registration law be unconstitutional the elector must first attempt to register, because he might be permitted to register under an unconstitutional law, and if he could register under an unconstitutional law he has not been denied any of his rights. But where it is well known, as claimed in these South Carolina cases, that it would be useless for him to attempt registration, he certainly ought to go as far as he can be permitted to go in offering his vote, and then if denied the right to vote Congress should certainly count it upon competent evidence that he is a voter.

I can not think that when it is well known that the registration law is unconstitutional; that electors can refrain from exercising their rights, and then come here and ask Congress to do for them what they have not attempted to do for themselves, because it can not be known whether the same men would have voted if permitted to or how they would have voted. To attempt anything of the sort would be a dangerous exercise of power, liable in the end to do more harm than good, and it would be far safer to require a voter to take the initiative and go as far as the officers of election would allow him before complaining to Congress of the denial of his rights. It would simply be a case of another wrong. Two wrongs can not make a right. Congress would be as much in error as the election officers of the State. Congress is as much bound to observe the law as any other tribunal. They must support the proposition that every elector should be permitted to vote if he wanted to and have his vote counted, and not disfranchise electors unless entirely justified in so doing.

The power of Congress in this regard is very great, and should be fairly and honestly exercised in a judicial manner, and not as politicians would farm out appointments. I trust the time has come when the Congress will so act as to command the respect of all fair-minded people in the disposition of election cases, giving all interested parties to understand that it will always exercise its full constitutional powers in assisting to carry out the declared will of the people as expressed at the ballot box; that while it will not encourage unlawful or unreasonable contests, it will discourage every disobedience of the law, frauds, and intimidations. It is to be regretted that contests for seats in a legislative body have to be determined by the house where the membership is sought, and a tribunal should be erected in every State to dispose of all election contests, and when the National Government is interested some suitable person or persons should join the State tribunal in disposing of Federal cases.

The committee have endeavored to be governed in each case by the law and the particular facts involved in each case, and speaking for myself, I sincerely regret the condition of things existing in South Carolina as shown by the record, and earnestly hope for the education of the people and a closer conformity to the law as practically the only solution of this very threatening question. I have been speaking with reference to the constitutional questions alone, not considering or including fraud or intimidation, which, to my mind, present an entirely different question, and to aid me in determining the facts in each particular case I have not felt bound by the technical rules of evidence established for the trial of cases in courts of justice, but believe if there is a way of finding out how an elector voted that that vote should be counted just as the elector intended. Substantial justice requires that broad, equitable, uniform rules be laid down for the determination of election cases.

Another very important question arises in the case of Johnston against Stokes by reason of what might properly be called the state of the pleadings. The notice of contest contains fourteen specifications, and the contestee in his answer endeavors to raise the question of the insufficiency of the specifications, and in the opening part of his answer, referring to the insufficiency of the specifications, alleges:

ANSWER TO NOTICE OF CONTEST.

ORANGEBURG, S. C., January 14, 1895.

MR. THOMAS D. JOHNSTON.

SIR: The undersigned, contestee, protests that the notice served on him by you that you propose to contest his right to sit as a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Seventh district of South Carolina is merely a sweeping allegation that frauds were committed in said district at said election, as a result of which the contestant was defeated; that said charges are vague and indefinite, and do not, as by the law they should, specify particularly the grounds upon which the contestant relies in the contest, so that this contestee may be informed and know definitely what it is to which he is required to make answer and against what it is he is to defend; and as to such defective and insufficient paragraphs and allegations the contestee is not bound by the law to make answer, and will move the House, as soon as a resolution to that effect can be heard, to dismiss said notice, or such paragraphs or counts thereof as may be adjudged to be insufficient.

Second. And without waiving any objection to the irregularity and insufficiency of said notice, or any paragraph thereof, or the right to move that it or such paragraphs as may be adjudged defective and insufficient be dismissed, contestee says that the allegations of the first paragraph of said notice are not true.

The law requires the contestant in his notice of contest to "specify particularly the grounds upon which he relies in the contest." (R. S. U. S., section 105.)

There is no question but that if the law cited is to be fairly construed, every specification excepting the fourth is entirely insufficient. Not one of them would be sufficient as a pleading under any code or at common law. Not one specifies the ground with particularity. We will take the tenth and twelfth as a fair illustration of all except the fourth:

Tenth. That at the precinct of Beach Hill, in Colleton County, in the district aforesaid, the managers of election refused to receive the ballots of 300 or more legal voters who desired to vote for me, alleging as the reason therefor that their certificates of registration were for Ridgeville precinct; that the Beach Hill precinct and the said Ridgeville precinct are one and the same, the change being in name only, Ridgeville being now in Beach Hill precinct as Beach Hill formerly was in Ridgeville precinct, the metes and bounds being the same.

Twelfth. That at the precinct of Sumter, in Sumter County, in said district, the managers of election by allowing persons not registered to vote for you, while denying my friends and supporters the same right, by fraudulently abstracting from the ballot box ballots bearing my name for member of Congress which had been legally cast, and substituting and counting ballots bearing your name for member of Congress, by false returns of the votes cast and counted, and other misconduct of said managers, you were accredited at said precinct with 233 votes, and I was accredited with 65 votes, when a correct count and return and proper management would have shown that you received 65 votes and I received 236 votes.

A contestant has no right to assume fraud, make a general charge, and trust to the future to find evidence to support it.

Such general specifications imply that they are not based upon creditable evidence; merely speculation general enough to admit evidence if a sufficient number of parties can be found to testify in suport of the general wording of the specification without knowledge of the truth. The names of the persons should be given, and if any reliance is to be placed upon specification 12, the number allowed to vote not being registered and the names of the friends and supporters of the contestant, with the number of votes that were fraudulently abstracted from the ballot box bearing the name of the contestant, should be given. In short, the language is altogether too general to allow of any proof, and it is a fraud upon a contestee to uphold such general averments; for it deprives him of every opportunity to furnish evidence to defend himself.

The fourth specification charges that each and every member of the board of commissioners were Democrats. That one might be sufficient. The fluctuating decisions upon this important question in many cases open the door to fraud, and it is time that the practice was settled, so that when a notice of contest is served the contestee will know just exactly what he has got to answer and what proof is required. In some cases the House has gone so far as to hold that evidence can be received when there is no specification. Such practice is altogether too loose. The question has often been raised, and as it is meritorious it should be not only carefully but rightly considered.

In the case of Joseph Varnum, in the Fourth Congress, the House, after full discussion, resolved that the allegation that 5 votes were received and certified by the presiding officers which were given by persons by the law not qualified to vote at said meeting is not sufficiently certain, and that the names of the persons objected to for want of sufficient qualifications ought to be set forth prior to the taking of the testimony.

But in order to do the contestant no injustice, the case has been examined as though the specifications were sufficient, and we will proceed to examine the vote as returned.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
Office Secretary of State.

We, the State board of canvassers, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a correct statement, based upon the statements made by the county boards of canvassers and the findings of this board of the whole number of votes given for the office of Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress, held on the 6th November, 1894.

It is hereby agreed this page is to be considered as filed as a part of the testimony in the contested election case of Johnston vs. Stokes, Fifty-fourth Congress, Seventh South Carolina district.

April 6, 1895.

B. H. MOSS,
Attorney for Contestee.
ABIAL LATHROP,
Attorney for Contestant.

This gives the contestee a plurality of 4,702. The contestant claims the vote of the district, as it should have been received and counted, is as follows:

County.	Stokes returned.	Stokes deducted.	Johnston returned.	Johnston rejected.	Add Johnston.	Johnston not counted.
Lexington	1,394		340	543
Colleton	1,416	368	480		932
Orangeburg	2,729		477	2,860		229
Sumter	1,142		678	1,907
Berkeley	672		688	536		48
Strawberry Ferry				204
Biggin Church				102
Richland	8		427	430		265
Totals	7,361	368	3,000	6,572	932	542

Johnston's returned vote		3,000
Johnston's rejected vote		6,572
Johnston's to be added vote		932
Johnston's not counted vote		542
		11,136
Stokes's returned vote	7,361
Stokes's deducted vote	368
		6,993
Johnston's majority		4,143

The contestant claims that there should be deducted 368 votes from the vote of the contestee and that 8,046 should be added to the vote of contestant, which, if correct, would change the result, giving the contestant a plurality of 4,143. The claim is itself astounding on account of the large number of votes involved and the character of the evidence and arguments of contestant in support of his claim. This increased vote of the contestant is made up of three items or classes of votes—votes rejected, 6,572; to be added vote, 932; not counted vote, 542. If the rejected vote of 6,572 be counted, contestant will be entitled to his seat. If the vote rejected be not counted and the other two classes of votes of 1,474 be counted, it will not change the result; so the case turns upon the rejected vote. As this vote is so large and the questions identified with it so important, it demands careful consideration. The facts relied upon by contestant for counting the increased vote present legal questions not free from embarrassment. I will first address myself to what the contestant is pleased to call the rejected vote:

First. Can lawful votes tendered, but not received, be made available by either party?

Second. If the number be sufficient to change the result, shall the same be counted according to the intention of the voter and the contestant seated, or shall the seat be declared vacant and the rejected votes not counted?

Third. In either case what shall be competent evidence that the vote of a qualified elector has been lawfully tendered and unlawfully rejected?

Fourth. Shall any different rule be adopted in a case like this at bar where thousands of votes are involved and in a case where only four or five or less votes be involved?

While principles of law ought to be just, equitable, and uniform, and ought not to become of more importance in one case than another, it presents at least a delicate question when arising between a State and the Federal Government. In 13 Alabama, 805; 34 Cal., 273; 19 How. Pr., 245; 13 B. Munroe, Ky., 515, and Biddle and Richard vs. Wing, first session Nineteenth Congress, it was held that rejected votes can not be made available for either party. Elementary rules of evidence should be followed as far as possible, and when cases arise that necessitate the making of new rules the rule should be broadly and equitably formulated so as to be followed in all cases applicable, just guides in all parallel cases not to be departed from as soon as there is a change in the political complexion of the House, but acceptable to all honest people inside or outside of Congress.

Notwithstanding the respectability of the cases supporting the doctrine that rejected votes can not be made available for either party, I think it a safer and better rule to hold that when properly proved they ought to be made available for the party that the voter intended them for. It is said in some of the cases cited that to count the rejected votes would be opening the door to fraud and give designing persons an opportunity to control the election contrary to the wishes of a majority of the electors. To my mind there is no force in the position, and I think the very reverse, that to count the vote will promote the ends of justice and have a tendency to lessen fraud and make officers of election more careful, for it is much easier to get a vote out of the box than to get one in the box, as is plainly shown in this case: Two men offer themselves for the same office. If every lawful voter was allowed to vote, A would be entitled to the office by one majority; but the officers of election see fit to reject two votes. According to the theory of the cases cited, upon due proof being made of these facts, there is no election. Now, A ought not to be denied his rights by the unlawful action of the election officers, who were guilty of no fraud, but really intended well, but did not happen to consider the law rightly. If there is to be no election, he might not be a candidate again, and thereby would be defrauded of his rights, and it would be opening the door for fraudulent acts, because in all cases where the election was close election officers might by improper construction of the law exclude a good many voters—sufficient to change the result. In short, many excellent reasons can be given in favor of counting the votes, and to my mind no good reason can be given against counting the votes.

The argument that is made in some of the cases that the voting must all be done on election day has no force. The putting of the ballot in the box on election day is the best evidence of the intentions of the voter, and the rejected vote loses none of its strength when properly offered by a qualified elector from the mere fact that it is rejected and not counted until some subsequent time. It is what took place on election day that determines the right, not what may happen afterwards. If a qualified elector makes every effort required upon his part to vote and his vote is improperly rejected, it ought to be as effective as though it actually went into the box. If we determine to count the vote, it becomes necessary in this case to find what proof will be required to permit a vote to be counted, and I think it must appear by competent testimony—

First. When no particular reason is given for rejection, but rejected generally for no reason, that the rejected voter was a male citizen of the United States of the age of 21 years and upward, a resident of the State one year, and the county where offering to vote sixty days preceding the election.

Second. That he presented his ballot and offered to vote or excuses the presentation and offer by showing that he belonged to a class of excluded voters who went to the polls for the purpose of voting and would have voted if permitted to.

Third. That the vote was rejected on his offering it or on account of the ruling made as to the class he belonged to.

Fourth. For whom he would have voted.

It might be sufficient when a voter is rejected for a particular reason to negative the objection, and the other qualifications might be assumed in his favor. It seems hard to apply the same rule in a case where the election has been fair and only one or more votes have been unlawfully rejected by the officers under the mistaken idea that they were doing their duty and in a case like this, where over 8,000 votes have been rejected, and things transpiring apparently with the approval of a large element of the people and practically of all of the officers of the State from the lowest to the highest that ought to bring the blush of shame to the face of every honest man, and to make us seriously doubt the perpetuity of popular government, when it seems to be conceded that the law under which the election was held was so framed as to deny the right of suffrage to a very large number of a certain class of voters, and each officer of the law charged with the execution of the same seemed intent on enforcing it so as to absolutely exclude those the law was aimed at.

It seemed almost like a denial of justice to require the evidence of the rejected voter himself, or, what might answer as well, the evidence of a person who stood close enough to the ballot box to hear all that was said, and could testify that he saw A tender his vote and heard him say that he wanted to vote for the contestant, and that his vote was refused because he was not registered; and it should appear by the testimony of A, or some one else knowing the facts, that the rejected voter was a qualified elector of the precinct where offering to vote.

Hard cases make a shipwreck of principles, and while the power of the House is very great, and while I think we ought not to be controlled by technical rules of evidence, I believe it very safe to be governed in these cases by common-law rules of evidence, and do not think we ought to formulate a rule for the government of any particular case; but think that every case can well afford to be proven by well-established rules of evidence that have come down to us through the many years of our jurisprudence, and that the case should be ruled without reference to the numbers of the rejected vote. Without reference to the exceptions which have no application to this case the rule is elementary—that hearsay evidence is not admissible to prove any fact, and particularly is hearsay evidence inadmissible when the fact material to be proved can be established by witnesses who speak from their own knowledge.

The contestant seeks to prove the rejected vote through what they call lists and list keepers, and in order that no injustice may be done and the question fairly presented I will give a sample of what is offered as evidence and take the very strongest for the contestant as selected by him in his reply brief. After a careful examination of the whole case I can find but very little difference in the testimony of the list keepers, and the form of the list is alike in all cases, the only difference in the lists being the difference in the names and the number of signers. While there is a little variation in the testimony of the list keepers it is not sufficient to be material, and what is herein selected is the strongest that can be found in favor of the contestant. Here is the testimony of Mr. Ramsey, who was a witness for the contestant, and a copy of his list:

W. W. RAMSEY, Jr., being duly sworn, deposes as follows:

Q. What is your name, age, residence, and occupation?
A. W. W. Ramsey, jr.; age, 35; residence, Stateburg precinct, Sumter County; occupation, farming.
Q. Where were you on election day, the 6th of last November?
A. At the Federal poll, in Stateburg precinct.
Q. In whose interest were you there, if anyone's?
A. I was there in the interest of Col. T. B. Johnston, the Republican nominee for Congress from the Seventh district.
Q. If you did anything in his interest, state what it was.
(Counsel for contestee objects to question as leading.)
A. I kept a tally sheet or list of rejected voters.
Q. Have you the list with you? If so, produce it.
A. I have [witness produces a list].
Q. How did you secure the names on this list?
A. They were given to me by those whose votes were rejected.
Q. Was it possible for you while keeping the list to obtain a view of the ballot box, the poll list, the registration book, the managers, and the voting going on?
A. It was possible for me to obtain a view of the ballot box, registration book, but not of the poll list. I could see the managers and the voters as they deposited their ballots.
Q. Are the persons whose names you have on your list residents of Stateburg precinct?
A. They are.
Q. Do you know for whom they offered to vote?
(Counsel for contestee objects to question.)
A. They offered to vote for Col. T. B. Johnston, the Republican nominee for Congress.
Q. Please look at the list and tell us how many names it contains?
(Counsel for contestee objects to question on the ground that the list itself is the best evidence of what it contains.)
A. One hundred and forty-nine names.
Q. How many of these did you write?
A. One hundred and eleven.
Q. Did you see that day any ballots bearing the name of J. William Stokes at the polls.
(Counsel for contestee objects to the witness answering as to whose name the ballots, if any were there, bore, as the ballots would themselves be the best evidence of the name or names thereon.)
A. I did.
Q. Where were they?
A. When the polls closed, in counting the ballots there were several tickets folded together. The managers threw away the excess in that lot, and I got hold of one bearing the name of J. William Stokes.
Q. Who distributed the Johnston tickets on that day?
A. They were distributed by myself from the table at which I sat.
Q. Did you see anyone outside distributing Stokes ballots?
A. I do not recollect.
Q. Were you in Sumter during last year prior to the election on registration days?
A. I was.
Q. Were you ever at the supervisor's office on those days? If so, state for what purpose.
A. I was there for the purpose, if I could, to assist some voters in being registered.
Q. What was your success?
A. A failure.
Q. Why?
A. Couldn't get in the office because of the dense crowd which surrounded the door.
Q. Is it, or not, a notorious fact that in Sumter County Republican voters were unable to obtain an issuance change or renewal of registration certificates?
(Counsel for contestee objects to question, for the witness's information could only have been obtained by hearsay and report, and therefore incompetent.)
A. It is a fact, to my belief.
Q. Who assisted you in keeping the list of rejected voters?
A. John H. Douglass.

Cross-examined by Mr. REYNOLDS:

Q. What time did you reach the polls that day?
A. By my watch, twenty minutes past 6 o'clock a. m.
Q. Did you have that paper that day?
A. I did.
(Paper referred to being the list.)
Q. Where did you procure it?
A. It was given me by S. J. Bradley, precinct chairman for the Republican party of Stateburg.
Q. Do you undertake to swear that each and every one of the 149 voters of your own knowledge offered to vote on that day?
A. I can say that the greater portion of that number offered to vote.
Q. Can you undertake to swear what number of that portion offered to vote?
A. I can not say precisely the number, but the greater portion did so offer to vote.
Q. Can you say of your own knowledge why the greator portion on the list did not vote?
A. Because of not having registration certificates, as to some of them; others had, but because of change of residence and of failure to obtain renewals.

W. W. RAMSEY, Jr.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, after being read to deponent, this 20th day of February, 1895, at Wedgefield, S. C.

[SEAL.] W. T. ANDREWS, Notary Public.

I now give the testimony of Messrs. Waring and Johnson, who were witnesses for the contestant.

JAS. W. WARING, sworn, says:

Q. State your name, your age, your occupation, and your residence.
A. J. W. Waring; am 38 years old; am a farmer, and I reside in Lexington County, in about 1 mile from the court-house.
Q. State where you were on the 6th day of November last, the day of election.
A. I was at Lexington Court-House precinct, at the Federal box.
Q. Did you vote there that day?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. If you did anything in the interest of Col. T. B. Johnston, the Republican nominee for Congress for the Seventh Congressional district, state what it was.
A. I kept a list of all the names of those who voted for Colonel Johnston; I also kept a list of those who presented themselves to vote for Colonel Johnston but did not have registration certificates.
(Mr. Efird objects to the first clause of the answer because it is hearsay.)
Q. Have you that list with you?
A. Yes, sir; here it is.
(Mr. Efird, for contestee, submits the following question, which is objected to by contestant: Do you say positively that it was only three-quarters of an hour from the time you say you heard the conversation between Mr. Efird and Major Frye until Mr. Frye voted, or are you guessing at it?
Objection sustained, not being cross-examined upon any new matter brought out in reply.)

JAS. W. WARING.

[L. S.] J. A. MULLER, Notary Public.

A. W. JOHNSON, sworn, says:

Q. What is your age?
A. I am 35 years old.
Q. What position do you hold politically in Lexington County?
A. I am county chairman of the Republican party.
Q. Where were you on the 6th day of November, 1894?
A. I was here at Lexington Court-House, round about the polls.
Q. Did you take any special interest in the election of T. B. Johnston for a member to the Fifty-fourth Congress?
A. I did.
Q. What did you do toward that in way of special interest?
A. I appointed at this precinct here a clerk to take down the names of all those that they refused to let vote, or that did vote, that he could get the names of, and authorized the precinct chairmen at other precincts to do the same.
Q. At the close of the polls in the evening did you make any request of the managers of the Federal box, in behalf of T. B. Johnston, to allow you to be present at the counting of the vote, in such position as you would be enabled to see the count as they proceeded with the same?
A. Yes, sir; I asked them to let me come in and take down the vote of Mr. Johnston.
Q. Did they grant the request asked?
A. No, sir; they did not.
Q. In what building was the election held?
A. In Mr. Marrion Hannan's storehouse.
Q. Was there any obstruction at the door to keep the public from the view of the count being made in such way that the ticket being read by the manager could not be seen by the spectator?
A. The door was open, but there was a bar across the door that is used to hold the door shut when it is closed, and they were about midway the house, and we could not see what was on the ticket.
Q. Was there anyone present inside of the polls except the managers and their clerks at the time of the count?
A. No, sir.
Q. When you made that request to be allowed to be present inside of the building at the polls, was there any parties present outside besides yourself?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How far, in the judgment of your own knowledge, does Mr. Daniel Frye live from Lexington?
A. It is between 6 and 7 miles.
Q. Did you see Mr. Daniel Frye here on that day?
A. I saw Mr. Frye; I did not know his name was Daniel.
Q. You stated you had taken a special interest in the appointing of James W. Waring for T. B. Johnston at the polls at Lexington; what caused you to take that special interest?
A. Well, sir, we had no managers or anything else at the election, and I had been authorized to do that.
Q. Were you aware that all Federal laws relating to elections had been repealed?
A. In 1890 I know that they had asked for managers at the Federal election, and they were refused.
Q. In 1894 were they allowed?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you know that there was no Federal protection at the Federal boxes in 1894?
(Mr. Efird objects to question as leading.)
A. I knowed that the law had been repealed.
Q. Was that your reason for having these various appointments made to look after the interest of Mr. Johnston at the various polls, and get the names of those voters who were rejected?
(Mr. Efird objects to question as leading.)
A. I was instructed to do so by Mr. Johnston.

Cross-examination:

Q. Were you permitted to stand at the door and see the managers and clerk while they counted the votes?
A. Yes, sir; on the outside of the bar.
Q. How far were you from the managers during the counting?
A. I guess it was 5 or 6 feet; it may have been a little more and may not have been quite so much; it was about halfway of the building.
Q. Was there anything between the bar at the door and the managers to obstruct your view?
A. No, sir; there was a table, but it did not obstruct.

On this class of testimony we are asked to count the rejected votes, and the contestant supports the claim by a long legal argument and the doctrine of res gestæ is invoked in order to make this evidence competent. It certainly violates the rules that the very best evidence that the case in itself is susceptible of must be offered. The very best evidence would be the rejected voter himself, or, as I have said, what I consider to be equally as good, the testimony of a person who was present and saw the vote offered and rejected, and who could testify that the rejected voter was qualified and that as a part of the offer to vote heard him state who he would vote for. I can not think of any other way in which the matter can be proved. The testimony in the record is certainly hearsay and the doctrine of res gestæ will not save it. It is certain to my mind that if there were not more than 2 votes involved no lawyer could contend for a moment that this kind of hearsay testimony would be admissible or that the doctrine of res gestæ would help it out. Now, the question is whether the fact that there is a large number of votes involved makes any difference.

In the testimony of Mr. Ramsay there is nothing to justify the claim that a single vote can be counted. It is wholly hearsay and insufficient. There is not a word in it to show that anyone was really a rejected voter. It falls far short of what is required to show that a vote was unlawfully rejected.

The testimony of Mr. Waring is no better. It is true he says that 39 on the list offered to vote for Mr. Johnston. That is the merest conclusion. It is not such testimony as would justify any tribunal in holding that a lawful vote had been unlawfully rejected.

Johnson's testimony does not add to that of Waring. The lists, of course, can not be considered as evidence. They are not memoranda. It would be extremely dangerous to hold that such loose general statements should be regarded as evidence of so material a point, and if we are going to take the position that a lawful vote unlawfully rejected shall be counted, we ought to require that it be proved by competent testimony in order to admit the vote.

Not one of the men who signed the lists was sworn or was before the notary for examination, and not enough of them can be found to change the result who made a declaration sufficient to prove anything, even if the declaration could be considered as evidence. It was assumed that the Republicans were not to receive fair treatment and in many ways were to be defrauded of their votes, and these lists were kept in order to prove the Republican vote. If a contestant comes and asks for a seat in this House he must show, under the law by competent evidence, that his claim is good. The House can assume nothing. Two wrongs can not make a right. If the State officers have done wrong the injured party must prove it. The House must not do a wrong in order to rectify an assumed wrong committed by the State.

I can not bring myself to think that the lists and declarations made by the rejected voters can be received as part of the res gestæ. I have been willing to concede for the purposes of this case that the declarations of the rejected voter made at the ballot box as a part of his offer to vote would be competent. What he said afterwards as explanatory of what he had tried to do at the box is not evidence. What he failed to say at the box as a part of his offer to show he was a qualified voter would still have to be proven. It was urged in the argument, for the purpose of counting these rejected votes, that the declarations made by the rejected voter after he had concluded his efforts to vote, away from the ballot box, should be received as part of the res gestæ—a part of the thing itself.

Assuming what the voter said at the box as a part of his offer to vote to be competent evidence, the moment the voter left the box he left the res gestæ, and what he said and did subsequently is most certainly hearsay. In fact, it is my opinion that as soon as the vote was rejected the res gestæ terminated, and everything thereafter would be but hearsay. It would be a dangerous exercise of power for this House to call such evidence for any purpose. It was also urged that to receive the lists and other declarations as competent evidence would not be a substitution of evidence, but only a selection of weaker instead of stronger proofs. I will read from contestant's brief the strongest point of his argument in favor of the admission of the testimony:

No doubt it is true, as a general proposition, that the rule which governs the production of evidence in a court of justice is that the party offering it is required to produce the best evidence of which the case in its nature is susceptible. You will observe that the nature of the case is to be considered. Here a class of men, numbering thousands, were denied the right to vote, because of the nature, as well as the administration, of the registration law of South Carolina. To have examined each of these witnesses concerning each and all of the facts establishing his right to registration and to vote, disproving the existence of the constitutional qualifications, as the contestee insists should have been done, and subjecting the witnesses to the lengthy cross-examination which would have been given them by contestee's attorneys, would have prolonged the taking of evidence beyond the life of this House; and so it became incumbent upon the contestant to offer the best evidence of which the case in its nature was susceptible, and he did that by furnishing the written declarations of these men as to their qualifications, supplemented by the testimony of men who knew them to the effect that they were entitled to the right of suffrage. In speaking of this general rule of evidence, above stated, Professor Greenleaf, in the first volume of his work on Evidence, fourteenth edition, section 82, says:

"But where there is no substitution of evidence, but only a selection of weaker instead of stronger proofs, or an omission to supply all the proofs capable of being produced, the rule is not infringed."

We submit that the contestee's evidence was a selection of weaker instead of stronger proofs, and for the very best of reasons, considering reasons from the standpoint of existing conditions and not of theory. Hon. John H. Ostendorff, one of the contestee's witnesses (Record, page 101) testifies on this point as follows:

"Q. Why was it found necessary to make lists of rejected voters, also of those voting?

"A. Because of the repeal of the Federal election laws, which left the Republicans without any representation in the election booths, thus leaving the election absolutely in the hands of Democratic managers of election. At previous elections we had a safeguard in the person of a Republican supervisor of election, who remained at the ballot box, kept the poll list, and viewed all proceedings and was enabled to detec any unfairness or frauds by the managers of election. Hence the only guard or protection for us was to keep a list of those who said they had voted for Johnston and also those who said they had offered to vote for Johnston and were rejected. This was all we could do under the circumstances, the entire election machinery with all its powers being used against the Republican candidate and in favor of the Democratic candidate."

There is no evidence to the contrary in the record. In this connection we commend to counsel for the contestee this quotation from section 83, 1 Greenleaf on Evidence:

"All rules of evidence, however, are adopted for practical purposes in the administration of justice, and must be so applied as to promote the ends for which they were designed."

The application of these rules so as to promote the ends of justice will not reject the evidence which we are discussing.

I must confess the argument failed to convince me that the evidence is competent. It may be more laborious and expensive to take the testimony of so many men, but that will not justify the violation of the plainest and safest rules of evidence—rules adopted to promote justice and prevent injustice; rules that have the indorsement of ages, the approval of all courts and text writers wherever jurisprudence is known. My own mind is clear on the subject; but if any lawyer has a doubt when the question is first sprung upon him he has only to read the able brief of the contestant to satisfy himself that the testimony is incompetent.

The testimony of Mr. Ostendorff shows that the Republicans anticipated fraud, and substituted the keeping of the lists for an attempt to vote, and omitted to lay the foundation to properly expose the unfairness and frauds that were feared. And it is upon this class of testimony that the House is asked to count votes enough to seat the contestant. As I have said, the case turns upon what the contestant calls the rejected vote; for if there is counted for the contestant what he calls to-be-added vote, 932, not-counted vote, 542, it still leaves the contestee a plurality of 3,228. While fraud is alleged in general terms, and an attempt made to prove it, and no doubt many things were done that can not be approved of, yet enough has not been proven to make any difference in the result. Contestant in his brief takes the same view of the evidence by saying:

Owing to the fact that the whole machinery of the election was in the hands of the partisan friends of contestee, it is impossible to present direct proof of actual fraud in the conduct of the election at the various precincts, except in a few instances, and that was in most cases by admission of the different managers on cross-examination when produced as witnesses in behalf of contestee.

We are judging this case by the record, not by the cry of fraud that has come up from South Carolina for years and gone all over the land; and while no doubt, if what is told is true, there has been a deliberate attempt, according to the forms of law, to prevent the colored electors from voting, it is to be regretted, when so much has been said, that sufficient evidence has not been furnished to afford relief; but, measured by the cry of fraud in the case, it is not as bad as one would be led to believe. Here is a sample of the record, taken from the brief of the contestant:

Mayesville precinct.—In the town of Mayesville Republican voters were rejected without cause and when they presented certificates.

The circumstances attending these rejections are aggravating and mean.

We find that the managers, all Democrats, allowed 15 white voters, all non residents of Mayesville precinct, to vote (pages 379, 374, 375), and even one manager voted without a certificate (page 375).

Beginning at page 261 of the record, to page 268, inclusive, we find the testimony of 11 Republican voters who presented certificates, intended to vote for contestant, and were rejected by the managers.

It will be seen by an examination of the statutes cited that electors had a right to vote outside of their precincts (sections 142, (98), 143, 145, and 156). It is true that all or most all of the election officers were Democrats, but that of itself does not change the result. Common fairness would have suggested that the Republicans be given one member of each board. There is another aspect of the case worth considering. For over twelve years the people of South Carolina have acquiesced in these registration and election laws, and all of this time no elector of that State has been interested enough to bring an action to enforce registration or the right to vote, and thereby test the validity of those laws and determine their rights as electors.

Now one branch of Congress is invited to nullify these laws. It was said in the argument of these cases that it would not do any good to bring an action, as the State judiciary was absolutely under the control of the element unlawfully controlling the election machinery of that State. Chief Justice McIver was not, and I regret that some elector did not bring in the State court mandamus to compel the registration of his name, or bring an action to test his right to vote, and after the courts had concluded their action we could better tell whether the judiciary of the State would properly discharge its duty.

The judiciary is the bulwark of American liberty, and I place great reliance upon the courts, notwithstanding the judges are partisans. It will be a dark day for the Republic when the courts are under the control of men undermining the foundations of Government. It is to be regretted, however, that we do not have before us the opinion of the supreme court of South Carolina on these important questions. The manner of holding elections for Congressmen is within the power of State governments. While Congress has the power, it has never attempted to exercise it (section 4, Article I, Constitution United States), but has always left the manner of electing Congressmen to the States. The House can not interfere with the manner of holding elections in the States. The duty of the House is confined to determining whether the return has been impeached.

If what has been asserted in this case is true and can be proven, notwithstanding the contestee is entitled to his seat by a vote of the House, still Congress can inquire whether the State of South Carolina has a republican form of government. But the House alone can not make such inquiry. If what has been alleged and stated by the contestant is true, it is to be regretted, in the interest of good government, that it has not been proven. Freedom and purity of the ballot box must be upheld. No American citizen can afford to uphold fraud in elections, whether he be in the North or in the South. Matters are improving in the South. It has taken longer than it ought to to bring about the present state of improvement, and we can not afford to have it stop here. I trust that the South will fairly and honestly work out the great problems that have introduced themselves as a result of the war and do its part toward national unity and prosperity, which will never come until every American citizen enjoys unmolested his full political rights. The safety of the individual and the success of the nation depend upon a free ballot, a fair count, and absolute conformity to law. No one questions the loyalty of the South; but I want to say to our Southern friends that yielding to a lawful majority and obedience to the law will be the highest evidence of loyalty and fitness for American citizenship, and will largely aid in bringing to them desired prosperity. [Applause.]

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks,

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin has prepared certain matter in connection with this contest that I ask he may have leave to print without reading.

Mr. KEM. I call for the regular order.

Mr. JENKINS. Very well, Mr. Speaker; I will read the matter myself.

Mr. LACEY. I understand from your report, if the gentleman will permit me, that you find there were rejected something over 7,000 votes believed to be legal. Is that correct?

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman has certainly misapprehended the report.

Mr. LACEY. What is the number you think were illegally rejected?

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state to him that I shall reserve time at the conclusion of this debate to answer all questions of this character, and prefer not to be interrupted in the course of my argument to answer them just at this time.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask, also, what proportion of the various election boards had representation other than Democratic representation on them?

Mr. JENKINS. That is a question to which I will also refer later on. The answer to the question would largely now anticipate my views on the constitutional question which I desire to present.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before concluding, I wish to state to the gentleman from Iowa that every question he desires to have answered can be and will be fully and satisfactorily answered, I think, before this debate is closed.

I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment to submit a conference report?

Mr. JENKINS. Before the motion is put I desire to reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). The time of the gentleman will be reserved.

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey to submit a privileged report.

ADA J. SCHWATKA.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a conference report, on which I ask immediate action.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 710) granting a pension to Ada J. Schwatka, widow of the late Lieutenant Schwatka, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted insert "$20"; and the House agree to the same.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
DAVID G. COLSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. GALLINGER,
GEO. L. SHOUP,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement submitted by the House managers was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House having had under consideration Senate bill 710, granting a pension to Ada J. Schwatka, widow of the late Lieut. Frederick Schwatka, submit the following statement:

The Senate passed the bill allowing $30 a month.

The House amended the bill by inserting in lieu of $30 the amount of $17.

The Senate refused to agree to the House amendment and asked for a conference.

The House insisted on its amendment and agreed to a conference.

The conferees have agreed that in lieu of the amount proposed by the Senate, $30, and the amount proposed by the House, $17, that the sum of $20 per month be allowed, and recommend the concurrence of the House.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
DAVID G. COLSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to present a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 50.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following:

"That said commission is further authorized and directed to proceed at once to hear and determine the application of all persons who may apply to them for citizenship in any of said nations, and after such hearing they shall determine the right of such applicant to be so admitted and enrolled: Provided, however, That such application shall be made to such commissioners within three months after the passage of this act. The said commission shall decide all such applications within ninety days after the same shall be made. That in determining all such applications said commission shall respect all laws of the several nations or tribes not inconsistent with the laws of the United States, and all treaties with either of said nations or tribes, and shall give due force and effect to the rolls, usages, and customs of each of said nations or tribes: And provided further, That the rolls of citizenship of the several tribes as now existing are hereby confirmed, and any person who shall claim to be entitled to be added to said rolls as a citizen of either of said tribes and whose right thereto has either been denied or not acted upon, or any citizen who may within three months from and after the passage of this act desire such citizenship, may apply to the legally constituted court or committee designated by the several tribes for such citizenship, and such court or committee shall determine such application within thirty days from the date thereof.

"In the performance of such duties said commission shall have power and authority to administer oaths, to issue process for and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to send for persons and papers, and all depositions and affidavits and other evidence in any form whatsoever heretofore taken where the witnesses giving said testimony are dead or now residing beyond the limits of said Territory, and to use every fair and reasonable means within their reach for the purpose of determining the rights of persons claiming such citizenship, or to protect any of said nations from fraud or wrong, and the rolls so prepared by them shall be hereafter held and considered to be the true and correct rolls of persons entitled to the rights of citizenship in said several tribes: Provided, That if the tribe, or any person, be aggrieved with the decision of the tribal authorities or the commission provided for in this act, it or he may appeal from such decision to the United States district court: Provided, however, That the appeal shall be taken within sixty days, and the judgment of the court shall be final.

"That the said commission, after the expiration of six months, shall cause a complete roll of citizenship of each of said nations to be made up from their records, and add thereto the names of citizens whose right may be conferred under this act, and said rolls shall be, and are hereby, made rolls of citizenship of said nations or tribes, subject, however, to the determination of the United States courts, as provided herein.

"The commission is hereby required to file the lists of members as they finally approve them with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to remain there for use as the final judgment of the duly constituted authorities. And said commission shall also make a roll of the freedmen entitled to citizenship in said tribes, and shall include their names in the lists of members to be filed with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. And said commission is further authorized and directed to make a full report to Congress of leases, tribal and individual, with the area, amount, and value of the property leased, and the amount received therefor, and by whom and from whom said property is leased, and is further directed to make a full and detailed report as to the excessive holdings of members of said tribes and others.

"It is hereby declared to be the duty of the United States to establish a government in the Indian Territory which will rectify the many inequalities and discriminations now existing in said Territory and afford needful protection to the lives and property of all citizens and residents thereof.

"Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians: That all the interest due the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians on March 3, 1896, is hereby appropriated to be paid at once in cash per capita, and hereafter all interest on the permanent fund of said Indians after deducting the amount expended for education, shall be paid in cash per capita on the 1st day of November of each year.

"Seneca Nation of Indians: That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to ascertain and report to Congress a detailed statement of all the leases made and entered into by the Seneca Nation of Indians with all persons or corporations of all lands in the Allegany Indian Reservation, in the State of New York, giving an itemized statement of each and every lease now in existence or force, with the date and terms of each lease and amount or amounts due on each lease."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 64, 69, and 70 the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

J. S. SHERMAN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
GEO. C. PENDLETON,
Managers on the part of the House.

R. F. PETTIGREW,
H. M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

STATEMENT TO ACCOMPANY CONFERENCE REPORT NO. 4 ON INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 66.

Senate amendment 37 is agreed to with an amendment. As passed by the Senate, it provided simply for the continuance of the Dawes Commission, making an appropriation therefor. As agreed to in conference, it gives the Commission authority to determine the question of citizenship, where the question is voluntarily submitted to it, with the right of either party to appeal to the United States court; it confirms the rolls of citizenship as they exist to that extent only, and requires the Commission to make a complete roll from the original roll and the additions within six months. It gives the Commission authority to administer oaths, issue process, etc., in the execution of their duty. It also provides that the Commission shall ascertain and make full and detailed report to Congress in reference to leases in the Indian Territory; and lastly, it declares it to be the duty of the United States to establish a government in said Territory. It also makes provision as to the interest due the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians, and for a report as to the leases of the lands of the Seneca Indians. Neither proposition involves any appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, this report is not a final report, and it does not dispose of the two questions which are most mooted, to wit, the question of sectarian schools and the Old Settlers' claims. Those questions are still in conference. I move that this report be adopted and that a further conference be ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, I move to further insist and agree to a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the former conferees.

VETO MESSAGE—BENJAMIN F. JONES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill numbered 7161, entitled "An act for the relief of Benjamin F. Jones."

This bill directs the payment of $50 to the beneficiary, late postmaster at Beauregard, Miss., or to his order, of the sum of $50, in full compensation for services and expenses in carrying and distributing the mails between Wesson and Beauregard, in the State of Mississippi, in 1883.

It appears from the report of the House committee recommending the passage of this bill that on April 22, 1883, while Mr. Jones was postmaster at Beauregard, a cyclone destroyed every building in the place, including that in which the post-office was kept. That in consequence of this disaster the mails for Beauregard were for a period of thirty-five days and until May 27, 1883, deposited at Wesson, 1 mile distant. That during that time it became necessary to transport such mails from Wesson to Beauregard, and that the postmaster caused this to be done, at an expense of $97.

A report from the Postmaster-General discloses the fact that this claim was presented to the Department in 1884 and was rejected on the ground that if the service was performed as alleged it was not authorized or directed by the Department.

In 1885 a suit was instituted against this postmaster and his sureties for a balance due the Government from him on his official accounts for the quarter ending June 30, 1883.

It will be observed that this quarter covered the period within which the alleged services were performed.

In the suit referred to a judgment was recovered by the Government against the postmaster for $190.45, being the balance found due from him. This judgment still remains unpaid.

In this condition of affairs it is quite plain that in fairness and justice no appropriation should be made in favor of the claimant.

It is the opinion of the Auditor of the Post-Office Department that even if this bill became a law, payment of the money appropriated should be withheld under a section of the Revised Statutes which provides:

"No money shall be paid to any person for his compensation who is in arrears to the United States until he has accounted for and paid into the Treasury all sums for which he may be liable."

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 26, 1896.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that this message be printed, and that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SPENCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE OVER MISSOURI RIVER, ST. CHARLES, MO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5675) authorizing the construction of a wagon and motor bridge over the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., with Senate amendments thereto.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. TRELOAR. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. TRELOAR, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TITLE TO LANDS, HOMESTEAD ENTRIES, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1436) to quiet title to lands in persons who purchased the same in good faith, without notice and for a valuable consideration, and to enable the Government to issue patents on such lands, and that commutations of homestead entries shall take effect from date of settlement and not from date of entry, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. LACEY. I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion of Mr. LACEY was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD INDEMNITY LANDS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 2221) for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands.

The conference report was read.

[For text of the conference report see House proceedings of May 20.]

Mr. LACEY. I move to agree to the conference report. My colleague upon the committee [Mr. MCRAE] has some objection to make to it, and I should like to yield to him such time as he may need to present his objection. How much time will the gentleman require?

Mr. MCRAE. I do not want very much time, but I want the right to make a motion.

Mr. LACEY. I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE].

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I stated the principal objection I have to this conference report when it was prematurely presented the other day. To granting relief to all settlers who had filed or entered, as was first proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TOWNE], I will make no objection. But this conference substitute for the two bills, one passed by the Senate and the other by the House, ignores a requirement and regulation that I conceive to be important and essential in the homestead law. I do not believe that such was intended by the gentlemen who have signed this report, and therefore I think the report should be rejected and the conference committee instructed to make the correction necessary to prevent the error.

The act of October 1, 1890, which first sought to relieve these settlers, did not apply to any who had not filed upon or entered under the preemption or homestead law, and in addition to that it required as a test of good faith not less than three months' continuous residence prior to final proof. The fact that the settlers have not complied with that act shows that they do not want the lands for homes, but to sell. This bill requires no residence whatever for commutation. I doubt the wisdom of yielding that, but I will not press that point except to say that it has always been required in such laws heretofore.

I will, however, pass that; for the principal objection I make is that it allows squatters on the public domain to count, for the purpose of commuting, the time they may have occupied the land before they made entry. As long as no one applies to enter occupied land the Government will not dispossess a squatter, but he gets no right to take under the homestead law by simply getting on the land. I will ask the Clerk to read what is required of a settler before he can enter under that law.

The Clerk read as follows:

To obtain a homestead the party should select and personally examine the land and be satisfied of its character and true description.

He must file an application stating his name, residence, and post-office address, and describing the land he desires to enter, and make affidavit that he is not the proprietor of more than 160 acres of land in any State or Territory; that he is a citizen of the United States, or that he has filed his declaration of intention to become such, and that he is the head of a family, or over 21 years of age, as the case may be; that his application is honestly and in good faith made for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation, and not for the benefit of any other person, persons, or corporation, and that he will faithfully and honestly endeavor to comply with all the requirements of law as to settlement, residence, and cultivation necessary to acquire title to the land applied for; that he is not acting as agent of any person, corporation, or syndicate in making such entry, nor in collusion with any person, corporation, or syndicate to give them the benefit of the land entered, or any part thereof, or the timber thereon; that he does not apply to enter the same for the purpose of speculation, but in good faith to obtain a home for himself, and that he has not directly or indirectly made, and will not make, any agreement or contract in any way or manner with any person or persons, corporation, or syndicate whatsoever by which the title which he might acquire from the Government of the United States should inure in whole or in part to the benefit of any person except himself; and, further, that since August 30, 1890, he has not entered under the land laws of the United States, or filed upon, a quantity of land agricultural in character, and not mineral, which, with the tracts now applied for, would make more than 320 acres, and that he has not theretofore had the benefit of the homestead laws, and must pay the legal fee and that part of the commissions which is payable when entry is made.

On compliance by the party with the foregoing requirements the receiver will issue his receipt for the fee and that part of the commissions paid, a duplicate of which he will deliver to the party. The matter will then be entered on the records of the district office and reported to the General Land Office.

Mr. McRAE. Now, Mr. Speaker, a sworn application of this character must be made and the land office fees paid before any settler can make an entry under the homestead law.

Mr. LACEY. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. If I understand your objection to this bill, it is that it allows these persons who took possession and who made no filing to have the benefit of the law?

Mr. McRAE. In the main, that is my objection. I am told that so far as these settlers are concerned, it was only intended to give this right to those who had made entries or filings, but the bill itself does not provide for that. It provides that "those persons who for the period of six months settled upon, improved, and cultivated any of said lands with a view of entering." Shall Congress grant people who go upon the public lands as squatters with a view of entering the same right as those who have entered? If so, then there is no necessity for entry, and all that a man has to do is to occupy and cultivate public land.

Shall we say that he must not pay the fees or give the land office notice that he intends to take it? If you are willing to say that because a settler has gone on the public land he has a right to hold it indefinitely without entry at the land office, then what use have we for land offices? Will you make the settler the judge of his own qualifications, and allow him to segregate the land he wants from the public domain without any record of it? There is no part of the homestead law that does not serve a wise purpose; and it requires every applicant to swear that he takes the land for actual settlement and cultivation and not for speculation; and the time he is required to reside upon it does not begin to run until the payment of the land office fees and the issue of the receiver's receipt. This bill also reduces the period of commutation from fourteen to six months as to homesteads and revives the repealed preemption law, with a reduction to the same period in favor of settlers who had no legal status at the time these changes were made. No preemptor could under that law enter without at least one year's residence on the land after filing, and if it was on unoffered land it required thirty months before he could get title. This bill, in short, gives these settlers who cultivated certain lands for six months the right to make cash entry of any other public land at $1.25 per acre.

Mr. Speaker, this error, I think, was committed by the committee of conference in confusing preemption and homestead entries. Under the homestead law no entry can be made until the settler has made an affidavit and paid the fees. Under the preemption law the settler was required to make a settlement before he could make his filing. If it was upon offered lands, then within thirty days after his settlement he was required to make his filing; and if upon unoffered lands, within three months from settlement. But the entry under the preemption law was not made until he made the final proof and payment. This could be done in the case of offered lands within twelve months from the settlement; but if unoffered land, then within thirty months. Under the homestead law the entry is made by the applicant declaring under oath that he wants a certain piece of land for a home, showing his qualifications for it and paying the commissions. The settlement and cultivation must in such cases follow the entry and at the end of five years be proven by at least two witnesses. In the case of preemption the settlement must precede the filing. In the case of homestead no payment, except fees, is required unless commuted. In preemption the full Government price and fees were required in all cases. One is a homestead entry, the other is a cash entry. It is perfectly clear to my mind that the person who drew this bill did not understand the proper distinction between preemption entries and homestead entries, and in trying to combine the two in general language he made a blunder that may make serious trouble unless corrected.

I have no disposition to antagonize this measure. In fact, I want it passed, in proper form, for the sake of my friend who introduced it. His constituents who have made entries or filings are entitled to it, but I do not believe that this House ought to commit itself to the dangerous principle of legalizing the right of squatters upon the public domain who have paid nothing, assumed no obligation to settle, and who have complied with no part of the law and regulations. I will therefore ask the House to vote down this report and give the conference committee the instructions which I send to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following language in section 1:

"Within the period aforesaid for the space of six months settled upon, improved, and cultivated any of said indemnity lands with a view of entering the same under the homestead or preemption laws, being competent to make such entries, and who were not permitted to make such entries, upon establishing these facts before the register and receiver of the local land office, in such mode and under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, shall be allowed to enter under the homestead laws of the United States a quantity of land of the unappropriated public lands of the United States subject to homestead entry, equal in amount to the land settled upon, improved, and cultivated, as aforesaid, and under the homestead entry so made shall, when making proof and final entry, receive credit for the settlement, improvement, and cultivation made upon the said indemnity land as aforesaid: Provided, That the law in force in 1889 governing the commutation of homestead entries shall apply to the commutation of entries under this section."

And insert the following:

"In good faith settled upon, improved, and lived six months upon land in said second indemnity belt after having made filing or entry of the same, and who, for any reason other than voluntary abandonment, failed to make final proof thereon, may, within two years after the passage of this act, transfer their claims to any vacant surveyed Government land subject to entry under the homestead laws, and make proof therefor, in the same way as proof might have been made for their original entries if the same had not been canceled; and in making such proof credit shall be given for the period of their bona fide residence and the amount of their improvements upon their claims in said indemnity belt as if the same had been made upon the claims to which the transfer is made. Payment for such final selections shall be made as under existing laws. The provisions of this act shall be carried into effect under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, it can only delay the passage of this bill a very short time to reject this report and give these instructions. In this way you will protect everyone who has made a filing or entry and lived upon this land for the time required under the preemption or homestead law.

Mr. LACEY. But would it not cut out those who have made no filings or to whom filing was denied?

Mr. McRAE. It ought to cut them out. The settler who did not enter under the homestead law and made no filing under the preemption law and paid nothing, lost nothing. If he applied and was denied, then he certainly could not complain that he was misled. If he did not make an entry under the homestead law, he has no legal status and ought not to be given this valuable right. If you adopt the principle of saying to every man who has squatted upon the public lands, "We will give you the right to go upon any other piece of land and have counted in your favor there the time that you have occupied the public lands as a squatter," you will find no end to the trouble and harassment to every land district in this country, and it will be the means of depriving many a poor man of a home.

The only principle upon which you can justify this bill is that, as the Government declared these lands open to settlement and permitted homesteaders to make entries, it is the duty of the Government to protect those settlers who complied with the requirements of the law. But as to the man who settled and cultivated the land, but refused to comply with the law as to entry and payment, there is no obligation to give him a right equal in effect to land scrip which can be put upon any piece of land subject to homestead which he may find, and by paying $1.25 an acre and proving that he had settled upon and cultivated another piece of land for six months get title. The Government has not deceived him and owes him nothing. The precedent is extremely dangerous, and I warn the House against it.

Mr. LACEY. There is no scrip in this proposition.

Mr. McRAE. No; but it is about as dangerous as scrip. You reduce the period of commutation to six months and provide that every man who proves a residence for six months on any of these indemnity lands shall have the right to take any piece of public land in the United States which is subject to homestead. To illustrate: If an entry in any one of the land districts of the United States is rejected for technical reasons, and the land is declared to be public, these preferred citizens can say, "I will take this piece of land"; and all he has to do is to prove that he improved and cultivated for six months any land within the indemnity limits of the Northern Pacific grant, etc. It is the right to make a cash entry which is denied to other people. We have declared that public lands should be held in trust for actual settlers.

I hope the report will be rejected and the instructions I propose adopted, and if that is done I am satisfied that the conference committee in less than thirty minutes can agree to a proper measure for the benefit of these settlers. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TOWNE] wisely proposed by his bill to give this right only to settlers who had made entries or filings, and never until to-day has it been admitted that it was sought to give this privilege to anybody else. Some of the conferees who signed this report have stated that they did so believing that it was the final proof in homestead cases which was the entry, and that a homestead entry was not made until the final proof was made.

Mr. LACEY was recognized.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. There is no quorum present.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PEFFER. Congress has several times recently shown a disposition to encourage inventions for the purpose of aerial navigation. I have here a petition from James Seldon Cowdon, a resident of this city (a citizen of Virginia, I think), which is very brief, and I will read it, as I can perhaps get the sense of it to the Senate better by reading it than by stating it.

To the Congress of the United States:

Your undersigned petitioner would most respectfully apply to your honorable body for such financial encouragement as you may deem appropriate in the development of his plan of navigating the air upon the principle of "a live fish in the water" rather than upon the principle of "a live bird in the air."

Your petitioner would further state that he is financially unable to perfect his invention, but with, say, $15,000 and four months' time, he can construct an air ship that will move through the air at the will of the operator, and not otherwise, when finally perfected.

Your petitioner would still further ask this confidence and consideration at your hands in view of the fact that the Congress of the United States did appropriate the sum of $30,000 for the development of the Morse system of the magnetic telegraph.

And he will ever pray.

JAMES SELDON COWDON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 26, 1896.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburg, Pa., remonstrating against the adoption of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law, as proposed by House bill No. 8536 and Senate bill No. 2967; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions adopted by the legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts relative to an amendment to the Constitution of the United States enabling Congress to enact laws regulating the hours of labor; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Commonwealth of Massachusetts. In the year 1896.]

Resolutions relative to an amendment to the Constitution of the United States enabling Congress to enact laws regulating the hours of labor.

Resolved, That in the opinion of the general court of Massachusetts it is desirable that the Constitution of the United States should be so amended as to place it clearly within the power of Congress to enact laws regulating the hours of labor in the several States according to some uniform system; and the Senators and Representatives of this Commonwealth in Congress are hereby requested to take such action as may be necessary in order to bring the question of so amending the Constitution before Congress.

Resolved, That properly attested copies of these resolutions be forwarded by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, and also to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth.

In house of representatives, adopted May 5, 1896.
In senate, adopted in concurrence May 15, 1896.
A true copy. Attest:

WM. M. OLIN,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2118) to protect public forest reservations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

Mr. HALE. Is this in the regular order of morning business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not a part of the morning business. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. The Chair submits the request of the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. I will state to the Senator from Maine that the bill is an important one, and it met the full approval at the last Congress and at the present Congress of the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game. It is important to pass the bill. It will not lead to any discussion, I think.

Mr. HALE. Is it a long bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It comprises seven pages, the Chair is advised.

Mr. HALE. It is very important to bring up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill and get it out of the way.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no further petitions and memorials, the reports of standing and select committees are next in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 3230) to provide for the reorganization of the consular and diplomatic service; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 3232) to amend section 2502 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 3233) for the relief of Henry A. F. Worth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

JEROME KUNKEL.

On motion of Mr. BAKER, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the papers pertaining to the bill (S. 254) for the relief of Jerome Kunkel, and that they be sent to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives.

WILLIAM B. MATCHETT.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the subject of the petition and papers in the claim of William B. Matchett against the Government of Venezuela was indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of William B. Matchett be withdrawn from the files of the Senate under the rules of the Senate.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the expense incurred by the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs in visiting Bethlehem, Pa., in pursuance of the duty imposed on said committee by resolutions of the Senate dated, respectively, December 31, 1895, and February 13, 1896, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HALE. I will yield to morning business. I can not yield for any other purpose, because I have already declined to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURROWS. I will state to the Senator from Maine that it is the case of a House bill passed by the Senate with sundry amendments. I entered a motion some time ago to reconsider the action of the Senate in passing the bill with a view to securing a disagreement to the amendments. It will take but a moment to dispose of it.

Mr. HALE. It is in the nature of morning business, and I will yield.

Mr. BURROWS. It is a privileged motion, I understand.

Mr. HALE. I yield for that purpose to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BURROWS. The House passed the bill (H. R. 6256) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish to George F. Fuller Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Manistique, Mich., a condemned cannon. The Senate passed the bill with sundry amendments, adding a donation of condemned cannon at other points. I have conferred with the various Senators who proposed the amendments, and they have kindly consented that the bill may be reconsidered and the amendments disagreed to, and that then the bill shall pass without amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan, to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. BURROWS. I now ask that the vote by which the amendments were concurred in be reconsidered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote will be reconsidered. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were nonconcurred in.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the title will be disagreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the report of the committee of conference on the naval appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7542) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 23, 30, and 55.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 50, and 54, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of the matter inserted by said amendment the following: "And the Secretary of the Navy shall detail a clerk of class 1 to perform clerical services in the Navy Department necessary to carry on the work incident to this appropriation"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the comma (,) after the word "laboratory," in line 3, page 22 of the bill, and restore the matter stricken out by said Senate amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in lines 4 and 5 of said amendment, the words "made for the same," and insert in lieu thereof the word "completed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the words inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following, "at $2,500 each; one of English studies, history, and law (after thirty years' service), $2,500"; and strike out, in lines 22 and 23, page 36 of the bill, the words "at $2,500 each"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 2, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, and 53 the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

EUGENE HALE,
M. S. QUAY,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. A. BOUTELLE,
JNO. B. ROBINSON,
AMOS J. CUMMINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the report be concurred in.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments still in disagreement and ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. QUAY. Unless the Senator from Maine objects, I should be glad to have another vote of the Senate on the question of the battle ships in the way of instruction to the new committee of conference.

Mr. HALE. I have been in conference with some of the Senators who are very earnest on that point, and it was suggested that it would be better, as there has been but one conference, to submit the matter to another conference and see if it can not be adjusted there.

Mr. QUAY. Very well, I give way to the wishes of the chairman of the Senate conferees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I do not think it will be necessary to have a session exceeding thirty minutes, but it is very important, in my opinion, that we should have such a session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2221) for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 64, 69, and 70, agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. PENDLETON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution requesting the President to return to the House the bill (H. R. 5731) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the enrolling clerk of the House in enrolling H. R. 6248, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, to insert in section 24, after the words "ninety-six," the following, "except as in said sections otherwise specially provided"; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

Mr. SHERMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. I appeal to the Senator from Ohio to yield to me that I may ask consideration for a concurrent resolution which has just come from the House of Representatives, to correct an enrolled bill. It is important that it should be attended to at once. It will take but a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The concurrent resolution relates to the medical and surgical bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House of Representatives House bill 5731, to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. The resolution is simply to secure the return of a bill in order to correct an unfortunate error which was made by the enrolling clerk of the House of Representatives, and it is important that the resolution should pass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. BAKER. The Senator from Ohio yields to me for a moment that I may ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House bill No. 2777, relating to the donation of condemned cannon and cannon balls. I hope it may now be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2777) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls to certain posts of the Grand Army of the Republic. It proposes to donate one condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls for four pyramids to Shaw Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Leavenworth, Kans., and also one condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls for four pyramids to McLouth Post, No. 279, Grand Army of the Republic, at McLouth, Kans., for soldiers' monuments.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATIONS CONCERNING FILLED CHEESE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is known as the filled-cheese bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8008) defining cheese, and imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of filled cheese.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the status of the bill. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ALLEN responded to his name.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to have the amendment stated before the vote is taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the amendment be stated. Without objection, the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

In order to raise revenue to meet the various expenses of the Government the sum of 75 cents shall be levied and collected, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, on every barrel of lager beer, ale, and porter manufactured in the United States in addition to the tax now imposed thereon.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], but I have transferred that pair for the day to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON. On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce the fact that the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. I make the announcement for the day.

Mr. MARTIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. Being assured that he would vote "yea" if present, I vote "yea."

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I voted for the amendment, but under no circumstances could I vote for the bill even if the amendment had carried. I have not the slightest doubt but that if I should vote for the bill in any shape I would, with my convictions upon the subject, violate the Constitution which I have sworn to support. I do not understand that I can shield myself for a violation of that instrument by assuming, or even knowing, that the Supreme Court of the United States would declare the proposed act constitutional upon the ground that every member of Congress is presumed to have the proper motive and supports a measure in order to attain proper and constitutional ends.

We know that if in enacting the oleomargarine law the motives which actuated members of Congress in supporting it had been placed upon its face the enactment would have been declared unconstitutional. The coordinate branch of the Government, the judiciary, is bound to assume that Congressmen do not violate the Constitution, and that when they impose taxes it is done under the general taxing power which is given to Congress and not to use that taxing power for unconstitutional purposes or for purposes not contemplated in granting that power to the legislative department. Tariff laws are enacted in which many of the items are placed there not to raise money to support the Government, but in order to protect certain class interests, and to give an advantage by governmental partnership to the producers of certain goods in the United States, that advantage being to the detriment always of the large body of the people who are consumers. If any tariff act contained upon its face the declaration that "these taxes are imposed in order to give protection, simple and pure, to American manufacturers," I believe the Supreme Court of the United States, no matter how constituted politically, would declare it to be unconstitutional. But those laws are enacted and sent to the Supreme Court without any declaration upon their face in regard to the object, and the Supreme Court says, as it has done repeatedly:

It is our duty to assume and to presume that the Congress of the United States has enacted this law within its constitutional discretion, and for purposes which are indicated alone upon the face of the law.

Mr. President, the pending bill is not to raise revenue. This is so plain that it is simply unnecessary iteration to make the statement. The Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives in their report declared that its object is not to raise revenue. They have said in so many words that they have no idea of raising revenue, and that this is not the primary object of the enactment, but it is to bring this product within the police powers of Congress. The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who reported the bill as the organ of the Committee on Finance, declared that the object of the enactment is not to raise revenue, but to exercise the police power upon a fraudulent compound which he claims is deleterious to the health and comfort of the people of this country. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] yesterday declared that raising revenue is the smallest portion of this legislation, but that it is proposed to be done in order to take hold of this product and bring it within the police powers of Congress.

We can not escape our responsibility by saying that the Supreme Court will pass upon the law. When the law is presented to the Supreme Court they see in it a measure to raise revenue to support the Government. Does that absolve any member of this body who votes for the bill from accounting to his conscience and judgment as to why he votes for it and whether he acts within the constitutional discretion and jurisdiction of Congress?

Mr. President, the enactment of the proposed law is outrageous under the circumstances, because it takes away from the people affected by it the only redress they can have against an unconstitutional act, and that is an appeal to the Supreme Court and to the Chief Executive. The proposed law is a greater fraud than any compound which can be manufactured in any locality in this country. It is a pretense of exercising the taxing power, when, in fact, it is an exercise of police power which never has been given to Congress by the Constitution. Congress can have no police power in regard to an article made in a State, sold in a State, and never to go out of a State, unless the exercise of that power be in aid of a power clearly given by the Constitution to Congress.

I grant that Congress has the right to use the taxing power as an auxiliary to a power vested by the Constitution in Congress. If Congress sees proper to use the taxing power as an auxiliary to the interstate-commerce power conferred by the Constitution upon Congress, it can do so. If Congress sees proper to use the taxing power as an auxiliary to its absolute control over the currency of the country, it has a right to do it, as was decided in 8 Wallace in the case of Veazie Bank against Fenno. But whenever the Constitution fails to give jurisdiction to Congress over a subject-matter, it has no right to use the taxing power in order to create a power which was not originally vested in it.

The Supreme Court of the United States by this sort of fraudulent legislation is kept from giving redress to citizens of the United States who are injured by it. The Chief Executive is prevented from giving redress by using his veto power. When the oleomargarine bill was passed and sent to the President of the United States he communicated to Congress by message, and I ask the Secretary to read what he said in regard to that enactment. Let the part I have marked be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

It has been urged as an objection to this measure that, while purporting to be legislation for revenue, its real purpose is to destroy, by the use of the taxing power, one industry of our people for the protection and benefit of another.

If entitled to indulge in such a suspicion as a basis of official action in this case, and if entirely satisfied that the consequences indicated would ensue, I should doubtless feel constrained to interpose Executive dissent.

But I do not feel called upon to interpret the motives of Congress otherwise than by the apparent character of the bill which has been presented to me.

Mr. VEST. The Chief Executive, when the oleomargarine bill was presented to him, declared that if he had been satisfied that it was an exercise of the taxing power of Congress in order to discriminate against one food product in behalf of another, or if it was a disguised exercise of the police power that had not been given to Congress, he would have vetoed the bill. But the bill was sent to him, as it would go to the Supreme Court, ostensibly a naked exercise of the taxing power; and the Chief Executive, like the Supreme Court, says he is bound to assume that members of Congress have observed their oaths to support the Constitution, and are simply actuated by a desire to raise revenue to carry on the Government.

Any Senator who knows that he votes for the bill not to raise revenue, but in order to bring this food product under the inspection laws of the United States, unless he can find in the Constitution the grant of some other power to which the taxing power is necessary as an auxiliary, violates his oath to support the Constitution. Unless he can find that originally the Constitution has given to Congress a power which requires the taxing power in order to carry it out, he can not shield his conscience or his judgment behind the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States may afterwards declare the law to be constitutional. It is his primary duty to observe his obligations and not to vote for a measure that goes outside of the legislative discretion of this body. I ask attention to what was decided even by so strong a Federalist and Republican as Mr. Justice Miller in 112 United States Reports, and I will ask the Secretary to read a small portion of the decision which I have marked.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the name of the case?

Mr. VEST. The Head Tax Cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

It constitutes a fund raised from those who are engaged in the transportation of these passengers, and who make profit out of it, for the temporary care of the passengers whom they bring among us and for the protection of the citizens among whom they are landed.

If this is an expedient regulation of commerce by Congress, and the end to be attained is one falling within that power, the act is not void, because, within a loose and more extended sense than was used in the Constitution, it is called a tax. In the case of Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, 8 Wall., 533, 549, the enormous tax of 8 per cent per annum on the circulation of State banks, which was designed, and did have the effect, to drive all such circulation out of existence, was upheld because it was a means properly adopted by Congress to protect the currency which it had created, namely, the legal-tender notes and the notes of the national banks. It was not subject, therefore, to the rules which would invalidate an ordinary tax, pure and simple.

So, also, in the case of The Packet Company vs. Keokuk, 95 U. S., 80, the city of Keokuk having by ordnance imposed a wharfage fee or tax for the use of a wharf owned by the city, the amount of which was regulated by the tonnage of the vessel, this was held not to be a tonnage tax within the meaning of the constitutional provision that "No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage." The reason of this is that, though it was a burden or tax in some sense, and measured by the tonnage of the vessel, it was but a charge for services rendered, or for conveniences furnished by the city, and was not a tonnage tax within the meaning of the Constitution. This principle was reaffirmed in the case of Packet Company vs. St. Louis, 100 U. S., 423.

We are clearly of opinion that, in the exercise of its power to regulate immigration, and in the very act of exercising that power, it was competent for Congress to impose this contribution on the shipowner engaged in that business.

Mr. VEST. The last sentence read by the Secretary shows the ground upon which the Supreme Court decided that the head-tax levy was within the power of Congress; that it was auxiliary to the power of Congress to control and regulate immigration, which is a species of commerce with foreign nations. Mr. Justice Miller, strong Federalist that he was, never would have decided that, without being an auxiliary power, the tax was constitutional. It was simply to assist and make perfect the exercise of a power granted by the Constitution to Congress that caused him to declare the head tax to be within the jurisdiction of Congress; and in an unbroken series of decisions, which any Senator who is interested in the question may examine, the Supreme Court has drawn the line distinctly and emphatically between the power of the Congress of the United States and of the States in regard to all police matters. Some of the decisions are the Passenger Cases, in 7 Howard, 590; Henderson vs. The Mayor of New York, 92 U. S., 259; The Commissioner of Immigration vs. The North German Lloyd, 92 U. S.; The People vs. The Compagnie Générale Trans-Atlantique, 107 U. S.; Chy Lung vs. Freeman, 92 U. S., 275; Brimmer vs. Redman, 138 U. S., 78; Voight vs. Wright, 142 U. S., 62; and Crutcher vs. Kentucky, 141 U. S., 46.

Mr. GRAY. May I interrupt the Senator from Missouri for a moment?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. It is not to ask a question, but to emphasize what the Senator has just said in regard to the head-tax cases. That was an assertion of power by Congress to deal with immigration from foreign countries into this country. It could have no relation to any other subject-matter than foreign commerce in passengers. The court decided that the passenger traffic was a portion of the foreign commerce of the country. They had to decide that first before they could assent to the jurisdiction which Congress claimed, and it being a part of the foreign commerce of the country, there was no suggestion even that it touched in the slightest degree any transaction entirely within a State or affected or impinged in any fashion whatever upon the police power of any State in the Union, especially of the State where the landing was made. So there was a case plainly, palpably within the jurisdiction of Congress under the grant of the commerce clause of the Constitution, and it was in reference to that transaction that Congress was exercising its power.

Mr. MILLS. That the exercise of the taxing power was an appropriate exercise of the power to regulate commerce.

Mr. GRAY. We were taxing foreign-commerce transactions.

Mr. VEST. I challenge any advocate of the bill to find a single decision by the Supreme Court of the United States which says that the taxing power can be used in regard to a function which is not given directly or by implication to carry out an expressly granted power in the Constitution. In other words, I challenge any advocate of the bill to show where the Supreme Court has ever said that Congress could use the taxing power in order to bring a product under the police power of Congress.

Mr. GRAY. And to create a jurisdiction.

Mr. VEST. And to create a jurisdiction which the Constitution had never given to Congress.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. If the trade in filled cheese is a matter of interstate commerce, can not the Congress of the United States pass such inspection laws and provide such funds to carry into execution those inspection laws as it may deem necessary?

Mr. VEST. Unquestionably.

Mr. CAFFERY. Then I would ask the Senator, if the bill were so amended as to make the provisions of it applicable only to filled cheese exported from the State or Territory where made, whether then his constitutional objection would be obviated?

Mr. VEST. Entirely; and I have an amendment prepared which I propose to make. I will not use the word "make," but I will ask the Senate, every individual member of it, to place himself upon record as to the very proposition indicated by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. CAFFERY. Then I will ask the Senator a further question, if he will pardon me. In a vote given by a Senator who has any constitutional objections to the bill as it appears upon its face, being a police regulation, would a vote given primarily with a view of obtaining revenue and not with a view of policing filled cheese be in accord with his constitutional conscience?

Mr. VEST. If any Senator says that the bill is for the purpose of raising revenue and not to bring this food product under a police jurisdiction of Congress, then of course he can justify himself from that standpoint. But how is it possible for him to do that when the framers and makers and advocates of the proposed law say they do not want revenue, but they want to prevent the sale and use of a fraudulent deleterious compound? How is it possible that any Senator can come to the conclusion that this is a revenue measure when the committees which report it, the Senators and Representatives who advocate it, all deny that it is intended to raise one dollar of revenue?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to make a statement which I believe is true historically. There never was a tariff bill passed since the Government of the United States was founded where, in addition to raising revenue, it was not alleged and the statute was not so framed as to promote some private interest. Jefferson and Madison and every one of the old Democratic Presidents advocated that in framing a tax law due regard must be had to promoting the manufacturing and other interests of the United States. That was the established doctrine.

Now, I say here that this is not the main purpose of the bill. I might say, probably, it is to prevent a fraud. But it imposes a tax, which we have a right to impose. The President of the United States, in a single remark that was read this morning, said that if the object is attained he will not veto a bill merely because some other motive or some motive that he did not approve might actuate the making of the law. That is the same case now. This bill, if enacted into a law, will yield, as near as I can gather from the reports that I have read, probably half a million dollars of revenue. It was supposed the oleomargarine law would yield $1,000,000, and it has yielded $3,000,000.

Mr. GRAY. A million and a half.

Mr. SHERMAN. Two and a half million or three million dollars.

Mr. VEST. A million and three-quarters is the highest revenue that was ever raised from it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I could take issue on that point, but I do not want to debate the matter.

Mr. VEST. One million and three-quarters is the report of the Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. In every tariff law the question of benefits to the people in some other way than the mere fact of taxation has always been urged by every party that has ever governed in this country.

Mr. VEST. A tariff law is supported upon two grounds: First, that it is a regulation of foreign commerce, which is clearly within the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress; second, that it is the exercise of the taxing power to raise revenue to support the Government. A tariff enactment can be supported upon either of these clauses of the Constitution; but if a tariff law should be enacted which said the express purpose of this act is to protect American manufactures, the Supreme Court of the United States, in my judgment, no matter how constituted, would declare it to be unconstitutional. It is true that the advocates of tariff laws say the indirect and necessary effect of the imposition of the tax is to protect, but that is not the primary object of the law.

Is that this case? Here the primary object is to bring this food product under the police regulation of Congress, and not to raise revenue. The evidence before the House committee shows that if this tax should stand as the bill came to us from the House it would not raise one dollar; that it would be absolutely prohibitory.

Mr. President, if I believed about the Constitution as the Republican party and the Senator from Ohio, I would have no trouble in voting for this bill or any other measure. If I believed in the teachings of Mr. Hamilton, that under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution Congress can do anything, and that this clause overrides the special grants of power which are made in that instrument, I would have no difficulty in voting for any proposed legislation, because whenever Congress thought it expedient and necessary for the general welfare they could pass any law within their discretion, and they would have full jurisdiction under that construction of the Constitution to do so. But how any Democrat who professes to believe in the teachings of Jefferson, the great opponent of Hamilton, who left Washington's Cabinet because he refused to accede to the proposition contained in Hamilton's report upon manufactures, who handed his portfolio to Washington because he said he would not remain in the Cabinet when the Secretary of the Treasury had announced a doctrine that made this a Government of unlimited Congressional power—how any Democrat professing to believe in Jefferson's teachings can vote for the pending bill is beyond my comprehension.

The bill is not a revenue measure. Like the oleomargarine law, it is intended to discriminate against a food product. Here is a mass of testimony coming from the cheese manufacturers of the United States in which every one of them declares, "We want this commerce stopped; we want this manufacture stopped, because it interferes with our business." They are not politicians. They are men engaged in making money exclusively; and they come and, without reference to the Constitution, declare, "We want this law because it puts money into our pockets and prevents competition." I know the oleomargarine law brings a revenue of a million and three-quarters of dollars. But that was not the intention of the men who framed it. The argument that was made when the oleomargarine law was before us was that it was intended to prevent the sale of a deleterious compound to the people of this country.

Mr. HARRIS. The oleomargarine law was referred to the Committee on Agriculture against a motion to refer it to the Committee on Finance because it was not a revenue measure.

Mr. VEST. Of course, it was sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry because it was not a revenue measure.

Mr. MILLS. It was referred to the Committee on Agriculture in the other House.

Mr. VEST. In the House it came from the Committee on Agriculture. I have here the testimony of my distinguished former colleague and fellow-citizen, Col. William H. Hatch, who was the author of the oleomargarine law, and who is now president of the Dairy Association of the United States, and who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee and made an argument in behalf of this filled-cheese bill, in which he says it is a deleterious compound. He appeals to Congress to stop its sale altogether in this capital. He tells Congressmen: "You are putting into your stomachs down in these restaurants filled cheese and oleomargarine without knowing it; and the poor innocent creatures must be protected or else dyspepsia will come upon the National Legislative Assembly."

Now, Mr. President, if this is a deleterious compound, what must be thought of the legislator who deliberately bargains away the health and comfort of the people of the United States in order to secure a paltry tax for the Treasury? What must be thought of the man who will vote for a law that he knows is protecting and licensing a manufacture injurious to the health of the people of the United States and destructive of their lives?

I ask the Secretary to read what Colonel Hatch says, in order that there may be no mistake and that I may not do him injustice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. CRISP. Is there anything deleterious to health in this filled cheese?

Mr. HATCH. I am very glad, Mr. Speaker—I have been so in the habit of addressing you that way, the chairman will pardon me for addressing you so, but I will say the gentleman from Georgia——

The CHAIRMAN. It is a natural mistake, and I make it myself very often.

Mr. HATCH. I will say for myself I have not a doubt on earth. I have studied this question for twenty-five years, more or less, but in the last twelve years it has been my duty to study it, and I have heard a great deal from physicians, chemists, and experts, and that it is deleterious to health I have not a doubt in the world. A great many claim that oleomargarine, or filled cheese, has nothing in it deleterious to health, but I base my answer to that question upon this one single point. I have stated repeatedly since I first studied this question that the admixture of skimmed milk and cotton-seed oil in the manufacture of oleomargarine contained nothing that was deleterious to health. Cotton-seed oil is a vegetable oil and is absolutely digestible raw. We may have our own question about the taste, but as a raw product it is as digestible as olive oil is, but no oil extracted from an animal uncooked was ever digestible, and things not digestible are deleterious to health.

You take the leaf of the hog, which makes the best lard in the world, when it is boiled for hours, and the lard is digestible, and tallow when it is roasted or thoroughly cooked is digestible, but in the raw state not one of them are, and if the leaf lard of the hog, which can only be detected by the keenest analysis and microscopic examination, happens to have in it the germs of trichina, as they are right along in that part of the hog—the tenderloin is more affected by trichina than any other portion of the hog's carcass—if it has trichina in it at all or is tainted with it, cooking by the process of rendering it into lard destroys it, but the heat of 130° or 140° has no effect upon it at all, and when they press that oil out and it goes into this product which is absolutely uncooked, it is subject to putrefaction, and in that way becomes deleterious to health; but I have stated time and again that in all these manufactures of vegetable oil that the skimmed milk that is in them is the only portion of that compound that is not deleterious to health.

Now, I do not believe, as a matter of fact, that cheese thoroughly cooked would be deleterious to health, or oleomargarine used in the frying pan is deleterious to health, but used as butter there is not one man out of ten thousand who has a good stomach who can stand it three times a day right along, and the growing impression is among chemists and the best physicians in the United States and in the world that a large class of diseases, especially stomach troubles, are due to these compounds that are used as butter and cheese.

Now, we will file with you, Mr. Chairman, before this investigation closes, a statement delivered at this convention by Professor Henry, of Wisconsin, to show that the export of cheese from the United States has been dwindling in proportion to the increase in the manufacture of this filled cheese, until to-day in the best cheese-consuming markets of the world, England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, our brands of Ohio, New York, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Illinois cheese have been so destroyed by this filled cheese that has gone out until our trade in it has been almost destroyed. Now, the bills which are before you need no argument to sustain them as far as their constitutionality is concerned, and what their beneficent operation will be if enacted into law, because they are both founded and follow closely the lines of the oleomargarine act.

Mr. TAWNEY. That act has been held constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. HATCH. Repeatedly; by all the courts in all the States where it has been tested it has been upheld and sustained. By the last opinion by the Supreme Court of the United States in a decision delivered by Mr. Justice Harlan, and it is a tribute to that act which every member of Congress who voted for it and every farmer in the United States——

Mr. TAWNEY. Can you give me the title of that case?

Mr. HEWES. It is Plumley vs. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Mr. TAWNEY. Have you got a memorandum of the volume?

Mr. HEWES. I think it is 156 United States.

Mr. HATCH. I want to say this much for the operation of that act. I stated on the floor of the House during its consideration and before it passed that in my judgment the passage of that law would have the most beneficial effect in this, that it would not only compel the sale of it where the law was enforced under its own name and upon its own merits, but it would do more to protect the consumers of oleomargarine throughout the United States than it would the producers of butter, and time has vindicated my statements in regard to it. At the time that oleomargarine bill passed, in 1886, there were almost numberless manufacturers of oleomargarine scattered throughout the United States. In fact, wherever there was a dead-animal factory or fourth-class slaughterhouse there was an oleomargarine factory, but to-day there are in existence, as reported, only 24 manufacturers' licenses of oleomargarine and butterine in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. How does the quantity compare now with what it was then?

Mr. HATCH. The quantity has gradually increased. The output gradually increased. Of course we knew nothing about what was manufactured before 1886, but within the last three or four years the product has been increasing, and it fell into the hands of a few large and reputable manufacturers, who have complied strictly with the law; and not one single manufactory, as I understand, has yet been punished for violation of law, and I do not know of any wholesale dealer who has. Am I correct in that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed for a few minutes with the cheese bill. I do not think there will be any further debate on the bill. Unless Senators express a desire to debate it further I hope it will be proceeded with for a little while.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MILLS and Mr. GRAY. What is the request?

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the cheese bill for ten or fifteen minutes. I hope Senators will see their way clear to the adoption of this course.

Mr. MILLS. We can not hear the Senator on this side.

Mr. HARRIS. I object to the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I give notice, then, that as soon as the pending order of business is over I shall try to call up the cheese bill again.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit an amendment to the cheese bill, which I ask may be read, printed, and lie over.

The amendment was read, and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Amend the bill by adding the following as an additional section:

"SEC. 20. That a tax of 1 cent per pound be levied, assessed, and collected on cheese made in the United States for sale, or that is sold in the markets by any dealer, and said tax shall be in addition to the tax on filled cheese imposed by this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish suitable regulations for the collection of the said tax, in accordance with the provisions of this act."

Mr. STEWART. I give notice of an amendment which I intend to propose to what is called the filled-cheese bill. I propose to add to the bill the following:

That on and after the 1st day of August, 1896, there shall be levied, collected, and paid 10 cents a pound upon all wools imported into the United States from any foreign country.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon subsequently said: I desire to give notice that when what is called the filled-cheese bill again comes up I shall offer as an amendment what I send to the desk. I ask that the proposed amendment be printed in the RECORD and also printed in regular form as an amendment. I will state in this connection that the amendment I offer is the tariff bill which was passed by the House of Representatives at the present session, without any change whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be printed in the RECORD and also printed as a document, in the absence of objection.

The amendment is to add to the bill the following as additional sections:

SEC. —. That from and after the passage of this act, and until August 1, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all imported wools of classes 1 and 2, as defined in the act hereinafter cited, approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, and on all hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, except as hereinafter provided, and on all noils, shoddy, garnetted waste, top waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, and all other wastes composed wholly or in part of wool, and on woolen rags, mungo, and flocks, a duty equivalent to 60 per cent of the duty imposed on each of such articles by an act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations of said act; and on all wools and Russian camel's hair of class 3, as defined in said act approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the several duties provided by such act approved October 1, 1890. And paragragh 279 of Schedule K, and also paragraph 685 in the free list of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 27, 1894, are hereby suspended until August 1, 1898.

SEC. —. That from and after the passage of this act, and until August 1, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all imported articles made in whole or in part of wool, worsted, or other materials described in section 1 of this act, except as hereinafter provided, 60 per cent of the specific pound or square-yard duty imposed on each of such articles by an act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, in addition to the ad valorem duty now imposed on each of such articles by an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 27, 1894; and on carpets, druggets, buckings, mats, rugs, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, art squares, and other portions of carpets or carpeting, made in whole or in part of wool, the specific square-yard duty imposed on each of such articles by said act approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, in addition to the ad valorem duty imposed on such articles by said act which became a law August 27, 1894.

SEC. —. That from and after the passage of this act, and until August 1, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all imported lumber and other articles designated in paragraphs 674 to 683, inclusive, of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 27, 1894, a duty equivalent to 60 per cent of the duty imposed on each of such articles by an act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations of said last-named act; but pulp wood shall be classed as round unmanufactured timber, exempt from duty: Provided, That in case any foreign country shall impose an export duty upon pine, spruce, elm, or other logs, or upon stave bolts, shingle wood, pulp wood, or heading blocks exported to the United States from such country, then the duty upon the lumber and other articles mentioned in said paragraphs 674 to 683, inclusive, when imported from such country, shall be the same as fixed by the law in force prior to October 1, 1890.

SEC. —. LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives in relation to the enrollment of the legislative, etc., appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the enrolling clerk of the House, in enrolling H. R. 6248, an act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to insert in section 24, after the words "ninety-six," the following: "except as in said sections otherwise specially provided."

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the resolution be concurred in.

Mr. HARRIS. Is that an omission in the enrollment of the bill in the House of Representatives?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir; it is a mistake by which the wrong date is inserted in one section of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3282) to repeal section 61 of an act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which became a law August 28, 1894; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REGULATION OF BOND ISSUES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I fully agree with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] that this is a most important bill. No two lines of type ever transferred to paper any proposition that means so much as this plain, simple declaration. It puts a very sharp edge upon a great question that had become exceedingly dull. It is the diamond point in the end of the drill. It defines and accentuates an issue that may be settled at the coming November election, or it may not be, but which must be settled before financial and commercial peace can come to the institutions and people of this country.

Let us see what it says, and then let us say what it means:

That the issuance of interest-bearing bonds of the United States for any purpose whatever without further authority of Congress is hereby prohibited.

Here is a straightforward proclamation against one-man power and in favor of paramount legislative authority. If it goes down and the principle it avows is overthrown, then the Empire is established. If it is sustained, there is yet hope for the Republic. The temporary embarrassment of a government, as our Government is temporarily embarrassed in consequence of the un-American tariff and an unfortunate Treasury policy, the fruit of a vicious financial system, is of small consideration when compared with the permanent evil that would result from a solemn declaration by this or any other Congress in favor of the supremacy of executive over legislative power. If in the past the lawmaking branch of the Government has made the mistake of yielding any of its functions to the man in the White House, it is not too late to correct the error. It is a question so full of seriousness as to completely overshadow the aims and purposes of political parties. It is greater than the gathering of political conventions or the interests of party candidates, because it affects the welfare of the whole people.

It is to this controversy what the Missouri compromise was to the great question of slavery. When Mr. Lincoln said, in 1858, that this country could not remain permanently half slave and half free, he summed up in a few words a situation concerning which there was far less light and less general knowledge among the common people than there is upon the financial question of to-day. The great American commoner knew that slavery was inherently wrong, just as millions of people at this time know that bond contracts and bond issues, with peace prevailing everywhere, are inherently wrong. His remedy primarily was to simply check the spread of slavery. He did not at any time during his great debate with Mr. Douglas go to the extent of advising the total abolition of slavery.

The purpose of this bill suggests the thought that must have been in Mr. Lincoln's mind when he opposed the extension of slavery to Kansas and Nebraska. It proposes a check, but not a total prohibition of bond issues. The power to provide revenue and the control of our monetary affairs would continue to reside in the Congress. We can not succeed nor hope to succeed in doing justice to all classes of our people if we leave the "endless chain" machinery of the Treasury Department in the hands of a single individual, to be automatically and autocratically manipulated and put into motion at his own sweet will. Far better that Congress should remain permanently in session and take the responsibility..

No doubt some Senators will ask how the danger may be averted and the remedy applied. The answer to that, I think, will be found in a suggestion made in this Chamber within a week.

The Senator from Ohio, in a burst of patriotism the other day, proposed a duty upon certain articles of import in order to raise necessary revenue and avoid future Treasury deficits. I believe a majority in both branches of Congress would acquiesce in such a proposition. The question need not be discussed at length. An hour's reckoning will tell us what amount of duty should be placed upon tea and coffee and how much of a tax upon beer to bring sufficient money to the Treasury to carry on the Government. A duty upon tea and coffee has never been considered good Republican party policy, but the Senator from Ohio said he was ready to recommend it, and did recommend it, under the present emergency. I am willing to follow the distinguished Republican leader in support of such a policy in behalf of present necessities, and I have no doubt others on this side of the Chamber will do likewise.

I believe it was on Friday last that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] in words and tones which indicated his deep anxiety in behalf of some kind of relief declared that he was ready to vote for a moderate duty upon raw wool. The party to which that distinguished Senator belongs has heretofore been intensely hostile to this kind of tariff duties. Thus we see party isms disappearing under the shadow of a situation which arouses the consciences and stirs the patriotic impulses of all fair-minded men.

Bond issues afford but temporary relief, while they breed distrust in the minds of honest business men and bring unrest to the breasts of a peace-loving people. They invite new raids upon the redemption fund, cause the withdrawal of capital from the channels of legitimate trade, and place the stamp of respectability upon gambling. They destroy confidence in every avenue of trade and aggravate a situation and intensify a condition that has been brought upon an unfortunate people through unwise legislation. The time to enact some measure of relief and stop plunging the country further and further into debt is now. No individual debtor can long maintain his credit by borrowing. No Government can do it. The end of credit must come sooner or later. I believe it is near at hand with us. Our debt already exceeds the assessed value of all kinds of property in this country. What must be the ultimate result of our present policy of running into debt?

I suggest to the Senator from Ohio and to the Committee on Finance that we take the emergency tariff bill from the Calendar, substitute therefor a bill carrying a duty upon tea and coffee and an additional tax upon beer, and return the measure to the House. The emergency tariff bill can not become a law. This has been demonstrated repeatedly in this chamber, and if it should pass no one believes that the President would sign it. A measure such as I have just suggested, following the lead of the Senator from Ohio, must surely meet with Executive approval, and if it did not, I believe there is enough patriotism and enough nonpartisan statesmanship in Congress to put it upon the statute books, the veto to the contrary notwithstanding. If we fail to do this another bond issue will follow within a month after the adjournment of Congress, and possibly another before the next session begins. In this event the country will believe that this Congress is open to the suspicion of being in league with the bond syndicate.

We should cease this skirmishing for party advantage, put an assessment upon the consumers of a few articles of everyday use, though not of everyday necessity, suspend forever the power of the Executive to further pile up the burden of debt, and then go home to a grateful constituency.

Mr. GALLINGER obtained the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska. I understand he does not propose to occupy much time. Am I correct?

Mr. ALLEN. I will take just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate but a moment. During the discussion of this measure last week the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] read a circular letter, issued by the American Bankers' Association, dated March 23, 1896. That letter was regarded by him and is regarded by others, I think, as of very great importance; but in view of the fact that the honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and one or two other Senators seemed to think that there was nothing strange or unusual in the letter, I think it is perfectly proper for me at this time to make known the fact that at least one of the great labor organizations of the United States has thought it of sufficient importance to issue an official order to their membership, calling attention to the conspiracy of these bankers. I send to the desk and ask to have read a circular issued a few days ago by the Knights of Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
ORDER OF KNIGHTS OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., May 23, 1896.

To the Order of the Knights of Labor, greeting:

In the United States Senate, on Friday, May 22, there was exposed by Senator BUTLER of North Carolina one of the most dangerous and far-reaching conspiracies ever concocted against the welfare of this Republic.

The following official circular, issued and signed by the executive council, president, and secretary of the American Bankers' Association, on March 23, 1896, and now for the first time exposed to the public, contains in its first paragraph an unexpected warning to the people of the United States of what is in store for them unless something can be done to checkmate this plot of the Bankers' Association. It is the low growl of the tiger in his Wall street lair. Read it and be warned:

THE AMERICAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION,
2 WALL STREET AND 90-94 BROADWAY,
New York, March 23, 1896.

[President, Eugene H. Pullen, vice-president National Bank of the Republic, New York; first vice-president, Robert J. Lowry, Lowry Banking Company, Atlanta, Ga.; chairman executive council, Joseph C. Hendrix, president National Union Bank, New York; treasurer, William H. Porter, vice-president Chase National Bank, New York; secretary, James R. Branch, 2 Wall street, New York.]

To the Bankers of the United States:

At a meeting of the executive council of the American Bankers' Association, held in this city on March 11, 1896, the following declaration was made by unanimous vote:

THE EXISTING STANDARD OF VALUE.

"The executive council of the American Bankers' Association declare unequivocally in favor of the maintenance of the existing gold standard of value, and recommend to all bankers and to the customers of all banks the exercise of all their influence as citizens in their various States to select delegates to the political conventions of both the great parties who will declare unequivocally in favor of the maintenance of the existing gold standard of value."

Your influence is earnestly requested to give practical effect to this action.

EUGENE H. PULLEN, President.
JAMES R. BRANCH, Secretary.
JOSEPH C. HENDRIX,
Chairman Executive Council.

We have here reprinted this exposure of the bankers' conspiracy, in order that the members of the Knights of Labor and the wealth producers of the country may be prepared in time to take prompt and decisive action to defend themselves from the evil consequences that are sure to follow if this scheme of the bankers to fasten their gold standard-millionaire-and-pauper-producing-system upon the people of America, is successful.

This secret circular was issued over two months ago. Has it ever been published in the press of the land? Has it ever been referred to by the bankers or their attorneys, many of whom occupy seats in the United States Senate? They all knew of its existence, but for two months they have preserved the most profound silence, and even when Senator BUTLER sent it to the Clerk's desk in the Senate and had it read they either professed utter ignorance or kept silence regarding this criminal conspiracy.

The people can not longer delay action with safety.
